FIREMEN'S BALL.

The eleventh annual concert and ball of the Three Ones and a Two, was held in Town Hall, Fast eve. The concert, which comprised the following programme, was rendered by the Eighth Regiment Band:

1. Overture, "Dawn to Twilight," Bennett
2. Cornet Duet, "Lover's Farewell," Ascher
3. Polka, "Comique," Casey
4. Selections, from the Opera, "Orpheus," Offenbach
5. Piccolo Solo, "Caprice," Damm
6. Selection, "A Night in New York," Brooks
7. Skirt Dance, "Faust up to Date," Luiz
8. Finale, "Through fire and Smoke," Reinwald

R. L. Reinwald, Conductor.
Soon after 9 o'clock, the gong sounded for the grand march, and 119 couples filed around the hall, led by ex-Chief Engineer J. H. Tibbets, after which the dancing commenced in earnest. There were 24 numbers on the order, beside the round dances which were liberally interspersed. Supper was served at 12 o'clock by W. J. Bond of Lynn. The menu was as follows:

Roast Young Turkey stuffed, jelly, mashed potato; Chicken, cream sauce, rolls and butter; Cold Boiled Reed's Ham, Smoked Tongue; Escalloped Oysters, Oyster Pie, Parker House style; chicken croquettes, cream sauce; Chicken Salad, Lobster Salad; strawberry, vanilla, chocolate Ice Cream, Harlequin style; Frozen Pudding, Pineapple Sherbet, Orange Ice, Lemon Ice; Pound Cake, Jelly Roll, Lady Cake, Citron Cake, Lady Fingers, Raisin Cake; Fruit, Coffee, Tea.

The party was not characterized by brilliant display of dress, although some very pretty and becoming ladies' costumes were noticeable. The object was rather to make everybody feel at home and enjoy a good time. The party broke up at 5 o'clock. The ball was under the following management: Floor director, Chief Engineer S. S. Littlefield; Assistant floor director, Assistant Engineer J. H. Tibbets; Aids, J. A. Perkins, H. J. Foan, H. G. Robbins, N. E. DeNott, F. Cassidy, J. W. Carlow, of Steamers Nos. 1 and 2; I. A. Cowdrey, L. F. Wallace, J. N. Ferren, W. W. Doughty, H. Wilkinson, F. Wilkinson, of Hose 1; C. A. Lawrence, J. Cook, Wm. J. McGrath, W. H. O'Connor, W. F. Duffy, W. J. McDonald, of Hook and Ladder 1.

Committee of arrangements, Wm. H. Joll, A. Dodge, J. A. Perkins, of Steamers Nos. 1 and 2; F. B. Thomas, Wm. B. Flannigan, G. A. Lawrence, of Hose 1; T. F. Murray, W. P. Hills, G. H. Carr, of Hook and Ladder 1. Reception committee, F. G. Clough, H. N. Bolt, C. A. Littlefield, of Steamers Nos. 1 and 2; A. C. Wing, G. B. Pratt, C. McCarthy, of Hose 1; T. F. Murray, A. A. Carleton, R. C. Richardson, of Hook and Ladder 1.

ADJOURNED TOWN MEETING.

The adjourned town meeting was called to order Tuesday evening, at 7.30 o'clock in the small Town Hall. A small number was in attendance, the hall being only about half filled. The first matter taken up was the article relating to locating a drinking fountain in Lynnfield street. It was not urged by anybody particularly interested, and a motion to indefinitely postpone was carried.

Article 23, relating to the extension of wa e mains on Mt. Pleasant was next discussed. George M. Foster appeared in favor of the project, and moved an appropriation of $3000 to lay a 6 inch main, the distance being stated as 1200 feet, and a 4 inch pipe for a distance of 3300 feet. He stated the probable income as $115, over 3 per cent. A motion was made to refer the matter to the Water Board, to report at the next annual town meeting, but the motion was lost. D. S. Littlefield stated that the appropriation would be sufficient on account of the amount of ledge to be encountered and also that there would not be sufficient to furnish water above the first story of the houses. S. F. Blaney opposed a 4 inch main. Several gentlemen including Rufus Brown, C. Warren Osborne and Samuel Trask favored a reference of the matter of the Water Board to be reported on at the adjourned meeting, and a motion to that effect was carried.

It was voted to refer the matter of increasing accommodations at the High School, to a committee to report at the next adjournment.

It was voted to abolish the general sickling fund.

A vote accepting the report of the committee, to appropriate $700 for the construction of Oakland St., and $500 for widening Lynnfield St., was passed.

The meeting adjourned at 8.40 o'clock, until Tuesday evening, April 14. The following committees were appointed: On steam stone crusher and road roller, C. C. Pike, Warren Shaw, N. M. Quint, H. A. Besse, A. N. Jacobs; on telemeter and new water works pump, Franklin Osborn, George H. Little, G. J. Winchester, S. S. Littlefield, Leverett Poor; on high school house, Caleb F. Winchester, H. F. Walker, Amos Merrill, Samuel Trask, T. J. Relihan, Alexander B. Merrill, Thomas Carroll.

Two boys engaged in a quarrel in the pastures near the head of Pierpont street, Wednesday, when one drew a revolver and shot the other. The wounded boy was taken to the Salem Hospital where he is recovering. The assailant will answer the charge of dangerous assault in court.

An alarm of fire from box 25 was rung in on Monday evening at 7.20 o'clock, caused by a blaze in the barn in rear of the dwelling house of Michael Brett, on Aborn street. The fire was started by the explosion of a kerosene lamp used to heat an incubator, in which were 150 eggs about ready to hatch. The fire burned out the interior of the barn, burned a dog, some fowls and did some other light damage. The department responded quickly, Hose 1 being the first on the spot, and the progress of the flames was checked.

The Y. W. C. T. U. are to hold an entertainment and maple sugar party April 13, in Franklin Hall. Look for an account of the entertainment next week. After the entertainment, each person will be given a dish of hot maple syrup, to be stirred down and eaten hot, or to be made into "snow caps" on ice. Doughnuts and pickles will be furnished with the sugar, and they hope to have a good old fashioned sugaring off party, such as the young people who live among the maple sugar trees and snow, have at this time of each year. Tickets are being sold by children of the Loyal Legion. Buy one when they ask you, then go, taste and see if the sugar is not good. The Y. Union wants to raise money to carry on the same special work among the children of this town, which will be announced later, also to assist the new Union in the State in securing new headquarters, in Boston for our State officers, and to have them ready before the National Convention, to be held there November next.

SALEM AND BEVERLY.

Daniel Fitzgerald and another boy were walking up Central street one day this week, when a revolver, carried by Fitzgerald, was accidentally discharged and a 22 caliber ball passed through the palm of his hand. J. A. Trask's team, which was passing the boys at the time of the accident, carried the wounded lad to a physician.

At St. Paul's Episcopal church Sunday large-sized congregations were present at all the services. The chancel arch was heaped with flowers and potted plants in profusion adorned the interior of the pretty little church. The Easter offering amounted to $130.76. At the afternoon service for children prizes were awarded for the best recitations of the catechism.

The three act comedy, "Mrs. Walthrop's Bachelors," will be presented by the dramatic talent of the Unity Club, Friday evening, the 10th instant. It is one of the best plays ever given by the club, and includes the following casts: F. W. Bushby, C. P. Bancroft, F. E. Hobart, S. B. Mansfield, A. L. Pattee, C. Kimball, M. A. Forness, K. E. Wiley, M. Taylor and C. M. Wilson.

The Sabbath school of the South church held an Easter concert Sunday evening. The Sunday school choir, led by Nathan Poor, gave very fine selections of music appropriate to the occasion, and the younger children gave pleasing recitations. Interesting remarks were made by two former teachers of the school, Charles A. Haskell of Newton and Henry Frye of New York. The display of flowers in the church was very beautiful.

The thousands of cures of scrofula, salt rheum, etc., by Hood's Sarsaparilla constitute absolutely conclusive evidence of its superior merit as a blood purifier. Be sure to get Hood's.

CHAPTER I.
HOW THEY MET.

Near the foot of these trees lay a woman in a faint.

Across from a field, far to the right of the dusty road, came the sound of a shout. The air, quivering with summer heat, seemed reluctant to carry it. Everything had been so still before that the faint murmurs of insect life and the chattering and barking of the red squirrels in the stone walls had seemed like disturbances, and the stillness, like a sentient being, had merely moved a little to make room for an annoyance, settling down again after each small noise like a tired sleeper. Then the shout came, flying straight and swiftly, across the meadows and fell plump in the dust. Then all was still again. Not even a bird chirped.

Young Fanning moved uneasily in his sleep. He was lying on the grass in the shade of a huge elm, waiting for the cooler part of the day before rambling further on the purposeless stroll he had undertaken. The sudden noise, faint as it was, broke his deep slumber and set him dreaming. The dream awoke him.

Another shout followed the first, and as if nature had been roused from a slumber like his own the air stirred more readily—the sound came less like a rifle bullet. It was more prolonged than the first, and there was an accent to it sufficient to bring young Fanning to his feet. Some one was calling for help.

He listened a moment, but the air was still again. It was a stillness that, like Egypt's darkness, could be felt. Raising his voice, he sent out a mighty cry that shattered the repose. A little breeze stirred. A bird called back with a little carol. A crow cawed lazily from his perch somewhere in the woods. Fanning waited, listening keenly. There was a brief delay. Then the third call came, fainter and yet plainer than the others. A woman was calling and her voice was throbbing with pain.

Fanning was bored. He had left his chambers in the city for a lazy tour on foot, feeling that work was out of the question by reason of the heat, and here on the first day he was called on to rescue an unknown woman from unknown trouble. He felt that it was an imposition, but could not see his way clear to ignore the demand, being very human.

Tightening his belt, he sprang lightly over the low stone wall and ran across the fields directly toward the spot where the woman lay. It was rough ground, and he ran very swiftly, but his breath was easy and measured, his head was erect and his chest well out. He was a rather small man, but his spare frame was all bone and muscle, and every muscle was well developed.

A quarter of a mile of this easy running brought him to a little grove. It was a neglected place. The undergrowth was rank and tangled. Briery shoots were interlaced like a network without order or design. Weeds choked the better capabilities of the soil. Saplings that cumbered space drained the vitality of worthier trees, and none were thrifty excepting a few old ones that were strong enough to hold their own and that looked down with lofty contempt at the brush beneath. It was a world in little.

Near the foot of these trees, as Fanning saw, drawing near, lay a woman in a faint. The man looked, in a disgust that was almost unnatural, and his first word was a malediction. Then he sighed and mopped his face with a handkerchief that was at once wet through. Then his face took on a professional look, and he muttered to himself, "Lucky I have taken my degree. There might be a scandal about this."

Then the woman became the patient, and the man, equally unconscious of the change, became the physician. Sex was eliminated from the problem suggested by the situation. Like any other verity, however, it failed to remain eliminated. But that was afterward. He looked keenly, and seeing that he had a swoon to treat first, he deftly and quickly loosened her dress at the neck, and lifting her a little with his left hand, cut the laces of her corset, slashing through the dress with his penknife, unhesitatingly. Then with his strong, nimble fingers he tore the gap wider and loosened the string. Laying her back on the ground he fanned her with his hat.

"Naturally in such a case," he grumbled to himself, "there is no water at hand."

Luckily, however, the swoon was not deep, and she sat up presently, looking at him with a question in her eyes that disappeared almost instantly. Pain chased it away.

"Take a swallow of this," he said, producing a pocket flask. She obeyed, and the raw whisky made her cough. She looked reproachfully at him.

"That is all right," he said reassuringly. "Now tell me how you are hurt."

"I slipped and wrenched my foot, and when I tried to walk I fainted. I fancy a bone is broken."

"Which foot?"

"The left." With the word came an involuntary movement and a sharp cry as the spasm of pain followed.

"Don't move it," he said hastily, and in a matter of fact way he raised her skirt and looked. Feeling, not seeing, her surprise, for his eyes did not wander to her face, he said simply, "I am a physician."

Then, though he was too busy to know it, sex asserted itself, and if he had looked at her face instead of her foot he would have seen a pretty picture, most interesting to a philosopher, though perhaps not to one of his school, he being profoundly materialistic.

Margaret Latimer was incapable of the petty trivialities of protest that a weak woman would have made. It did not occur to her to make an outcry and affect squeamishness, but her eyes flashed fire. Fanning, had he seen her face, must have humbled himself in abject apology, brusque and harsh as he was, but fortunately he was entirely ignorant of her indignation, and took the swollen ankle in his hand without the slightest hesitation.

To her it was as if the ground had opened under her. To be touched and gazed at in this fashion was simply incomprehensible. Her face, that was marble a moment before, became suddenly like a damask rose. Her eye told her that Fanning was a gentleman, and his touch proved that he was truthful in claiming to be a physician, but—

The ready penknife was cutting away the substantial boot. When that was off it passed steadily and swiftly around above the ankle, and with one downward sweep destroyed the stocking. Then came again the most excruciating pains as his skillful fingers pressed gently here and there.

Physicians say there is an order of high intelligence which belongs to a portion of the human race and which makes most difficult patients. Even sickness and pain fail to subdue it, and one gifted with it is as recalcitrant under treatment as a lawyer's client who has a smattering of legal knowledge. He will oppose theories, question methods and even refuse medicaments that do not approve themselves to his mind, and double the doctor's task by forcing him to overcome mental obstinacy together with physical ailment. The surgeon meets with less of this passive resistance than the physician, since his work is not commonly complicated with mental processes, but there are cases in which he must first reduce his patient to submission before he can proceed with treatment. Such a case, to his great surprise, Dr. Fanning found this to be.

Amazement kept this young woman silent for a few moments. The unprecedented situation—at least it seemed so to her—bewildered her, and strong as she was it was a little time before she could decide whether to submit to this benevolent stranger or not. At length she decided.

"Stop a moment, doctor," she said quietly.

Fanning looked up. He turned his face merely. The hand which still held her ankle was as rigidly immovable as if it were graven out of steel. "I know that the pain is intense," he said kindly, "but it is inevitable that you must suffer it. There is a bone broken, and it must be set."

"It is not the pain that I am thinking of," said Miss Latimer; "that is bad enough, but the situation is worse. I am more than thankful for your kindness, but we will suspend operations for the present. My house is only half a mile away, and I prefer to wait until I can be taken home before I am treated."

Fanning looked at her closely and thought he understood her. The flash had not left her face, and it lent unusual beauty to a countenance that showed the highest breeding as well as marked intelligence. As if she had spoken all her thoughts, he knew that even in her painful plight she was mindful of the proprieties, and that the ministrations which she would have accepted as a matter of course if her mother had been present were simply insupportable under the circumstances. To her it seemed that virgin pride was asserting itself. To him it seemed that she was the slave of a foolish conventionalism. He did not hesitate an instant.

"Bosh!" he exclaimed roughly. "I shall not allow you to be moved until the bone is properly set and your ankle is bandaged." And without more ado he turned his attention to his business, which, as he conceived it, was to see that no further injury should come to her foot.

It was perhaps well for him that he did not look at her face again for a time. For her the world seemed to have come to an end. Here was a male of her species who not only set her expressed wish at defiance, but who was actually handling her person as if she were the tools of his trade instead of a rebellious princess of society. Evidently "the divinity that doth hedge about" a maiden had no terrors for him. He was to her first a man, and secondly a physician. She was to him first a patient, and secondly—nothing whatever.

Pride would not allow her to make further protest in words. One movement as if to arise, and, confronting, to slay him with her eyes, gave her such a pang that she recognized her powerlessness again. Then, like a destroying flash of lightning, came a single throb of agony when the bone slipped into place and all became a blank. But even as she swooned away into unconsciousness she was raging like an insulted empress at the single word "steady," which he had spoken coolly when she moved first.

Once more Fanning looked up, after he had satisfied himself that the bone was properly set. "I'm fainted again, eh," he said to himself without emotion. "That's well. Now we'll get this bound up, and then see to getting her home." And forthwith the handy penknife was at work again, whittling out some rude splints. In his skillful fingers it moved rapidly, and a few minutes more were enough to put matters right so far as they could be put. Nature must do the rest.

The second swoon was deeper than the first.

And the young physician had more trouble than before in restoring his unwillful patient to consciousness. Patiently and steadily, however, he worked until she opened her eyes again and looked at him with an expression which he could not understand. Utterly unconscious of having given any cause for offense, and fully alive to the fact that he had seriously discommoded himself to serve an entire stranger, he was confirmed in his cynicism by seeing no gleam of gratitude in her eyes, and he cursed her in his heart for a selfish conventional society miss—an order of being he heartily despised. Being a thorough gentleman, however, only partially corrupted by meretricious philosophy, he could not fail to recognize the fact that she was a gentlewoman, and his speech was courteous, at least in form.

"You say your home is not far away," he said. "If you will direct me to it I will get help and have you carried thither. Your foot is all right now if you will lie perfectly still, but I shall have to leave you here alone."

"I am sorry to trouble you so much," she replied, as coldly polite as he, though her lips were still white from pain, "but there seems to be no alternative. My house is yonder," pointing, "and some of the servants will come at once if you will tell them. Will you kindly warn them to say nothing to mamma till I get there? I do not want her to be frightened needlessly."

He bowed, and in another moment was gone. As the sound of his footsteps and the rustle of pushing through the undergrowth died away the stillness grew intense again. Margaret Latimer closed her eyes and thought deeply. The fury of rage that had swept upon her when this young stranger so coolly defied her died away. She had been used to having her lightest word treated as a command, and it was confusing to have a gentleman say "bosh!" to her, but her native sense after a few moments' reflection justified the man.

Moreover the shock to her dignity and modesty seemed a trivial thing after she had thought of it. What had he done? He had treated her with the most profound delicacy and consideration, possibly consistent with his duties as a surgeon, and had, moreover, rendered her a service which she could hardly overestimate. Supposing she had lain there, as it might easily have happened, all day, even all night, before help came. Supposing she had been moved before the broken bone was set and she had been lamed for life. She began to feel very kindly toward the man she just condemned as a ruthless boor. And she remembered, with a slight blush that he was good to look at, and that his manner when he was not employed as a physician was perfect. She could forgive everything but the "bosh!" Yes, and she could forgive that.

Meantime Fanning was thinking very little of her and very much of the annoyance he was put to. He had started out for a day of rest, and here he was engaged in a distinctly disagreeable work of compassion for a woman in whom he had not the faintest interest. However, there was no way to avoid it, and he went on. Presently he came to a large, old-fashioned country mansion with spacious grounds. Near the gate was an old gardener, whom he hailed and informed of the facts. The gardener went at once for the coachman, and all three were speedily driving back to the grove in a low, easy carriage.

Very little was said till the lady was placed in the carriage. Then Fanning lifted his hat and would have turned away, but she detained him with a gesture. "You will surely not leave me thus," she protested. "I have not even told you how greatly I feel indebted to you for—"

Then a spasm of pain turned her face white again, and Fanning entered the carriage.

"You need not feel indebted," he said very coolly. "I have only done what any physician was bound to do. But I will see you home if you desire it, though your servants could doubtless take you safely."

He remembered what she had said about her mother, and had hoped to escape a scene of hysteria and thankfulness, but seeing that his patient still suffered greatly, he felt bound to remain with her.

All came—hysteria and gushing thanks, and he was more than thankful when he escaped from the house an hour later, having given his patient a sleeping draught, and assured her mother that no danger was to be apprehended.

"At least you will tell me, doctor, to whom I am indebted for my daughter's preservation," said the sweet-faced, white-haired old lady, after he had protested for the twentieth time that she owed him no great gratitude.

He fumbled in his pocket and brought out a card which read:

DANIEL FANNING, M. D.,
No. 3 WEST FORTIETH ST.,
NEW YORK.

Then he strode rapidly away, forgetting utterly that he had not learned the name of the people who had failed to excite even a faint interest in his mind.

A week later Miss Latimer looked up from her reading and said, "Mamma, how very pretty this is," and she read:

How often is our path
Crossed by some being whose bright spirit sheds
A passing gladness o'er it, but whose course Leads down another current, nevermore
To blend with ours. Yet far within our souls,
Amid the bustle of this busy world,
Dwells many a thought that lingers closely still Around that image.

"Yes, it is pretty," said Mrs. Latimer, "but I don't see anything very remarkable about it, do you?"

Miss Latimer made no reply, but she presently asked for scissors and cut out the scrap, laying it carefully away until she should have time to paste it in her scrap book.

A MOCKING BIRD'S LESSON.

In a Few Minutes It Learned Some New Sounds But Forgot Its Clever Songs.

"There he goes again!" groaned Mr. George Phalen, a wealthy resident of Highbridge. "Was ever man cursed with such a bird?"

"Bird!" exclaimed Mr. Phalen's visitor in astonishment. "Why, you don't mean to say you keep a bird with those cats in the house?" For the sudden chorus of hissing, spitting and mewing that floated in from the rear room seemed to indicate that an animated feline argument was in progress there.

"There is no cat under my roof," was the reply. "All the noise you hear is made by a single mocking bird. Just step into the other room and look at him. A more woebegone creature you never saw."

The bird, indeed, looked as though he had seen hard and long service. He had no vestige of a tail left, and one of his eyes was gone. His few feathers were ruffled, and all his sleek and glorious beauty had departed.

"Three years ago old Nick (that is his name) was a remarkably handsome bird," said Mr. Phalen, "and his numerous accomplishments made him a great favorite and very valuable. He could whistle 'The Campbells Are Coming' and a dozen other airs with wonderful clearness and musical precision, and he was so clever that he could learn a new tune in an hour. I would not have sold him then for $500."

"But one night everybody in the house was awakened by an awful uproar in the back parlor. The mocking bird was shrieking, shouting and swearing like a human being; a cat, that must have entered by the cellar door, for we harbored none of his kind, was spitting and hissing furiously, and the sound of some heavy metallic object dashed frequently and violently against the furniture was distracting. I went down stairs with a light, and I found that the cat's paw was tightly wedged between the wires of the bird's prison, and the terrified brute was swinging the cage about the room, trying to release himself. Old Nick was nearly dead and badly dilapidated, as you see him now, before I could disentangle the cat from the wires and kick him out into the darkness."

"The bird's tail never grew again, nor did his plumage regain its luster. He was quite silent for a full week, and then he suddenly made the air vocal with a horrible series of caterwaulings, and he has kept them up almost without intermission ever since. In the few dreadful minutes that he passed face to face with the cat he learned every intonation of voice that his assailant could teach him, and utterly forgot all the songs and speeches with which years of careful tuition had enriched his mind. A poor exchange, it seems to me."—New York Sun.

Married Lovers.

The affectionate man, who sits with his arm on the back of the seat when he rides in the cars with his wife, is always open to the suspicion that somewhere in the recesses of his self esteem he considers himself a sadly heepped individual, and is excessively attentive to his better half in public places for the simple purpose of side tracking any intimation of such a state of affairs that might be apparent if he didn't do his half of the acting.

But the exquisite way a friend of mine directed his pretty wife where to go the other day as they parted at a crowded street corner contained no such intimation, inasmuch as he put in the word "dear" wherever he could catch his breath, and concluded with, "Don't forget, dear, to take a car at Park square, dear, and remember that the number is three hundred, dear, and thirty-seven."—Boston Globe.

Sudden.

Presence of mind is not always monopolized by the brave and wise, nor is it uniformly cultivated for great and good purposes.

Several of the pupils in a certain "backwoods" district determined not to study geography. The teacher believed that they were old enough to begin the subject, and accordingly called one of the oldest boys to her desk and spoke to him about the necessity of a knowledge of his own and other countries.

"I shan't study geography till I get ready," growled the youngster.

The teacher rose quickly and seized him by the collar, intending to shake him, when the young rascal hastily added, "But I am ready now!"—Youth's Companion.

This Can Be Done on Nearly Every Farm.

Given a flow of 100 gallons of water per minute and plenty of liver and scraps thrown in, and you can raise 1,000 pounds of trout in a pond 10 feet deep, 10 feet long and ten feet broad, replacing them with small ones as rapidly as they reach marketable size. It can be done very profitably too. The time is looked forward to, and it is not far away, when every farmer will look upon an acre of water as he does upon an acre of land, expecting so much yearly yield from it, whether it is pond, lake, river or estuary.—Washington Star.

A Dreadful Threat.

A poet having loaned a small amount to a friend found it very difficult to collect the same, as his friend failed to recollect the incident. Meeting his friend in need the poet said:

"If you don't pay me that $17 which you owe me I shall have to resort to extreme measures."

"And what may they be?"

"I'll dedicate my next poem in your honor."

The friend turned pale and shelled out abruptly.—Texas Sittings.

A Large Difference.

"What was your lawyer's fee in that case, Dimling?"

"It wasn't a fee, Totling; it was an honorarium."

"What's the difference?"

"Well, an honorarium is about ten times as much as a fee."—Harper's Bazar.

This boat, artistically and richly decorated, was launched with much ceremony after the last spirit had been braced and, figuratively speaking, taken his seat on board. It was then pushed out into the sea, and drifted away was finally carried out of sight by the tide. And so ended the last festival of Matsidori ever held publicly in Gasaki, and the most splendid religious celebration I ever witnessed.—San Francisco Chronicle.

One fall, a nephew of the dead chieftain, related an interesting incident that happened just the day before Sitting Bull was killed. He said Sitting Bull that day climbed to the top of one of the highest neighboring buttes, where he fell asleep, and dreamed of the startling tragedy that would happen the next day. He came down and told his people of their great medicine man would be killed on the morrow. How true his words were was attested by developments the next morning.—Cor. St. Paul Globe.

ALARMING RAVAGES OF La Grippe have been made in Chicago during the present rampage. Hundreds of victims have succumbed to this dread disease every day. One day this week 600 bodies awaited burial at the same time. The effect both on business and society affairs has been most depressing. Pittsburg, Detroit and other large cities, North and West, have come in for a share of the scourge. The disease is far more disastrous in the localities it has visited, than during its reign a year ago.

SOME PRETTY strong intimations have been made to the effect that, Ex-Senator Chandler is fomenting the Farmer's Alliance movement, and that he intends to split up the Republican party in the Granite State. It does not appear that he is to be the head, however, of the new party, and this makes the rumor questionable. Mr. Chandler is not in the habit of being a "bob" for anybody's kite, and no other explanation of his alleged connection can be inferred, than that of wanton malice. We can not believe he has so far lost his reason as to take any hand in such a movement.

DESPITE THE gloomy prognostications sent out by the weather bureau, and the threatening aspect of the clouds on Saturday night, Sunday opened bright and fair, and everybody who had a new Easter bonnet or suit, took the opportunity to display those works of art. The churches in town were all arrayed in special Easter decorations and all were well attended. Everybody enjoyed the day—many seeking an hour's recreation by a ride in the street cars or livery team, who were not owners of private vehicles. It looked decidedly as if spring had come to stay.

THE RUMORS of war in Europe seem destined to end in smoke, and it won't be powder smoke either. The Czar has fits of talking of war, which subside when he finds that no one is frightened. Russia is in no condition to make war upon any of the European powers, if she succeeds in overruling the turbulent spirits—the Nihilists, at home, she will do pretty well. Locked up in the inhospitable fastness of her northern climate, she is reasonably secure from outside attack, but once let her cross the border, and she will find her 2,000,000 men capable of bearing arms, an insignificant force to match against the combined armies of Germany and Austria, in the enemy's country.

THE CONTEST between the Parnellites and the adherents of Davitt have assumed the characteristics of a mob, and is likely to alienate the friends of Irish home rule. The riot that took place at North Sligo last Sunday was a disgrace. Parnell had been driven from Strand Hill to North Sligo, and the reception he met at that place was extremely hostile. His friends gathered upon the brow of a hill, armed with black thornes, threatening their opponents with assault, so that it became necessary for the police to dislodge them with bayonets, after which they subsided for a time. At Dromore West, the Parnell followers pelted their opponents with stones and again police interference was necessary. Mr. Pickerton, a member of Parliament, had his head cut, and others were more or less injured. Many protected themselves with rugs thrown over their heads. A vehicle conveying two news correspondents, following about 100 yards behind the Davitt party was attacked by the Parnellites and the occupants were thrown out and so seriously injured it was necessary to stop at a neighboring village and have the wounds dressed. The identity of the newspaper representatives was unknown to the assailants at the time of the assault, and when it was learned whom they had assailed, the mob was rather ashamed of its action.

THE LAST PHASE OF THE ELECTRIC LIGHT CONTROVERSY.

THE LAST phase of the electric light controversy indicates that wiser counsels than those of the numerical majority of some Town Meeting are likely to prevail in the disposition of this important question. The committee on manufactures by a vote of 7 to 4 are arrayed against the encroachment of municipalities upon private enterprise in the domain of electricity, and though the House may reverse this decision, it is not probable that it will and much more improbable that the Senate will take such action.

Had a stranger to our institutions been present at the special Town Meetings of last summer, he would have thought that the boisterous confidence and enthusiasm, which in the consideration of this question, spurned all the rules of logic, of law, and even of common courtesy, must have been very sure of its position. He would naturally have thought that the town was surely committed to the immediate expenditure of the large sum asked for by the committee, and the far larger sum that would have been called for afterward. Fortunately, our system of government, defective though it be in some particulars, affords guards against the results of such easily abused power, and the evil day for our town treasury, is at least postponed. Perhaps the worst feature of this whole matter is the danger that threatens all towns, and especially large towns like Peabody, in the ease with which a minority of its voters (in our history rarely exceeding one tenth of the whole number,) can plunge the town into unnecessary and unwise expenditure. By evening meetings, by demagogical leaders, by the indifference with which the average citizen views his political duties, the minority can and often does control the action of the town and injure its true interests. This humiliating fact had a fresh illustration in the recent evening meetings. The industrious citizen who by hard and persistent labor had scraped together his little home saw his tax burdens unnecessarily increased, and capital seeking investment kept from assisting in bearing those burdens by the votes of those who had no property to be taxed and whose aim is always to spend the money of the town rather than to save it.

If citizens continue to ignore their duties and permit their property to be thus levied upon, the only hope of protection to the common treasury lies in the proposed extension to towns of the laws of municipal expenditure that now govern cities, or in a change to a city form of government, either by the necessary increase of population, or by annexation.

NOTED AND QUOTED.

"The Lowell Daily Courier says—'Senator Peffer wants to have the government issue bank notes based on the silver lying unmined in the mountains. There is a trick worth two of that. It is to issue notes on the unmined iron. That would give us a currency so plentiful and cheap that Mr. Peffer could have a bushel-basket of salary every month; and it would be fully commensurate with Peffer's statesmanship.'"

You are right brother.

The local option license bill was killed in New Hampshire last week by a vote of 166 to 148.

Mayor Matthews has removed City Architect Atwood. That has been foreshadowed for some time. He says in his letter that Atwood offered to use his influence as chairman of the republican ward committee in Dorchester to help Matthews in case the latter would allow him to retain his office. This is absolutely and vigorously denied. The fact remains that Atwood is removed, and as to the rest it does not much matter, except as a question of dispute between the two. He has been the best city architect we have had for some time, even if he is a smart politician. Some of the mayor's selections are open to the same latter criticism.—Record.

Harmony is said to have worked out this program in Ohio: Foraker will nominate McKinley for governor and agree to keep quiet on the senatorship question; when he has got quiet a seemingly length of time, Senator Sherman will announce his determination to retire from public life, and then Foraker can hustle for the vacant place. But Sherman does not propose to be driven out of office.—Springfield Republican.

Perhaps it is not generally known, but by the way people are accustomed to avoid these creatures we should think most everybody had a strong suspicion of the fact.

It is such items as the following which appear as news every day that justify the McKinley bill: "A Philadelphia firm has purchased land at Sandford, Me., and will erect thereon this spring two large mills for the manufacture of worsted goods. They will run three hundred and fifty looms and employ four hundred hands. Seventy-five houses will be built at once for the accommodation of the help, and Sandford is enjoying a boom as it never has before."—Manchester Mirror.

Philadelphia is in deep mourning because the appropriation necessary to build her new government mint building was omitted from the sundry civil bill. This blocks the way so that Secretary Foster is scarcely likely to assume the responsibility of trying to open it.

Mr. Cleveland did not attend the great banquet at Chattanooga, where tin plates made from new basic steel under the encouragement of the McKinley bill were a feature of the occasion. He sent a letter of regret saying that he was prevented from being present "on account of duties," and so on. The "duties that kept him away were probably the McKinley 'duties' which made the southern steel men and the tin plate manufacturers happy, but carried the steel to his free trade heart."—New York Press.

A FATAL MISTAKE.

Physicians make no more fatal mistake than when they inform patients that nervous heart troubles come from the stomach and are of little consequence. Dr. Franklin Miles, the noted Indiana specialist, has proven the contrary in his new book on "Heart Disease" which may be had free at Wm. T. Lee's who guarantees and recommends Dr. Miles' unequalled New Heart Cure, which has the largest sale of any heart remedy in the world. It cures nervous and organic heart disease, short breath, fluttering, pain or tenderness in the side, arm or shoulder, irregular pulse, fainting, smothering, drowsy, etc. His Restorative Nerve cures headache, fits, etc.

Striking Incidents in the House of Commons.

One of the brightest pages in Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper this week is the foreign page, with nine pictures of striking scenes in the British House of Commons. The first page will please the ladies. It represents a scene on Fifth Avenue, New York, after the Easter morning service. Other pictures include that of the queen of the New Orleans Mardi Gras Festival, scenes connected with the recent outbreak in New Orleans, a full page of particularly attractive amateur photographs (reproduced), the spring floods in the Mississippi River, views in Oak Cliff, Tex., a striking full page of a bull fight on the plains, and the old French Market in New Orleans (four pictures). One of the largest collections ever taken in a church in New Bedford was taken at the Grace church last Sunday. The total amount collected was $18,000. The reason of the size of the sum lies in the fact that the church is to have a new parish home to cost $20,000.

MORTGAGEE'S SALE.

BY SAMUEL A. JOHNSON,
AUCTIONEER,
139 Washington Street, Salem.

Mortgagee Sale of Real Estate To Mary A. McCarthy, widow of Jeremiah McCarthy, Hannah O'Connell, daughter of Jeremiah McCarthy and to all persons interested in the estate of Jeremiah McCarthy.

By virtue of a power of sale contained in a certain mortgage deed given by Jeremiah McCarthy, late of Peabody, in the County of Essex, and Commonwealth of Massachusetts, deceased, to Pym D. Perkins of said Peabody, dated the twelfth day of April, A. D. 1888, and recorded in Essex County South District Registry of Deeds, Book 1219, Leaf 288, for breach of the conditions contained in said mortgage deed and for the purpose of foreclosing the same, will be sold at public auction, on the premises hereinafter described on Monday, the sixth day of April, A. D. 1891, at three o'clock in the afternoon, all and singular the premises conveyed by said mortgage deed, the said premises being described in said mortgage deed as follows: A lot of land with the dwelling house thereon, situated in said Peabody on a private way called Dalton's Court, bounded thus, viz: easterly by Dalton's Court about seventy feet and eight inches; southerly by land formerly of Patrick McCarthy about sixty feet; westerly by land of Kennedy about seventy-two feet; and northerly by land formerly of Cyrus Thompson about seventy-three feet. Being all of the land that Cyrus Thompson conveyed to the said Jeremiah McCarthy by his deed recorded at Essex South District Registry of Deeds in Book 539, Leaf 249, and that Mary Thompson conveyed to the said Jeremiah McCarthy by her deed recorded in said Registry of Deeds in Book 680, Leaf 108, except so much thereof as the said Jeremiah McCarthy conveyed to Patrick McCarthy by his deed recorded in said Registry of Deeds in Book 550, Leaf 57, as explained and amended by his deed to said Patrick McCarthy recorded in said Registry of Deeds in Book 693, Leaf 168.

ESSEX, SS. PROBATE COURT.
To the Heirs-at-law, Next of Kin, Creditors, and all other persons interested in the estate of GEORGE P. H. E. late of Peabody, in said county, deceased. GREETING:
WHEREAS, a certain instrument purporting to be the last will and testament of said deceased has been presented to said Court for Probate, by Abby L. Price, who prays that letters testamentary may be issued to her the executrix therein named, and she may be exempt from giving a surety or sureties on her bond, for the reasons alleged in said petition. You are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court to be held at Salem, in said county of Essex, on the third Monday of April, next, at nine o'clock, before noon, to show cause, if any you have, against the said will.

Rev. Sanford Preston Smith.

The death of this worthy pastor of the Universalist church on Sunday last in the prime of his manhood, came like a shock both to his parish and to the community at large. He preached for the last time on Sunday forenoon, Feb. 22, in his pulpit here in town. He had a severe cold at the time, and so felt unable to attend his usual service at North Anson in the afternoon. He grew worse rapidly, and it was soon found that he had been prostrated by pneumonia. Hopes were cherished of his recovery until within a few days. Serious complications, however, arose, and on Sunday forenoon last he entered into rest.

He was born in Bingham, Feb. 5, 1846, and was the son of Benjamin and Mary Smith. The father survives him. In his early manhood he went to Augusta and learned the printer's trade in the office of the Gospel Banner, the well known organ of the Universalists in the State. He remained there five years. The wish to enter the ministry at last dominated him and changed his course in life. He went to Canton, N. Y., and fitted himself for his chosen work at the St. Lawrence University. On July 4, 1871, he was united in marriage to Miss Mary E. Quimby, of Gardiner. There were two children, a son and a daughter, by this marriage.

He began his pastoral work in Claremont, N. H., a pleasant town in one of the most picturesque regions of New England. His other settlements in the order were as follows: Peabody, Mass., Hightstown, N. J., Wintthrop, Me., Marblehead and East Boston, Mass., Thompsonville, Conn., and Skowhegan and North Anson. While in Boston he was Secretary of the Universalist Convention, a missionary society, and did efficient service. In all of the above named pastorates he was prominent in temperance work, and cheerfully allied himself with those agencies which sought to benefit and help his fellows. Here in town, although his residence lasted but a single year, he found favor with the people both in and out of his parish, and by his manly, pure, and devout life was constantly enlarging the sphere of his influence and usefulness.

The funeral took place on Tuesday noon. There was a brief service at the house, which was conducted by the Rev. S. G. Davis, of Fairfield. At the church where the public exercises took place, there was a large attendance. The pulpit, the chair of the late pastor, the chancel, the organ and choir rail were all draped. On one side of the pulpit was a large number of calla lilies, these with other floral offerings, were the gifts of the friends in the Skowhegan parish. On the other side was a large broken column of smaller flowers, the loving remembrances of the friends in North Anson.

Rev. S. G. Davis, who presided, read selections from the Scriptures, and made the opening address. He based his remarks on the beatitude of Christ, "Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted." He alluded feelingly to the loss which the church, the denomination, and the family had sustained. He spoke of the departed as a tender and helpful pastor, an able and eloquent preacher, a man of good executive ability, and an excellent organizer of work in his parish. He has been long and favorably known to the de-Makes the lives of many people miserable, causing distress after eating, sour stomach, sick headache, heartburn, loss of appetite, a faint, "all gone" feeling, bad taste, coated tongue, and irregularity of the bowels. Dyspepsia does not get well of itself. It requires careful attention, and a remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which acts gently, yet efficiently. It tones the stomach, regulates the digestion, creates a good appetite, banishes headache, and refreshes the mind.

Dyspepsia

Sick Headache
"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me. After eating I would have a faint or tired feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. My trouble was aggravated by my business, painting. Last spring I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, which did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced." GEORGE A. PAGE, Watertown, Mass.

nomination through the columns of its journals, by his prominence in the summer assemblies at Weirs, N. H., by his activity in state gatherings, and by his leadership in song in revival services. He referred to his love of preaching, and to the spiritual character of his ministry. He said also that the fall-n pastor had been by nature a reformer, one who sought to right wrongs, and to mitigate the evils that afflict men.

Mr. Davis was followed by Rev. I. J. Mead, of Augusta, Editor of the Gospel Banner. He spoke tenderly of the friend whom he had known for twenty-five years. He had esteemed him because he had found him to be a true man. His sincerity, too, was beyond question. He was one also who believed firmly in the certainty of the future life. He quoted some of the utterances of his friend in this direction, which showed both the strength and persistence of his belief that the unseen things were the real and abiding things.

The last speaker was Rev. J. H. Little, of Pittsfield, a former pastor of the church, and an intimate friend of deceased from his student days in Canton. He spoke of the impression which Mr. Smith made upon his associates in study by the dignity of his character and by the nobility of his purpose. He made a tender appeal to the parish so bereaved to find in their sorrow an inspiration to greater endeavor, and to an earnest effort to catch the spirit of their fallen leader. Mr. Little then offered prayer, and Mr. Davis closed the impressive service with the benediction.

A quartette composed of M. T. Pooler, Dr. Marr, Mrs. A. Withee, and Miss L. Withee, sang "My faith looks up to Thee," and "Softly the daylight fadeeth." Miss Ella M. Hight acted as organist.

The pall bearers were Samuel L. Whittier, and Z. Vaughan, who represented the Skowhegan parish, and A. Simmons, Esq., and Edwin Collins, who represented that at North Anson. Other friends from the last named place were in attendance. W. H. Fuller had charge of the services at the house and church.

The family left on the 2 o'clock train with the body, and the burial took place in Yarmouth. Besides the relatives above named, he leaves two brothers and two sisters, three of whom were present at the funeral.

Thus has passed away from our midst a public spirited citizen, a good and true man, and one who will be widely missed in this and other parish. He leaves to his family and to his parish a good name, and he will live in their memory as one who was worthy of their honor and their love. Those to whom he has ministered during the past year were assiduous and unwearied in their attentions to him while ill, and since his death have done what human kindness can do to lighten the burden of those so sorely bereaved.

The broken column of flowers at the funeral fittingly symbolized this sad event, and the sweetness of these offerings suggested to those who knew the departed the richer fragrance that is breathed out from a good life.—Somerset Reporter.

HOW TO SUCCEED.

This is the great problem of life which few satisfactorily solve. Some fail because of poor health, others want of luck but the majority from deficient grit—want of nerve. They are nervous, irresolute, changeable, easily get the blues and "take the spirits down to keep the spirits up," thus wasting money, time, opportunity and nerve force. There is nothing like the Restorative Nerve discovered by the specialist, Dr. Miles, to cure all nervous diseases, as headache, the blues, nervous prostration, sleeplessness, neuralgia, St. Vitus dance, fits and hysteria. LITERARY NOTES.

Scribner's Magazine for April marks the beginning of the richly illustrated series on "Ocean Steamships" which, it is believed will be as successful as the Railway and Electric series. The most competent authorities have been chosen to write of Ocean Passenger Travel, The Ship's Company, Safety at Sea, Speed, and the Lines of the World. Original drawings by skillful artists (who have been granted special privileges for study by the various steamship companies) will illustrate each paper. Articles of travel and adventure are represented in this issue by Mr. Jephson's second paper on his perilous journey to relieve Captain Nelson at Starvation Camp; Robert Gordon Butler's account of the cruise of the United States steamer Thetis to the Arctic regions; and Birge Harrison's description of a kangaroo hunt and many other interesting articles also appear.

There is all the sunshine of spring and the fragrance of flowers in The Ladies' Home Journal for April; the exquisite Easter cover, designed by W. Hamilton Gibson, is a fair index to the charm of the whole number. The pervading Easter spirit finds perhaps its happiest expression in the fiction, Mrs. Whitney's delightful serial, A Golden Gospel, being continued, while Maud Burton and Caroline A. Mason contribute seasonable short stories. The Mrs. Rossiter Lamar of the latter, an exceptionally strong story, forms as attractive a feature as the clever sketch of Mrs. T. De Witt Talmage, which is accompanied by a fine wood-cut portrait.

Other articles which will be quoted are A. E. Barr's Mothers as Match-makers, dealing with a question of universal interest, and the third of George W. Cable's masterly papers on Teaching the Bible. Among such an infinite variety it is difficult to mention everything that is good, but the article by C. F. Kunder, the New York florist, on Flowers in the Home; those upon Bee-keeping as an Occupation for Women, and Mrs. Mallon's delightful pages of Spring Fashions will no doubt be especially appreciated. The number is complete in every part, and richly illustrated throughout. Issued at Ten Cents per copy, or One Dollar a year, by the Curtis Publishing Company, 435 Arch street, Philadelphia.

The Columbian Cyclopaedia is the new name and new form of what has heretofore been known as Alden's Manifold Cyclopaedia, and which has won great popularity by its high merit, combined with its amazingly low price. The Columbian Cyclopaedia will comprise 32 volumes, of about 800 pages each (the Manifold was 40 vols., of 640 pages each) being about equal in size to Appleton's Cyclopaedia, and about 50 per cent. larger than Johnson's. The entire set will contain about 7,000 illustrations; it is very handsomely printed and bound, and, like the Manifold, is almost fabulously cheap, the entire set being furnished in cloth binding for $25.00, with easy installment terms to those who want them. Of course, subscriptions to the Manifold will be completed in uniform style with the early volumes delivered. Whoever is interested in cyclopedias will do well to secure (free) specimen pages of the Columbian, which may be had by addressing The Columbian Publishing Co., 393 Pearl St., New York, or 242 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

The statement by ex-Minister Phelps which will appear in the April number of Harper's Magazine (published March 21), of the controversy between the United States and Great Britain is clear, full, and conclusive. After showing the extent of the destruction of seal life in the open sea surrounding the Pribiloff Islands through the Canadian intrusions, so great that during the past four years four-fifths of the revenue from an important American industry has disappeared, Mr. Phelps exposes the wanton and wasteful character of this destruction, as contrary to the ordinary dictates of humanity as it is to the requirements of self-interest.

A notable feature of the April Magazine of American History is its timely frontispiece, a copy of the famous painting of "Columbus at the court of Ferdinand and Isabella." The leading article, "The Chesapeake and Lieutenant Ludlow," by Robert Ludlow Fowler, brings to light some exceedingly interesting unpublished letters about the naval engagements of the war of 1812, and presents numerous valuable and unique illustrations. A short sketch of the "First Meeting of Admiral Porter and General Sherman," as described by the Admiral, will attract thousands of sympathetic eyes. The critical essay of Hon. William Wirt Henry, "A Defense of Captain John Smith," takes the reader into the beginnings of Virginia life. "A Bundle of Suggestive Relics," by Hon. Horatio King, presents a curious exhibit of partisanship in the old time. "The Power to Grant Patents for Inventions," by Levin H. Campbell, gives concisely the Proceedings of the Framers of the Constitution in 1787, in that line. "President Lincoln and his English Visitors," is a paper containing some readable anecdotes; "The Fate of a Pennsylvania Coquette," penned more than half a century ago by the then famous Mrs. E. F. Ellet, is a historical sketch of thrilling character; "Two Immortal Letters" of Grant and Sherman, appear in full; there is a "Love-letter of Alexander Hamilton, written to Elizabeth Schuyler a few weeks before their marriage," in 1780; and an informing contribution on "Archæology in Missouri."

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL.

The Boston Theatre has been crowded all the week. George Thatcher's Merry Minstrels have been a big card. Fast day two performances were given. Monday evening a benefit is to be given to the popular ticket agent of the Theatre H. A. McGlenan. Hoyt's "A Midnight Bell." Everybody should witness this performance.

At the Tremont Theatre, the J. C. Duff Opera Co., with the ever attractive Marie Tempest has been playing to crowded houses this week. The engagement closes to-night, and Monday evening will witness the first production of "Poor Jonathan" by the Rudolph Aronson's Opera Co., from the New Yorks Casino.

The greatest hit—and a laughing one, too—made by the Boston Museum in many years is found in "New Lamps for Old," produced in the 30th ult. It is drawing crowded and enthusiastic audiences, and could carry the 50th season triumphantly to its close. The Boston presses are unanimous in pronouncing it clever, original, unique, amusing, hilarious, and, what is rarest of all, for a piece this character, intellectually bright. Notwithstanding this great success, there should be no delay in seeing "New Lamps for Old," as Mr. Field announce a new play by Sidney Grundy for this season.

William H. Crane was greeted at the Hollis Street Theatre Monday night with a crowded house, and his impersonation of "Senator Hannibal Rivers" was highly appreciated by all. He was ably supported, the entire cast being strong. George F. Devere, as "Alex Armstrong," Secretary of State; George W. Leslie, as the Private Secretary to the "Senator," and J. C. Podgett, as "Silas Denman," a suppliant of Congress, all sustained their parts to the satisfaction of the large audience. Henry Bergman, as the "Austrian Diplomat," and general robber of hearts, was all that could be desired in his role. Miss Hattie Russell in the part of "Mrs. Hilary," a susceptible widow, and moulder of Senatorial votes and opinions, was capital. The play is a satire upon congressional methods, and Washington society. The play is not too highly colored, and abounds in pleasant mixtures of wit and pathos that makes the comedy attractive and interesting throughout. Mr. Crane is as much of a favorite as ever with Boston pleasure seekers, and his ready wit and happy manner give a richness and delicacy to the work of the author. To all who are looking for a real treat in dramatics, we recommend a visit to the Hollis Street before the close of the present engagement.

The Grand Opera House has had large houses with "Gurs" during this week. Next week, the theatregoing public will be pleased to welcome Mr. William Redmond and Mrs. Thomas Barry.

"First class in geography, now begin—hold up your hands. For what is New York distinguished?" First boy: "For the big Brooklyn Bridge." "Right. For what is Cincinnati distinguished?" "For big hogs." MOSES AT THE CIRCUS.

"Hey dere! you Mose, ef yo' don' hussle yo'self in hyar d'reely wif dat wood, sumpin' 'll drap 'round hyar!" The shrill cry, impelled by the vigorous lungs of Aunt Caroline, floated over the bare little back yard, around the corn crib, and finally reached the ears of Moses Elijah Ellison, who sat on the "choppin' block" with his head in his hands, ruminating on some krotty question.

Hastily gathering the few sticks of wood that were cut, Mose started for the house, knowing by experience that he would feel the weight of Aunt Caroline's by no means gentle hand if he delayed much longer in producing the much called for wood.

"Wot yo' ben doin' all dis wile behin' dat co'n crib, yo' lazy, good fer notin' nigger? I sent yo' out dar ter cut dat wood a haf'n hour ago an' yo' aint got'n armful yit. Take dat!" and amny made a blow at Mose, who adroitly ducked under her bare, black arm and ran into the kitchen.

After depositing the wood in the box prepared for it, Mose retreated to a safe place behind the stove, where he kept an anxious eye on amny, as, with a gorgeous red and yellow turban on her head, she swept the dirty floor and dusted the furniture, which consisted mainly of a rickety table, some empty soap boxes and a three legged stool.

"Say, Aunt Caroline," said Mose, glancing furtively up, "kin I go ter de succus wot's comin' hyar dis af'noon?" "Moses Elijah Ellison!" cried Aunt Caroline, fairly swelling with anger at this audacious question, "hain't yo' got not'n better ter do dan traipsin' aroun' ter succuses? Hyar! yo' take yo'self 'roun' ter dat wood pile, an' ef yo' dar to stir out my sight dere'll be anudder succus in dis town. Air yo' goin'?" And she looked around for something to throw.

However, Mose was well out of the way, and by the time Amny got to the door with one of the precious sticks of wood all she saw was the twinkle of a pair of black feet around the corner of the "co'n crib."

"Pears like ez if amny wuz gittin' wuss'n wuss," soliloquized Mose as he sat down on the chopping block to meditate on the situation. "Here I wuz a-choppin' an' a-choppin' all dis mawnin', tell my back feels like hit wuz clean broke, and de minnit I axes fer a little moosement she up'n whumps me wif a stick er wood. But I hain't goin' ter stan' hit no longer!" he continued, shaking his fist at an imaginary Aunt Caroline. "Moses Ellison am goin' ter kick, an'!"

"Hi, y! wot yo' doin', Mose? Hev yo' got de Saint Bituses dance?" and Mose's inseparable friend, William Johnson, jumped over the fence and sat down on the log.

"Golly! Bill, how yo' skairt me," said Mose, rolling his eyes and swallowing hard. "I t'ort yo' wuz Aunt Caroline, shore, an' yo' bet I doan' wan' ter let her ketch me monkeyin' roum' like dis," and for five minutes nothing could be heard but the sound of the ax, as Mose hewed desperately at the tough wood.

"Say, Mose," said Bill, during a lull in the chopping, "goin' ter de succus?" "Doan' say succus ter me," said Mose rather bitterly, as he made a blow at a huge knot. "I axed Aunt Caroline jes a few minnits ago, an' she done set me at the woodpile. But ef I hed emny money I'd go, lickin' er no lickin'. Be yo' goin'?" "Yaas," said Bill, displaying a blue paper proudly. "I helped de man wash de bar's cage dis mawnin', and he guv me a pass fer two; so cum' long ef yer to run away."

Mose was not prepared to be taken up so quickly, and for a moment stood in open mouthed surprise, but, determining not to show signs of cowardice before Bill, he threw down the ax with many misgivings, and, keeping the corn crib between them and the house, they climbed the fence and started for the circus.

"Golly!" exclaimed Mose, sitting down on a large rock and wiping the sweat from his face. "I spected ter heer Aunt Caroline yawpin' arter us ebry minnit. Didn't yo'?"

"Yaas," answered Bill thoughtfully; "but look yere, Mose, ef I takes yo' inter de succus yo' orter do sumpin' fer me, hadn't yo'?"

"Er—yaas," said Mose, rather doubtfully, "but yo' tell me wot 'tis fust 'fore I do hit."

Bill fumbled a moment in his pocket and brought forth a rather small sized biscuit.

"Give dat ter de bar," he said, giving it to Mose.

"Duz de man 'low yo' ter feed de bar?" said Mose, turning the biscuit over in his hand and seeing nothing suspicious about it.

"Certainly," replied Bill, from the height of superior intelligence. "He told me dis mornin' dat de folks allus giv 'im peanuts an' biscuits. Well, ef yo' doan' wan' ter do hit I kin git Sam Wilson insted."

"Hol' up, Bill," called Mose, as Master Johnson turned away as if he didn't care; "I'll do hit."

"Well, hussle yo'self and we'll git dar airly an' git a good seat," said Bill triumphantly.

On arriving at the ground the two boys found that they were much too early, but they managed to amuse themselves very well examining the pictures which decorated the outside of the tent, and looking at the crowd of country people.

When the ticket office opened Mose and Bill were the first ones to present themselves, and on being told that the pass was all right they rushed in and secured good seats next the ring.

Everybody knows how a "one-horse" circus is conducted, and this was no better than the average. The "daring bare-back riders" trotted steadily around the ring; the ring master cracked his whip, and the clown cracked his jokes just as usual, and after all this was over everyone adjourned to the royal "menagerie."

This consisted of a couple of elephants, a sleepy, toothless old lion, some two-headed cows and other startling freaks, and last the animal down on the bills as the "ferce and untamable grizzly bear of California."

To Mose, who had elbowed his way to the rope which separated the animal from the crowd, the bear was all that the bills claimed for it, but to an experienced observer there was an air of helplessness and old age about it which was borne out by the sight of his nearly toothless gums as he caught peanuts and apples with a dexterity born of long practice.

Looking about for Bill, Mose found that that young gentleman had for some reason declined to follow him, and was stationed on the other side of the rope, making signs to him to give the biscuit to the bear.

Taking advantage of a time when every body seemed to be looking over to the other side of the tent, where a spirited encounter was going on between two country youths, Mose tossed the biscuit into the bear's capacious mouth, where it instantly disappeared from view.

The result was somewhat different from what Mose expected. Instead of giving him a grateful look for the dainty tid-bit, the bear stared at him a moment with a look of pained surprise on his features, and then, with a howl of mingled rage and pain, broke the rope which held him, and came down upon the unfortunate ducky like a whirlpool.

"Oh, Lordy!" groaned Mose, whose kinky hair fairly straightened out in his terror. "Oh, Lordy! I's done fo'," and he sank in a heap before the enraged bear.

This act probably saved him from receiving some severe injuries, for the bear stumbled over him, heels over head, and before it had time to get up was caught by some circus men, who promptly bundled it into a cage.

"Wot is it?" asked Mose faintly, as he slowly rose to his feet.

"My young colored friend," answered the head showman, as he assisted him out of the tent with the toe of his boot, "never let me catch you round here again feeding Cayenne pepper to my animals."

Mose received a warm welcome from Aunt Caroline that night—very warm, coming as it did right after the application of the circus man's toe, but he says he got some satisfaction out of the "everlasting whuppin'" he gave Bill Johnson the next day.—Arthur Chapman in Philadelphia Times.

An Historic Old Town.

Borgo is an old town about forty miles from Helsinki, and certainly the most characteristic of the small towns of Finland. By the side of the old town, with its quaint, irregular houses and its tortuous streets, there are square and unpicturesque quarters, with houses painted with yellow ochre, and reminding one by their shape of cigar boxes. Situated at the mouth of a little river, and prettily set in a frame of hills and ancient fortifications, covered with venerable pine trees, Borgo presents a most curious aspect.

The old white cathedral; the strange houses of the old town, painted red, ochre and orange; the sheds and warehouses built along the river, with their foundations in the water itself, and everywhere in the intervals between these odd wooden buildings the fresh greenery of the gardens—such are some of the features which make this little town so characteristic. The cathedral is a large square monument built of blocks of granite, whitewashed, and with pointed gables. The steeple is separate from the church at a distance of about fifty paces. It is the type of almost all our churches of the Catholic era—that is to say, before Gustavus Vasa.

It was in this church of Borgo that Alexander I in 1809 opened the Finnish diet, by which he promised to preserve and to respect forever the religion, the laws and the Swedish constitution of the country, thus, according to his own words, "raising Finland to a place among nations."—Albert Edelfelt in Harper's.

She Talked Him Into It. I heard a characteristic bit of dialogue on a Sixth Avenue train a couple of days ago. The speakers were two well dressed women under the middle age.

"What a goose a man is!" chirped one of the women in a high keyed voice that could be heard all over the car.

"Why, Mame?"

"Why, about my earrings, you know. I took them to a jeweler and told him how I wanted them fixed. 'Oh, it couldn't be done,' he said. I told him it would have to be done. I couldn't wear them if it wasn't done, and I wanted to wear them. Now, if it had been a woman she would have fixed them in some way, and that would have been the end of it; but, do you know, I had to talk to that man an hour and fifteen minutes, and then he said he'd fix them, and he did."

They left the car at this point, and a gray bearded old man remarked, "I don't wonder that the jeweler was ready to promise most anything to get rid of her if she talked an hour and fifteen minutes to him."—New York Star.

Curious Advice.

I am reminded of a curious bit of advice I heard a shrewd elderly man give to a young acquaintance who was about to start in business.

"Have you any cash, Harry?" asked he. The youth named a respectable sum.

"Have you any credit?" The young man replied again in the affirmative, going over a promising list of his advantageous connections.

"Then let me give you a hint gratis," said the old reprobate. "Use your credit up first, my boy; your cash is good any time."—Kate Field in Washington.

An Aerial Messenger.

Captain Smith, of the ship Kistna, bound from Sydney, N. S. W., to San Francisco, caught an albatross around the neck of which was a piece of brass bearing the following inscription: "E. O'Brien, July 5, '89, lat. 37 degs. 20 mins. north, long. 143 degs. west." Capt. Smith took possession of the message and released the aerial messenger.—Chambers' Journal.

BREVITIES

THE GENTLER SEX.

The only one of Senator Ingalls' children who inherits to a notable degree his literary talent is his eldest daughter Ethel.

Miss Davenport, the Irish governess of Spain's juvenile king, gets $3,500 a year salary, and will soon be entitled to a life pension of $2,500 a year.

Mme. Bernard-Beere, the English actress, is a graceful, statuesque, lithe, slender, tall and beautiful young creature. She never wears stays, and the garments that suit her best are of the long, loose order.

The widow of the noted temperance lecturer John B. Gough will probably leave the old Gough estate, near Worcester, Mass., in consequence of ill health, which demands freedom from all care and anxiety.

Miss Ray Frank is one of the few Jewesses who in recent times have preached in a synagogue. Recently she spoke at Spokane Falls, and so interested her hearers that they decided to establish a permanent congregation there.

Mrs. Richard A. Proctor proposes to perpetuate her husband's name by building an observatory on Mission Heights at San Diego, Cal. The building with the telescope will cost about $25,000, and the bulk of this sum Mrs. Proctor hopes to raise by lecturing.

Miss Adeline Patti Baird, a goddaughter of the diva, has a string of pearls collected from the days of her babyhood. One of her first gifts was a number of fine unstrung pearls, and to these have been added others from time to time until she now has a matchless necklace.

Sara Bernhardt has set all Paris crazy by her African complexion. The cosmetic compound consists of saffron, well kneaded with powdered coffee, combined with a delicate mixture of musk and chlorella, diluted with rose water until sufficiently liquid to be brushed over the skin.

Mrs. Frank Leslie owns a gold medallion surrounded by diamonds set like the rays of a star. A gold buckle fastens this to a ribbon wrought in the Venezuela national colors. "In the cause of humanity, progress and civilization" this decoration was conferred by the republic of Venezuela.

TALES OF THE TURF.

The Russians, French and English people have caught the trotting fever, and are making liberal purchases in trotting bred nags in this country every season, thus opening a new market that will surely increase in magnitude as the years come and go.

The Kentucky Trotting Horse Breeders' association is in favor of larger and better stakes, and it will probably offer some time during 1891 a $50,000 stake. The directory has already decided on one of $25,000, guaranteed, in addition to the $10,000 stake already advertised.

Ed F. Geers, the crack Tennessee reinsman, has been engaged as trainer and driver by C. J. Hamlin, of Buffalo, N. Y., at a salary of $4,000 a year. Geers has developed and driven some great horses, among them Brown Hal, 2:29; McEwen, 2:18; Hal Pointer, 2:09, etc.

Sam Gamble, the California horseman, fancies that he is a "hoodoo," and firmly declares that he will never visit a track when Stamboul is going to trot again. If Sam does not happen to be present the stallion reduces his record; but if, on the contrary, Sam puts in an appearance, Stamboul proves to be "just a little off."

The most prominent sale of trotting horses that has been held in central Illinois for some time took place at the farm of Col. V. Stryker, near Springfield, recently. The sale aggregated $15,000. Eleven head of horses brought $10,840, or an average of $983.45. Anthony, a 3-year-old bay, sired by Antonio, sold to J. B. Barnes, of Springfield, for $3,125.

Said a prominent horseman a few days since: "One hundred thousand dollars looks like a very high price for a horse, but you and I, if we live to be old men, will probably see the time when some stallion will sell for $500,000. The best will continue to increase in value. It will be a 'survival of the fittest,' and the very greatest horses will year by year increase in value."

RAILROAD BREVITIES

It is figured that the United States has a mile of railroad for each 400 of population and each 23 miles of area, while the balance of the world has a mile for each 7,500 of population and 237 miles of area.

Kansas has more miles of railroad than all the New England states put together. She has 1,159 more miles than New York, more than Pennsylvania, Iowa or Texas. Kansas today has 8,754 miles of railroads. Illinois alone surpasses her with 9,000 miles.

The new Canadian Pacific railway bridge at Milford, Man., spanning the Souris river, has been opened for traffic. The immense bridge was completed in the marvelously short time of five weeks. The structure is 3,300 feet in length and is on an average 75 feet high.

There are many indications that before long the electric light will be the only luminant employed on railway trains. The Russian government has decided that all the carriages on the state railways shall be lighted by the electric light in the future.

Professor R. H. Thurston, of Cornell, declares in The Forum that it is mechanically practicable to attain a speed of a hundred miles an hour in railway travel. The only obstacle, he thinks, is a financial one—the public will not pay for the speed, and the companies won't supply it at a loss.

BRIEF NOTES.

Boston Hostess—How would you enjoy spending the evening at our Burns Club, Mr. Overland? Western Guest—First rate. I used to belong to a fire company myself.

An exchange notices that when a Parisian commits suicide by drowning the jury invariably find that he came to his death while temporarily in Seigne.

I am very fond of Paris, said Miss Passee. It is the only place for any one to live. My childhood was passed there. And have you any recollection of the great Napoleon? asked Miss Debutante.

When there is no hawk flying around, the biggest thing in the barnyard is the strut of the smallest rooster.

Josh Billings—I always advise short sermons, especially on a hot Sunday. If a minister can't strike fire in boring 40 minutes he has either got a poor gimlet, or is boring in the wrong place.

The Continent reports that Thomas A. Edison is at work on a sure cure for that swell annoyance called the gout. If he shall succeed in finding some kind of a lightning cure that will let us go right on living high, we will make him think his electrical discoveries "trifles, sir, mere trifles."

It takes two to make a bargain but only one of them gets it.

The devil don't want to break up the church. What he wants is to run it.

Hood's Sarsaparilla has the largest sale of any medicine before the public. Any honest druggist will confirm this statement.

From New York—Tommy—Say, mamma, where's Boston? Mother—Somewhere near Beacon street, I think.

What was that noise I heard in the parlor last night, Maria? It was William breaking his engagement.

Agitator—Do you agree with me, my friends, that the profit of 150 per cent. a druggist makes on putty is simply infamous? A hundred voices—We do. Agitator (in thunder tones)—Then, my countrymen, we are ready to start another political party.

GENERAL NOTES.

Next to the United States, France produces the largest wheat crop of any country in the world. It is estimated that at least a third of the 17,000,000 acres in France under wheat in the northern and western departments have been affected by the prolonged frosts, which have winter killed the young roots. The present condition foreshadows the loss of one-quarter of the whole French crop.

A project is now on foot to raise cotton in the Russian dominions in Central Asia, several distinguished Russians having recently studied the theory and practice of cotton raising in Louisiana. When this is accomplished, it is believed the tariff on American and Indian cotton will be made prohibitory in Russia.

The New York Board of Trade and Transportation have sent a delegation to Albany to oppose the State Senate bill No. 107, which they characterize as "a most dangerous and radical measure which has for its object the taxing of debts and bills payable."

When Bessemer began experimenting, steel sold in England at from $250 to $300 a gross ton. He has since made a better steel at $30 a ton.

Business in Brazil is at a standstill on account of political troubles. There is little confidence in the financial situation, and as a consequence the granting of discounts has been greatly curtailed.

The shipping bill, as passed by the House, is radically different from the measure sent to that body by the Senate, inasmuch as it merely authorizes the Postmaster-General to contract with American shippers and steamers for carrying mails between United States ports and foreign ports (the Dominion of Canada excepted), such contract to cover a period of not less than five years nor more than ten years.

The McKinley tariff on eggs really imposes an increased duty upon the American hen.

A combination of violoncello and organ has been invented. The music evolved will perhaps be less discordant than that produced by the more common political combination of idiot and organ.

"Schimmelhorn, is my face good enough for another pair of shoes?"
"Well, dot depends how much your face has worn out."

The latest addition to toilet accessories is called waterproof rouge. Corporation officers can use it to give color to the statement that they never water their stock.

A ghost that whistles through its teeth is said to have appeared in Kansas City. Whether the tune was Little Annie Rooney or Sweet Violets isn't stated.

A fence twelve miles long has been erected in a New Jersey town. A good many politicians will need seating accommodations "on the fence" from now until the Presidential nominations are made.

A scientific society in New York is asking people for their brains when they die. Here is a chance for a number of men who have never done anything with their brains while they lived.

They are getting so prudish up in the twin cities of Minnesota that the millers there will soon refuse to grind wheat that has been shocked.

George W. Childs should be having a good time, for he has riches, a clear conscience and 2,000 clocks.

A learned judge in Pennsylvania has ruled that piano playing is manual labor. He might have added that it not frequently is an aural horror.

Brummagen, are those prison-made shoes in your window? No sir; those shoes were made by one of our leading manufacturers. Ah! indeed; I thought they looked as if they had done time.

The Minnesota Legislature is endeavoring to pass a law prohibiting the wearing of tights. Is this a spasm of Cumstockian prudery or an endorsement of Simpson's sockless state?

There is much speculation as to what ex-Senator Ingalls is going to do. What a funny "Admiral" he would make in a Pinafore comic opera troupe.

A good many eminent men have died recently, and a prominent citizen of Chicago has just paid $14,000 for a bible.

Ordering a $500 poem from Tennyson just at the outset of spring is an extravagance. Every newspaper office has a large assortment out of which a choice could be made, at from $10 downward.

Edward C. Bowers, a carpenter, was found dead on Fountain street, Milford early Sunday morning. A horse attached to a buggy was standing guard over him. Last Days of Composer Bach.

Over the eyes of Sebastian Bach, in his last days, there lay a veil of impenetrable night. But the darker without, the brighter it grew within. To his eye of faith there shown a warmer, clearer heaven, and he was constantly more and more drawn upward by its attraction. He left an irresistible longing for the glory in which he believed.

One day in the middle of July, 1750, he had been sitting for some time in his easy chair, his hands folded, his sightless eyes directed upward, when he asked his son Frederick to write for him what he would dictate. He had scarcely put down a few notes, when he interrupted his father, by saying, "What a motet for eight voices!"

"Does that strike you as wonderful, my son?" exclaimed the father. "Oh, that I could sing with a thousand voices what I feel at this moment. Oh, take my hand and lead me to the organ."

The son obeyed, and the happy old man played what was in his heart, though with a trembling hand, and what he would have dictated to his son.

"Yes, my dear," he said to his wife, who sat near him, "my days are numbered. I feel that my end is near; but I have no anxiety. My Saviour is at my side; my eyes behold him. Should I not gladly depart to be with Christ?"

"Don't say so, dear Sebastian," said his wife. "What shall we do when you are gone?" "The Lord is the father of the fatherless," he replied, "and the God and Judge of the widow. He will never leave you nor forsake you. But I shall be singing to him the new song. Hallelujah! Let me go; let me go to the land where I long to be; where my eyes shall be opened to see the king in his beauty. Cease your lamentation, and sing with me, 'Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly; my feet are weary; my strength is gone. The way is too hard for me. Oh, for the peace which Jesus gives.'"

While they sang together and he played the melody, the aged man suddenly exclaimed, with a voice full of joy, "What is that?" His friends, standing around him, were alarmed, and cried out, "What is it, father?" "Oh, I can see again! I can see! Great and gracious God, I am not worthy that thou shouldst come under my roof. I see you again, my dear wife and children. What a mercy! before I go hence. Call all my children, that I may once more feast my eyes by a sight of them."

The children were quickly brought in, and stood around their dear father. "O, my dear children," he exclaimed, "you look just as I used to see you.

Come and help me praise God for his goodness, in that he has so revealed his power to a feeble old man. He has heard my prayer. I will never again doubt that he will receive me to himself in the heavenly mansions."

Then came a few unexpected and blessed hours. The face of the great composer was lighted up with an unearthly glow. He drew from his organ, strains of immortal glory. But the wonderful revelation was too much for him, though it was only like a twinkling star, lighting up the darkness of the night. But it was more than he could bear. The happy surprise threw him into a burning fever, and on the evening of July 28, 1750, he gently fell asleep.

How much we have heard of this great composer and his wonderful music. How delightful it is to read of his happy end.—Exchange.

Purified by Fire.

Friday night a fire occurred at Tiverton, R. I., under unusual circumstances. About 9:30 a blaze was seen in Albert Nickerson's fish market, situated near the depot, and although hundreds of the neighbors turned out, no great attempt was made to save the property. Some of the residents told reporters Sunday that gambling and drinking had been going on in the building, and they thought no harm was done by the fire, although the structure was wholly destroyed. Policemen at Fall River say that in their opinion the place was set afire to save litigation and improve morals.

A Detroit paper says that a policeman who was investigating a dark hallway on Grand River avenue heard some one snoring in the darkness, and he rapped with his club and called out:—Now, then, who is it? It's me, replied a voice, as the snoring ceased. Who's me? Oh, I used to be on the police force. Go along—it's all right. There's only room for one of us here.

Depew tells in a story that a maiden he once knew declined to listen to the marriage proposal of a man who stammered badly. She didn't wish to be courted on the installment plan.

I think I'll take two or three days off, remarked the month of February.

18 NEGROES!

Who left the United States for Liberia last year have lately returned, being unable to stand the climate. Everybody going to a new climate should have a bottle of Sulphur Bitters with them as a safeguard against disease.—Hartford Courant.

FREE LAND COMES HIGH.

Town Lots Given Away, but There Are Expenses Attached to Them.

I heard about the man who was giving away town lots free, and one day I left the train at a small station and hired a man to drive me over to the site of the future great city. I found a sixty acre farm staked out into lots 20 feet front by 50 deep, but only one house and one person were in sight. The house was a farm cabin, and the person was the owner of it and the one I wanted to see. "Come for a lot?" he asked as we drove up.

"Yes, in case my information is correct. Do you give them away free?"

"I do."

"I had heard so."

"Go right out and select any one you like. Those selected are marked with red stakes, those not yet taken by black ones."

I took a walk around and made a selection, and he found the number and said:

"You want an abstract of title, of course. Here it is, and the fee is $3."

When I had received it he hunted out a deed already signed, and filled my name in, called in the teamster and his wife for witnesses, and said:

"Here is your deed. I'll have to charge $4 for that."

I paid the sum named, and he then got down a big book and said:

"You want it recorded, of course. I am the county clerk. The fee for recording is $3."

I had it duly recorded, and just then dinner was ready. He invited me to sit down, but when we were through he said:

"My charge for dinner is seventy-five cents. The taxes on your lot will be due next week, and you had better leave the money. The amount is $1.75, and my commission for receipting will be twenty-five cents."

I paid him the sum named and was about to get into the wagon, when he said:

"The charge for bringing you over and taking you back is $2. Half belongs to me, as I own the wagon. One dollar, please."

"Can you think of anything further?"

I asked, as I handed him the dollar.

"Well, you'll have to stop at the junction about four hours before the eastern train comes along. I own the restaurant there. Please eat all you can."

"I have," I said, after a little figuring, "paid you $13.75 for a lot you advertise to give away free. How much do you call this land worth an acre?"

"All of six dollars, sir. I've been offered five and wouldn't take it."

"Then I've paid you more than the value of two acres to get a lot large enough to bury a couple of cows on!"

"Exactly, sir—exactly, and I congratulate you on your bargain."

"Then you don't call it a swindle?"

"No, sir! No, sir! A man who will kick on buying a chunk of the glorious west for less than $14 isn't straight, and, Mr. Tompkins, I'd advise you to keep an eye on him going back and see that he doesn't jump out of the wagon and bilk you out of your dollar."—Wilmington News.

Private Interview.

One may sometimes be made to see the uselessness of a foolish habit by being made the victim of similar behavior on the part of another. Here is an example of being paid "in one's own coin."

A landlord in a country village was busily employed at his desk when a farmer came to the door and asked to see him.

The man was asked his errand, but he persisted that he must see the hotel keeper alone. The latter stepped outside, when the farmer motioned him to follow and walked around to the rear of the hotel.

When they were well around the corner the farmer stated that he wished to buy a cow and had heard that the landlord had one to sell.

"Come on," said the other, and led the way through a garden, a patch of potatoes, and after climbing a fence, through a muddy barnyard and into the hotel barn.

When they were inside the landlord put his mouth near the other's ear and whispered:

"Say, neighbor, I've sold my cow!"—Youth's Companion.

Nicknames at College.

With students the range of sobriquets is wide and varied, a condition due to the close relations between the nickname and the nicknamed. Some well defined rules obtain, however, which show there is some method in this phase of undergraduate madness. Surnames often carry the same nicknames, although the persons may not be related, and may be separated by five or ten years in the time of their residence at college. For instance, Jones, '79, is dubbed "Back," and the chances are excellent that Jones, '89, will receive the same nickname. Why, no one knows, but it is a curious instance of persistent personality. Again, nicknames received previously at school or at home count for naught, for the collegian is no respecter of traditions outside of the college world. So "Billy" becomes "Sister," "Jack" is transformed into "Reddy," "Joe" is elevated into "Senator," etc.—New York Tribune.

Mutual Lack of Confidence.

"I will have to owe you a dime," said Schuler Jewett to the tobaccoist as he bit off the end of a cigar.

"But I haven't got confidence in you to that extent. You will have to leave that diamond pin as collateral."

"That diamond pin is worth a dollar and a half, and I haven't got confidence in you to that extent," replied Schuler as he strolled out into Broadway puffing his cheap cigar.—Texas Siftings.

A Swedish engineer has invented a novel method of blasting by electricity. He employs a volta arc produced between two carbon rods placed parallel. When the arc is moved close to the spot where blasting is to be effected an intense local heat is created, followed by expansion, which has the effect of splitting the rock.

SALEM, APRIL 5, 1891.

For the Chamber.

Here taste and purse decide. For all are proper. But at this season the correct thing is a straw matting. Our first invoice is already here, and inspection will show them to be prettier than ever, and fully as cheap as last year, when the lowest prices ruled.

There's as much difference between the house furnishing and ornamentation of today and that of twenty years ago as there was between that of the period in question and of the cave dwellers.

Then all was stern utility. Now beauty and gracefulness is the prime desideratum. And yet with almost no sacrifice of strength and durability.

Our carpet stocks are in trim for spring business, better and more plentifully supplied than ever.

Back building, three floors.

Headquarters for loves, we always were, but our previous powerful attempts were but naught compared with this year's preparations.

LIGHT HEARTS AND PLENTY MONEY.

I have completed my first week with my Plater, and have $24.25 clear money. I am charmed with the business. I bought my Plater from the Lake Electric Co., Englewood, Ill. for $3, and feel confident if people knew how cheap they could get a Plater, and how much money they could make, we would see many more happy homes. It is surprising the amount of tableware and jewelry there is to plate; and if persons now idle would get a Plater, they would soon have light hearts and plenty money.

When a church will adjourn a prayer meeting to go to an ice cream festival, it is time to have a revival.

Catarrh Cannot be Cured

with local applications, as they cannot reach the disease. Catarrh is a blood or constitutional disease, and in order to cure it you have to take internal remedies. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, and acts on the blood and mucous surfaces. Hall's Catarrh Cure is no quack medicine. It was prescribed by one of the best physicians in this country for years, and is a regular prescription. It is composed of the best tonics known, combined with the best blood purifiers, acting directly on the mucous surfaces. The perfect combination of the two ingredients is what produces such wonderful results in curing catarrh. Send for testimonials free.

"For God is my King of old, working Salvation in the midst of the earth."—Ps. 74: 12
"Thus saith the Lord, 'Is my hand shortened at all, that it cannot redeem? Or have no power to deliver?'—Isa. 50: 2.

In the last PRESS it was stated, on the authority of Miss Willard, that only ten States in the Nation were without compulsory temperance education laws. This was true a short time ago but recently North Carolina passed into line, the State Senate by a unanimous rising vote adopting the scientific temperance instruction law. Mrs. Mary H. Hunt was present in Raleigh at the time. Her mammoth United States map, so familiar to those who have watched the progress of this line of temperance work, with its surface largely white but bearing ten black states, was spread out in the library of the Capitol, and the senators, who had championed the bill, publicly removed the black cover from the map leaving "the old north state" white with its brave new endeavor to save the coming generations from the drink-curse. On last week Thursday, Texas adopted the same law and a touching scene was enacted in the Legislature, when as the clerk announced the final vote, its friends among the Legislatures reached out their hands in congratulation "in the name of the mothers of Texas" to the women who were interested spectators on the happy occasion, and a handsome bouquet of white Flour de lis and laurel, tied with white ribbon, was sent to the desk of Mr. Kirkpatrick, who had chivalrously defended the homes of the state from the evils of alcohol.

When Mrs. Hunt's great temperance instruction map was hung in the Bromfield street M. E. Church at Boston, last Friday morning, for the instruction of the School of Methods, the great state of Texas wrongly appeared in black. It was an inspiring scene when Mrs. Hunt and Mrs. Newton, State Superintendent of Massachusetts, ripped the black cap from the "Lone Star State" and the audience, rising, burst into song as Miss Bessie Gordon waved the black cap, and Mrs. Cheney read the telegraphic message sent to the White-Ribbon leaders of Texas. Eight states are now on the dark side of the great line of progress in behalf of the future of the young. But ten years have elapsed since the work was undertaken of teaching the twelve millions of school children in the United States "as to the effects of alcoholic drinks, stimulants, and narcotics on the human system," and the W. C. T. U. can well take courage and press on to new battle fields and fresh victories.

The first Y. W. C. T. U. conference that the young women of Massachusetts ever attempted to hold, was called at No. Weymouth, last Tuesday, and closed Wednesday noon. It was a very successful and profitable gathering, of 100 Y's from different parts of the State. Twenty-seven Y. Unions being represented, only the Y. members being reported in this list, though many W.'s were present. Tuesday evening, the Conference was tendered a reception by, and at the home of Miss Hatch, a member of the No. Weymouth Y.'s, after which an able address was given by Mrs. E. L. McLaughlin of Boston. Four members of the Peabody Y. Union attended the Conference.

The reception given Mrs. Mary H. Hunt and the school teachers of Boston on last Thursday evening by the Boston W. C. T. U. was a very pleasant and successful affair.

The General Association of Congregational churches of Massachusetts, at their last annual meeting, passed the following resolution:

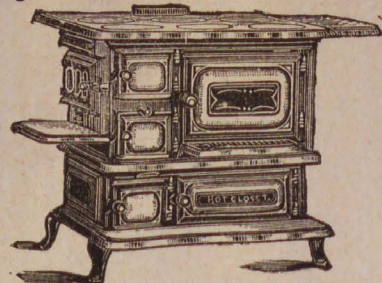

Whereas, we consider the enforcement of the law of the Commonwealth requiring scientific temperance instruction in all public schools of great importance; we, therefore, recommend to the Congregational churches of Massachusetts that they co-operate either with existing temperance committees, or that they appoint special committees, to make efforts to secure such enforcement in the public schools as will insure to every pupil the warning knowledge concerning the nature and effects of alcoholic drinks and other narcotics.

WINTER CLOTHING. Generally when Easter comes, it's certainly time to think of Spring Overcoats—where you can get the best at the best prices. "The early bird" is always greeted with pleasure by all. Early buyers are always suited best. We'll suit you with a Spring suit, any time you call, but it is better to lead the procession. Extremes in dress do not show good taste. The best style for you is not appropriate for a chicken and may not be for the next man. "Fine feathers make fine birds" and fine Clothing makes a fine man—in appearance surely.

With us you don't have to "shell out" much money to get fine Clothing in style, material and fit, and you know it will wear well and look well.

We have now in stock for the benefit of early buyers, 1500 Men's and Young Men's Dress and Business Suits including Prince Alberts, 3 Button Cutaway Frocks, and Sacks. Over 50 different patterns to select from at prices for the finest grades ranging from $15.00 to $28.00.

And for the lower grades,

$6.00 to $12.00.

We wish to call especial attention to our elegant display of Spring Overcoats. We have nearly one thousand of these useful garments in stock, including all the new shades and some of the finest goods manufactured. There are over 40 different patterns; they are perfect in fit and we shall sell the finest grades at $15.00, 18.00, 20.00, 22.00, and 25.00.

The lower grades at:

We have now in stock nearly three thousand Boys' and Children's Suits including all the latest novelties which we shall sell at prices which will be sure to please our patrons.

Mr. Wilcox has for years held the responsible position of operator at Rochester Union Depot, which is a junction for four railroads.

Rochester, N. H., Nov. 18, 1890.

DANA SARSAPARILLA CO.:
Messrs.—I wish to tell you what DANA'S SARSAPARILLA has done for me by taking a month's vacation, and using the Sarsaparilla three times a day.

When I went away the first of October I couldn't sleep nights or work days. I was nervous, had no appetite, and felt all tired out from morning until night. Had no ambition to work. My kidneys were swollen and ached so that I was unable to sit down, or lie down, or take any comfort. So I thought it about time to take a rest and see if I could obtain help.

I bought two bottles of DANA'S SARSAPARILLA, and three weeks from the time I commenced to take it, I had gained ten pounds. My back was greatly improved, and my nervousness had left me. I could eat as much as any well man ought to eat. And best of all no ache or pain comes to disturb my night's rest. I take DANA'S SARSAPARILLA every day, and it has done wonders for me, and saved me lots of expense from doctors.

I remain, hastily,

At the regular meeting of the School Board on Tuesday, it was voted to open another room in the new Warren Schoolhouse. A large number of children presented themselves for admission on the opening of the school Monday morning and extra room is necessary for 83 pupils. No pupils will be registered after April 27. Miss Mary McCarthy was elected a teacher for the primary grade, but no school has been assigned her. It was decided to hold the regular Board meetings on the first Monday of each month at 7.30 o'clock, P. M.

The annual meeting of the Baptist society was held Monday evening, and the following officers were elected: Frank H. Fitz, moderator; Edward Hall, clerk; William Perkins, Frank H. Fitz, William T. Dole, standing committee; F. H. Fitz, collector; S. E. Knapp, treasurer; Charles A. Sanger, auditor; Eri Littlefield, Mr. Stanley, and Mrs. Pike, music committee. Abraham C. Osborne, who has filled the office of clerk of the society for the last twenty-five years, declined a reelection. He has never missed a meeting during his long term of service.

The lyceum and library committee of the Peabody Institute met and organized Monday evening. Thomas Carroll was chosen chairman, Geo. A. Whitney secretary and Albert H. Merrill treasurer. J. Warren Upton was re-elected librarian of the Institute Library. The several sub-committees were appointed and organized as follows: Library committee, J. Henry Osgood, chairman; E. D. Sutton library committee, J. K. Cole, chairman; lyceum committee, F. E. Hobart, chairman. The Lyceum committee consists of Messrs. Hobart, Barnes, O'Connor, G. Fred Osgood and Whitney.

The selectmen voted last Saturday to request the Essex and Naumkeag street Railways to make arrangements for putting in overhead switches, where their wires cross. The Essex company has the right of way so far as wires are concerned, and the Naumkeag road is thus compelled to lower its trolley and run by. Had it not been for the obstinacy and supercilious demeanor of President Orne, switches would have been arranged for when the wires were strung last year, and his company would have been saved a vast deal of unnecessary trouble. A switch is used at the junction of Essex and Washington streets, Salem, and similar ones may be agreed upon by the companies for use on our Square. An order was passed by the Board, requiring that electric cars be slowed up to five miles an hour in passing cross streets. This order is undoubtedly necessary to the public safety, but it will dispel the illusion of rapid transit.

Daniel B. Lord, has an interesting relic of the early days of the fire department in this town. It is a roster of the first company dated January 16, 1815, and signed by the selectmen of the town. It reads as follows: "At a meeting of the Selectmen of the town of Danvers, January 16, 1815, appointed the following persons as engine-men for Engine No. 1, for the year ensuing, viz: Wm. M. Little, Oliver Saunders, Charles W. Symonds, Daniel Proctor, Nath. Watson, George Shore, Timothy Buxton, Joshua Buxton, Stephen Reed, David Buxton, Jonathan Shore, David Osborn, Jr., Eben S. Upton, Daniel Osborn, 3d, Benj. Jacobs." The town fathers at that time were Jonathan Walcott, James Brown, Nath'l Putnam, John Page, Nathan Felton. Should the veteran firemen get new quarters for meetings of the association, it is the intention of Mr. Lord to have the document framed and hang it on the walls of their room. Rev. A. F. Welch will repeat his Fast Day sermon at the Gospel Temperance meeting in Franklin Hall, tomorrow, at 5.30 o'clock.

The Lynn & Boston Railway Company is relaying the tracks in South Peabody. A heavy T rail is being used. The electric equipment will soon follow.

John O'Shea, who succeeded to the business of his father at the old tannery on Grove street, has removed his family to Malden, where he will have charge of the tannery of Webster & Co.

The Salem Oratio Society have decided to present the Harvard Glee Club at their first concert and the Salem Ladies' Concert will be second in the series. Over 1100 tickets have been sold.

A horse belonging to Dow the milkman ran away on Lowell street Thursday morning. The horse freed himself from the carriage and dashed through the street and square at a rapid pace. He was captured at Clark's mill.

An incipient strike was inaugurated at Upton's Glue works this week, by six girls who receive $4.50 a week for spreading glue. Their demands were refused, and they went out. The next day boys were put in their places.

A temperance social gathering is to be held in Franklin and Temperance Halls next Thursday evening. Rev. Mr. Ainsworth will preside. There will be some speaking and singing, and a general social hour is anticipated.

The Murray Club is preparing a novelty in the musical line in the shape of a jubilee concert which will be presented at the Universalist vestry, on Friday evening, April 17th. A mixed chorus of twenty-four voices have been rehearsing for several weeks, and will render the original plantation and revival melodies of slavery days, with all the fervor of the genuine jubilee singers, color only will be counterfeit. Sojo and quartette singing will add attractiveness to the programme. Some twelve or more years ago the club gave a similar concert in the vestry, which was so well received that it had to be repeated in the Institute. Many of that chorus are members of this.

CHAPTER II. DISASTER.

Daniel Fanning had been burdened in early life with the inheritance of a modest fortune. Having no faintest trace of business faculty and a strong inclination to study he had chosen his profession without regard to its emoluments, and had begun practice without caring whether he should make it lucrative or not. His income was sufficient for his moderate wants, and his capital was so invested as to give him no concern whatever. His guardian had handed over the accounts when he was 21, and had bade him farewell without emotion, having no interest in him personally and being greatly relieved at the thought that the responsibility was ended. He had no relatives, so far as he knew, and no intimate friend. Even at college he had found books more attractive than men, and had shunned intimacies after one unfortunate experience.

To him, sitting one evening in his office alone, came the demon of unrest. It said: "Why do you sit here through the best years of your life? There is a whole world to see, and what have you seen of it? What is there to keep you here when there is so much on earth for you to learn by observation?"

It was an idle thought born of nothing, perhaps, but on the very next day he was making his preparations for a year or more of travel. It mattered nothing whether he should be gone for one year or five. He notified his patients that he was about to leave the city—that there were not many to notify. He arranged to store his books and gave notice to the people from whom he hired his office that he was going abroad and would sail at once.

All this was an easy task quickly done. After he had completed it and was ready to sail, the thought came suddenly that it would be well to travel for a while in his own country before sailing, and he started for the west. Three weeks later he was in Bloomington, Ills.

Sitting at nightfall in the smoking room of a hotel, there he became aware that a stranger was looking closely at him, but he gave the matter no special thought until the stranger came up and said quietly, "You are my prisoner, Corkins."

"You are my prisoner, Corkins."

Then he looked up with a smile, being really amused for the moment, and said: "You are mistaken in the person, my good fellow. My name is not Corkins; it is Fanning."

"That's very well played," said the detective, for such the stranger was. "You have got a good nerve, sure. But you know you can't fool me, don't you? I know you too well. Now, will you come with me quietly or not?" And he showed a policeman's shield.

"I will go quietly, of course, if you are in earnest," said Fanning, "but, really, this is a most absurd mistake."

"Very sensible of you, too," said the detective, grinning, "but you know you can't play that game. You're too well known. I wonder at you coming back here so soon."

"Coming back!" exclaimed Fanning, in some surprise. "I never was in this town in my life till today."

"Very well, stick to it, if that's your lay," rejoined the other with some disgust, "but it's remarkably foolish when there are so many here that know you." And he made no further attempt to talk with his prisoner, but led him straightway to the police station, where Fanning thought that a simple explanation would set things right at once. To his dismay, however, the chief of police and the sergeant at the desk seemed to recognize him as positively as the detective had done. He became alarmed.

"At least tell me who you think I am, and what I am accused of," he exclaimed, when he found that his explanations were of no avail.

"Plays it well, doesn't he?" said the chief with a smile before answering, and the others laughed. Then he said: "You are accused, John Corkins, of burglariously entering Hayes & Mead's jewelry store and stealing $4,000 in money from their safe."

Fanning would have remonstrated further, but seeing that it was useless he wisely forbore and submitted to being searched and locked up for the night. "It is wretchedly unpleasant," he said to himself, "but no doubt it will be all cleared up in the morning. It cannot be that any police justice will hold me on the charge of burglary." And he smoked a cigar which he had been allowed to retain, and tried with rather poor success to sleep.

But in the morning he found that it was altogether possible for such a thing to happen. The magistrate before whom he was brought for examination was a stern though not unkindly man, who seemed disposed to do exact justice, and who listened attentively to what Fanning had to say, but the testimony of the police was so positive that he had really no discretion in the matter.

"If you are really a New York physician," he said to the prisoner, "you will have no trouble in establishing your identity. In the mean time I shall hold you for trial in $10,000 bail. Have you any counsel?"

On learning that the prisoner had not considered it necessary to secure a lawyer, the judge smiled somewhat grimly and told him that no obstacle would be put in the way of his doing it, and then Fanning was led away to his cell. He was confused, almost stunned, by the gravity of his situation, and when the keeper spoke, not unkindly, to him he only answered: "I must think it over. I do not know what to do."

The more he thought the more serious the case seemed, although no doubt of his acquittal yet entered his mind. To give bail was impossible without sending to New York, and he was reluctant to apply to any of his acquaintances for such a favor. Possibly it would be useless to do so. A bondsman would have to own real estate in the county, he remembered. But when the case should come to trial there would be no difficulty in establishing his identity. Meantime it would be well to secure a lawyer, as the judge had intimated.

He did so, but the result of his first interview with Mr. Playfair, who was recommended to him, was that that gentleman, having talked with the police before he saw Fanning, decided in his own mind that he had a criminal, and a remarkably foolish one, for a client. He hinted as much after he had questioned Fanning. "Remember," he said, "that it is the worst possible policy to conceal anything from your counsel."

Thereat Fanning flew in a rage—a most uncommon thing for him to do—and came near quarreling with his best and only friend, though he was only a hired attorney. However, Playfair apologized—for he had pocketed a very liberal fee—and smoothed his client down by promising to exert himself and do the very best he could. To do him justice, he really intended to do the best he could—for himself. He had no hope of clearing his client, but at least he could get considerable money out of him. It so happened that he wanted to go to New York on some business of his own, and he suggested—partly to try his client's sincerity, but also with an eye to personal thrift—that if his expenses were paid he would go himself and bring back one or two witnesses who would testify to Fanning's identity.

The philosophical reader will perceive two simple but invaluable morals in what followed. First, that when justice is dependent upon legal processes it will not do to neglect one point of proof, no matter how insignificant it may seem or how overwhelming other evidence may be. The second is that circumstantial evidence is not worth the trouble of remembering, if it can, on any hypothesis whatever, be interpreted in more than one way. Innocent men have been hanged on circumstantial evidence, because the true explanation of the circumstances seemed far fetched and unreasonable. And how should this not be so when circumstances happened as they did to convict Fanning?

Yes, he would send Playfair to New York certainly, and would pay his expenses, and be indebted greatly to him for going. It happened that on starting on his travels he had closed his bank account, drawing out almost $4,000, and he had nearly the whole amount with him when he was arrested, a fact which told against him afterward. Money was of little value to him in comparison with the establishment of his innocence, and he unhesitatingly counted out as much as Playfair asked for, seeing which the latter instantly reproached himself for the last time in his life for not asking for more. He contented himself, however, with the thought that the case was still young, and asked for instructions as to how he should proceed when he reached New York.

Fanning reflected for a few moments. Then he said: "Naturally I do not want the story of this thing to get about. It will be enough if you go to Dr. Sandringham and to Mr. James Friend. The doctor knows me professionally and Mr. Friend has charge of some business interests of mine. I will write letters to them and you can explain the case fully."

"Would it not be well to take your photograph also?" suggested Playfair. "I never had a photograph taken," said Fanning.

"We can have one taken easily enough," said the other.

"What possible necessity is there for that?" asked Fanning. "The letters will be enough."

The photograph, therefore, which might very probably have changed the whole current of affairs afterward was not taken, and Playfair, after two or three more interviews with his client and after arranging with the district attorney for a trial within a month's time, started for New York.

Fanning, left to himself in a most disagreeable predicament, summoned all his philosophy to his aid, and succeeded fairly well in reconciling himself to the situation. He had always prided himself on his philosophy, and felt a thrill of gratified vanity in finding that it was serviceable stuff and not mere theory.

"I am in prison, it is true," he reasoned, "but luckily it is for no fault of my own, therefore no disgrace really attaches to the fact, and the seeming disgrace will soon be wiped away. There is no one on earth who will suffer any pain or suspense on my account, and for this once I can congratulate myself on the fact that I am entirely alone in the world. Meantime a month is taken out of my life. Or is it really so? I am having a disagreeable experience, but after all it is an experience, and I can make it serve in the development of character if I choose."

He did so choose, and spent the time studying and meditating. He was allowed to use his own money, and lived well at exorbitant prices, besides getting the use of what few books he wanted, for the jail servants were ready to do almost anything for him so long as he paid them.

As the day of his trial drew near, however, he began to be very apprehensive. He had only heard once from his lawyer, having received a single letter from him. Written on the day of his arrival in New York, and of course containing no information beyond the announcement of arrival. He was seriously angry and even a little worried by this outrageous neglect, but when he sent a letter to Mr. Playfair's office to make inquiries, that gentleman's clerk called at the jail, and informed him that he had just received a letter from his principal in which the latter said that everything was progressing favorably, but that he had been detained longer than he expected to be. He would certainly return, however, in time for Dr. Fanning's trial. It was very unsatisfactory, but Fanning did not see what he could do, situated as he was, excepting to trust to his counsel, especially as everybody of whom he inquired assured him that Mr. Playfair was the leading lawyer of the place (which was not true), and that he had never proven derelict in the performance of his professional duties, which was true enough in a sense.

To do Mr. Playfair entire justice it must be said that he had a conscience, though it was subject to legal rules of practice and to the decisions of the courts. He therefore easily persuaded himself that he was doing his full duty by Fanning. And this he did the more easily because he felt convinced that his client was really John Corkins.

On reaching New York he went first to Mr. James Friend, finding him to be a reserved, dignified looking man of middle age, who carried on (according to the sign on the door of his Wall street office) the business of a "banker and broker."

Mr. Friend listened quietly while Mr. Playfair explained his errand, and he read the letter which Fanning had written without the slightest change of countenance. Mr. Friend was an excellent poker player. While he read and listened he was busily analyzing a difficult situation and dallying with a tremendous temptation. He had speculated heavily of late and had lost heavily. Fanning's property was in his hands, and because of Fanning's trust in him and great carelessness about money matters it was not properly secured. If Fanning could be gotten out of the way for a few years all might be well. If, on the other hand, Fanning should call for any very considerable amount at once it might mean disaster and even complete ruin.

He reasoned it all out rapidly before speaking. Then he said in a most business-like manner: "This is a most surprising thing, Mr. Playfair. Dr. Fanning certainly left New York about the time this burglary you mention was committed, but he went to Europe. I do not know his exact address just at this moment, but it is impossible that he should be in Illinois now."

Even while he was speaking Mr. Friend realized that he was taking a long risk, and he trembled inwardly lest Playfair should press him with questions. The lawyer, however, only saw confirmation of his own theory and was not disposed to be critical.

"But the letter," he said. "You certainly know whether that was written by Fanning or by an imposter."

"The letter," said Friend, "was certainly written by some one who knows something about Fanning's business, and it even has a resemblance to his handwriting, but it is not a close resemblance, and if you will notice there are two errors in spelling in it. Now Dr. Fanning is a highly educated man."

"Yes, I noticed that," said the lawyer, pluming himself on his own astuteness, and so this trifle helped to lock the prison doors on an innocent man.

"Now what on earth can that Corkins be thinking of to send me to New York on such an errand as this?" thought Playfair as he left Wall street. He saw no more of Friend, and did not for a moment suspect that that reputable looking man drank much more brandy than was good for him that afternoon.

"I will go to Dr. Sandringham, though," said Playfair to himself. "Corkins pays, and I'll do what I agreed to. Besides, it is interesting."

Dr. Sandringham was an extremely busy man, but very conscientious. Yes, he knew Fanning, but had not seen him very lately. A most promising young man, who stood well in the profession. What! In prison in Illinois? Impossible! Oh! a man there who claimed to be Fanning. Well, that could be easily settled. Fanning's office was right around the corner. Most remarkable thing!

And the doctor called his secretary, and asked him if he would go to Fanning's office and ask that gentleman to step around at once on important business. It was done, and the secretary presently returned saying that Dr. Fanning had "sailed for Europe about a month ago."

What the servant at the door had said to the secretary was, "Sure, he left here a month ago, an' I believe he went to Yarrup." The secretary's unintentional lie, however, tallied with Friend's fiendish one, and together they seemed to be proof absolute.

Dr. Sandringham hesitated. He was bewildered, and had Playfair produced Fanning's photograph he would certainly have investigated further, but he was expected at two deathbeds, and when the lawyer gave up the case, as he did on the moment, the physician assumed that it must be one of attempted imposition, and straightway forgot all about it in the multiplicity of his own affairs.

Playfair was also very busy. He did not write to Fanning because he had no time to waste on a hopeless case. He did, however, meet his obligations so far as to return to Bloomington in time to see his client get a "fair trial." And his client, with a policy more cautious than wise, refrained from upbraiding him lest he should be angered and so slight the case. The result of this was that Playfair was confirmed in his opinion of Fanning's guilt and more puzzled than ever to account for his clumsy attempt to prove himself somebody else.

As for Fanning, the announcement by his lawyer on the very eve of the trial that he, the real Fanning, was in Europe was so stupefying that he could not decide what to do. The whole affair seemed so monstrously impossible that he actually found himself wondering whether he might not be insane. Then he checked himself, remembering that insanity often begins that way. The only thing to do, so far as he could see at the moment, was to go into court and tell his story clearly and calmly and rely on his lawyer. It was preposterous to suppose that he could be convicted.

He had a fair trial; fair, that is, in the hearing and consideration of all that was presented. It was proven that the burglary had been committed, and that beyond reasonable doubt John Corkins had committed it. And the prosecution presented him as John Corkins.

Then Fanning was sworn and told his story. He explained his possession of the amount of money in question and his presence in the city as they have already been explained in this story, and assured the court that he could easily be identified in New York.

As against this the prosecution produced the three policemen already mentioned and the warden of the Illinois state prison, who all swore positively that the prisoner was John Corkins beyond the possibility of a doubt. The warden presented the detailed written description of John Corkins taken down when he had previously been sent to prison for a similar crime, and it tallied exactly with Fanning's appearance, even to the location of a small mole on his neck.

To do Playfair justice once more he fought hard for his client on technicalities, and insisted that the identification was a mistaken one; but the "proof" was too conclusive. Judge and jury alike believed that Fanning's story was a bold and by no means an ingenious lie. He was found guilty and sentenced to ten years of hard labor in the state prison.

CHAPTER III. DISCOVERY.

"I wish to know what this story means."

It has been mentioned that Miss Latimer had a scrap book. Now, one scrap book differs from another scrap book as the north star differs from an indistinguishable atom in the Milky Way, but any scrap book is or may be valuable. The man or woman who keeps a scrap book as it may be kept becomes dangerous because powerful. If knowledge really be power little bits of knowledge rescued from among the flotsam and jetsam of the printing press and preserved in a fashion that enables the possessor to put his finger upon them become like so many dynamite cartridges stored away for possible use and capable of most effective explosion. It is not given to everybody to realize this; but as for me I pray that mine enemy may never keep a scrap book. If he should I hope he may never know how to keep it well.

Miss Latimer's scrap book, it may be said, was nothing more than one of those huge, mishapen volumes, into which are pasted, without order, and often without reason, such "scraps" (properly so called) as may chance to strike the owner's fancy at the moment they are perceived. These books become in time stored, as many men's minds are stored, with a miscellaneous, unsorted collection of general misinformation, of no possible use to the owner or to any of the rest of mankind, excepting on those rare occasions when misinformation explodes in the hand of the holder and shatters him in minute bits.

Even so poor a thing as one of these gaudily bound, rattle-tang books, however, may have its use. The name of Allah, as the pious Mussulman remembers, may chance to be inscribed on any piece of paper that blows a-down the wind. So it happened that Miss Latimer came into possession of a piece of paper without which a whole story would have gone wrong. It came about through a curious development of modern civilization. Partly also through the economy of modern publishers, which impels them to print on both sides of the same piece of paper.

Inasmuch as no human being has time to read all that may be written and printed in these later days on any subject that may be of interest to him or her a new industry has sprung up within ten years. People read newspapers for other people, sending to their customers such clippings as may bear upon any given topic at so much per clipping. By employing such an agency the student may be reasonably sure of seeing all that is said in a thousand newspapers on the subject that interests him, whereas he could never search all those thousand publications if he had forty-eight hours of spare time every day.

So it happened that Miss Latimer, after she had returned to her city home and had taken up the particular line of study that interested her for the time, sent an order to one of the bureaus where such work is done, for all the publications that might appear about the cultivation of orchids.

To her presently then came various clippings about orchids; reports of horticulturists, alleged witticisms, descriptions of collections of orchids, philosophical essays upon the luxury of millionaires as exemplified by orchids of fabulous price, and untold varieties of comments, for orchids were just then the fashionable craze. And among all these scraps came one from a Bloomington paper. She wondered, as she sat with this last in her hand, whether it were the paper or the whole world that was upside down, for on the opposite side of the paper from that where the orchids were she read an account by the local reporter of a stay of proceedings asked for by Lawyer Playfair on behalf of John Corkins, recently convicted of burglary, the prisoner having asserted, in spite of the positive evidence adduced at his trial, that he was not John Corkins at all, but that he was Daniel Fanning, M. D., of New York city. It appeared that the stay of proceedings was sought for as a preliminary to a demand for a new trial, on which the prisoner promised to introduce new testimony. And she further read that the court had denied the stay and had censured the lawyer for bad practice in making such a request on such frivolous grounds. And she read moreover that the prisoner, still asserting that he was not John Corkins, had actually been sentenced to the state prison to serve for ten years.

It was a technical sort of report, and she could not fully understand it. The reporter seemed to assume that the reader had seen a previous story of the trial, but she gained a general understanding from the few paragraphs, and as she read she wondered what it could all mean. Was it possible that this man—Daniel Fanning, whom she—well, whom she remembered, was a convict?

Over and over again she read the brief story, and wondered as she read what it could possibly mean. It could not be true, she thought, but even as she tried to think so stories came to her mind of innocent men who had suffered mistaken punishment, and she presently began to consider what she could do. And the eminently sensible suggestion came to her that she could at least find out about it. Fortunately it was early in the day, and she was within a few minutes in her carriage driving toward her lawyer's office.

"Mr. Willwright," she said on entering, "I wish to know at once what this story means," and she handed him the slip.

The old lawyer read the story carefully, and said without hesitation, "I should say that it means that the judge was entirely right in censuring that lawyer for a very irregular motion."

"Oh! both the judge and his counsel," exclaimed Miss Latimer impatiently. "What I want to know is whether that is Dr. Daniel Fanning who has just been sentenced to the state prison, or whether it is a burglar? I happen to know," and here she changed color ever so little, "that Dr. Fanning left the city some weeks ago."

"Well," said Mr. Willwright, somewhat quizzically, "even that important fact is hardly a sufficient ground for assuming that he has been convicted for burglary under an assumed name in Illinois."

"Now please don't joke about it," said Miss Latimer. "Is it possible that such a terrible mistake should occur?"

"Yes," replied the lawyer with some reluctance, "it is possible that such a thing might occur. Courts are human institutions and they do make mistakes sometimes. But it is highly improbable that it has really occurred."

"Then I wish you would find out all about it at once," exclaimed Miss Latimer. "Can you let me know to-day?"

Mr. Willwright smiled indulgently. Miss Latimer was a good client, for he had charge of all her property and he could afford to humour her whims. "I imagine," he said pleasantly, "that I may learn in a week or two."

Miss Latimer's eyes flashed. "And leave an innocent man in prison a week or two! What is the telegraph for? Won't you ask Mr. Playfair all about it and let me know?"

"Certainly I will," said Mr. Willwright, dropping his playfulness when he saw how earnest his client was. "Shall I use your name in the inquiry?" he asked.

"By no means," said Miss Latimer, blushing deeply this time. People sneered at Miss Latimer for betraying her feelings. They said it showed a lack of good breeding. Other people admired her all the more for it.

A few hours later a messenger from Mr. Willwright's office brought her a long telegram from Playfair to Willwright in which the main facts of the case were recited. It concluded: "My client has insisted on retaining additional counsel, and on sending again to New York, but in view of the positive nature of the identification the clearest possible evidence will be necessary to upset it."

This was true enough. Mr. Playfair had had a very unpleasant interview with his client after the trial. Fanning was for a time almost beside himself with rage at the mismanagement of his case, but realizing the gravity of the situation had calmed himself, and instead of antagonizing Playfair had instructed him to continue the fight, only insisting that another lawyer should also be retained. He could do no more, placed as he was, and was now in a fever of anxiety waiting for evidence that should clear him on a new trial. Playfair's first motion had been made for delay, and an appeal had afterward been taken on technical grounds.

The new evidence came sooner than he expected. When Miss Latimer read Dr. Sandringham's name she ordered her carriage again and was shortly in his office. She had known him all her life. That busy man was greatly disquieted by her questions. He remembered Playfair's visit at once, and the possibility that he had by constructive negligence been a party to an innocent man's conviction for crime was most painful.

"God bless my soul!" he exclaimed in real distress. "Is it possible that such a mistake could be made?"

"It seems impossible," replied Miss Latimer, "but it also seems very much as though it had been made," and she showed him Playfair's telegram.

Suddenly as he read the old doctor exclaimed: "Corkins! Why, that is the name of a man who was shot this morning by a policeman. He is dying now at Bellevue hospital."

"Dying!" exclaimed Miss Latimer, as excited as he at a coincidence that was to her perfect confirmation of all her fears. "Then come with me at once."

And before the doctor could collect himself sufficiently to remonstrate against going out in office hours he was in her carriage, and they were driving toward the hospital where he had seen the "interesting case" a few hours before.

It was the John Corkins they were in search of. He had been fully identified after he had been shot as the individual whose picture was in every rogues' gallery in the country, and as Miss Latimer was led by the physician to the bedside of the man who had just died her heart stood still for a moment. The resemblance was so strong that it seemed to her as if she were looking on the dead face of a man she might have loved.

That very night a capable man from Mr. Willwright's office started for Illinois with ample evidence, and after a slight delay Fanning was honorably acquitted of the grave charge. Not until after he had returned to New York to settle accounts with Mr. James Friend did he learn all that had been done for him by somebody. Mr. Friend had a bad half hour with him, and after making restitution to the last dollar found himself on the verge of bankruptcy.

Fanning's next business was to call on Mr. Willwright, as he supposed, to settle accounts with him also. To his amazement that gentleman not only refused to be paid, but declared that he had been retained by a friend of Dr. Fanning's whose name he was not at liberty to divulge. This was intolerable, and he said, with much dignity:

"There are some obligations, sir, that a gentleman cannot rest under. I cannot relieve myself of the debt of gratitude I owe to your client, but I can replace the money he has spent, and that I insist upon." And he signed a blank check and laid it on the lawyer's desk.

Mr. Willwright's face lightened. In fact he almost smiled. "I will tell him, and I have no doubt he will appreciate your feelings," he said, coolly putting the check in his pocket.

But when Fanning saw Dr. Sandringham he found that gentleman less scrupulous. Miss Latimer had made him also promise that he would never tell Fanning who it was that had roused him to action, but he had notions of his own, and his promise was made with mental reservations. "If that child supposes that I am going to let two such persons drift away from each other in ignorance," he said to himself, "she does not know me as well as I know her."

And therefore it was that they did not drift apart. On the contrary they drifted closer and closer together until one day, in the fullness of time, Fanning said: "Margaret, you have come to be all in the world to me. Will you marry me?"

"No," she said very gently. "I care too much for you to allow you to give yourself to me from a sense of gratitude."

"You do care for me, then?" he said eagerly. "You love me?"

She arose, and for once he saw her eyes flash as they sometimes did. "How dare you!" she began, but then she stopped. She saw again that he was not, in the very least, afraid of her. It was that which had won her so long before.

He smiled proudly. "Margaret," he said very quietly, "do you think anything on earth would make me tell a lie?"

"No," she said.

"Then listen. I love you with my whole heart. Will you marry me?" And she did.

THE END.

Criticising a Masterpiece.

A strange criticism of Rembrandt's famous portrait of "The Gilder" was overheard by two young artists at the Metropolitan museum recently.

The young men were examining the portrait for perhaps the hundredth time. As on the previous ninety-nine occasions they had grown enthusiastic over the wonderful art displayed in its execution.

As is well known, the picture is that of Jan Dimer, a Dutch artist, who is habited in the costume of his country and age. One of the most marvelous pieces of work of the entire portrait is the reproduction of a huge starched linen ruff that the man wears about his neck.

The ruff almost stands out from the canvas, so skillfully was it reproduced by the marvelous hand of the master.

The two young men were almost ready to fall down before the portrait to worship it when they heard the sharp, nasal tones of a countryman speaking behind them. The words they heard were, "Oh, Maria, come here and see this man with his head sticking through a cheese."

The two men instinctively moved away. "What a profanation!" said one to the other.

"Yes, indeed," was the reply. "I wonder if it is possible for these people ever to appreciate art. I believe there are at least five hundred artists who would be willing to lay down their lives if they could but produce that ruff, to say nothing of the portrait itself."—New York Herald.

Where Woman Leads.

Which living novelist has produced the greatest number of books? A lady, in the person of Mrs. Oliphant, claims this honor. This popular writer has, up to the present date, produced seventy-three novels and six biographies, besides contributing largely to periodical literature.

Miss Braddon has given us fifty-five novels; Miss Yonge, fifty-three; Quind, or Louise de la Ramee, thirty-three; Mr. William Black, twenty-eight; Mr. Besant, twenty-six and Mr. Haggard, fourteen. An American author, who died not long ago, wrote between two and three hundred sensation novels. Very few of these attained any great celebrity, but his copyrights brought him over $30,000 a year for several of the last years of his life.

The most prolific novelist the world has ever seen was Lope de Vega (1562-1635). It is calculated that 21,300,000 of his lines were actually printed, and no less than 1,500 plays of his composition were acted upon the stage. Montalvan records the fact of his having written fifteen acts in fifteen days, making five plays in a fortnight. If not remembered for quality of work, Vega holds a high place in literary annals for quantity.—London Tit-Bits.

Diseases were supposed in ancient times to be caused directly by the displeasure of the gods, a belief that has not yet disappeared from the minds of savage tribes. Evil spirits also played their part, the two beliefs being connected more or less intimately. Hence the intervention of priests and kings, to whom attached a sacred character, and the idea that the latter could cure by a touch which prevailed until a recent date. The faith in the healing principle presumed to emanate from the royal person was really part and parcel of the belief in the divine right of kings, that is, their right to rule regardless of the wishes of their subjects.

From all these causes came that mixture of superstition, metaphysics and medicine that characterized the practice of the healing art in the middle ages, when doctors wore gowns and a special form of head covering and talked indiscriminately law, religion, astrology and medicine. Astrologers made health and longevity to depend on the constellations, witches and sorcerers on occult causes, and both dealt to a certain extent in remedies that depended rather on tradition than on science. From all these germs, with something of the druggist and the barber—who were in those old times more or less connected with medicine—thrown in, came the full fledged physician of today.—San Francisco Chronicle.

A Good Place to Keep Flowers.

"Men really have more gumption than we give them credit for," commented a young woman the other day, with the air of having made a remark; "yesterday afternoon a man I know asked me to stop with him at a florist's, and select an orchid for a boutonniere to wear at a dance last evening. I did, and when one was chosen I was surprised to see him reject the paper which the florist put over it, take off his hat, and carefully tucked the delicate blossom in the lining band. 'I always carry my coat flowers there,' he explained, and I thought it quite a clever device."—San Francisco Argonaut.

The question is often asked by amateurs "Do bees make wax?" The answer is Yes. Wax is a natural secretion of the honey bees, formed in delicate scales on the under side of the abdomen. While it is formed to some extent in activity, it is formed in largest quantities in repose, while the bees are quietly clustering inside the hive. Wax is used by the bees for comb building. The production of each pound requires in the neighborhood of twenty pounds of honey.

Another thing that puzzles beginners is how to render old combs without an extractor. We give a plan recommended by Root in his work on bee culture. It is simply a large honey barrel having a basket made of perforated zinc suspended in it by a hoop that rests on the top of the barrel. A steam pipe throws a strong jet of steam into this basket, and all one has to do is to shovel on the old comb in any quantity. The wax is found in the basket.

A Ministerial Conductor.

"We have had some curious men on this line," said a Third avenue car conductor, "but I think about as strange as any was one who had formerly been a Methodist minister. How he came to get on a street car I don't know, but he was a wholesome, manly sort of man, and he did his work well, though he had at first a singular way of doing things. He had been on the front platform one day collecting some fares, and when he got back to the rear platform a passenger told him a man had got on at Houston street and was sitting inside. The conductor stood in the doorway and looked in, but he couldn't locate him. Then he said with perfect calmness, 'Will the gentleman who got on at Houston street please rise?' The gentleman who got on at Houston street stood up like a man and paid his fare."—New York Sun.

They Can't Do It.

There are two things a full blooded Indian cannot learn to do—box or wrestle. He is all right as a runner, jumper and rough and tumble, but anything like science puts him out. His way is to bite and kick and pull hair, and he can't be broken in to stand up and take one on the nose.—Detroit Free Press.

It is said that Daniel Webster was the first editor of the first college paper published in this country, the initial number appearing at Dartmouth in 1800. These journals now number 190 in the United States, while but 1 is issued in England.

The best plan of supplying charcoal to the poultry is to burn corn, not black but nicely browned; give them all that they will eat up clean.

ESSEX COUNTY.

A little son of Benjamin W. Roberts, the apothecary at North Beverly, was bitten on the ear by a bull dog last week. The dog was killed.

Dr. Coggin, the celebrated oculist, has retired from the medical and surgical staff of the Salem Hospital.

Early Monday morning as Rowell Batchelder, watchman in No. 2 mill, Hamilton corporation, Amesbury, was crossing the mill yard on his rounds, the earth under his feet gave way and he found himself at the bottom of the flume, about 15 feet from the surface, with no means of getting out. His calls for help brought the firemen at the boiler house and night police who soon rescued him from his unpleasant situation. Fortunately there was no water in the flume, it being shut off at night. He escaped without injury. Workmen are repairing the break.

THE STRIKE inaugurated last August, in Lynn, has been declared off. It has been a complete triumph for the manufacturers.

THE BILL to tax inheritances above the value of $10,000, has passed the lower branch of the New York Legislature. This we deem one of the wisest pieces of legislation of modern times. It tends in a measure to prevent the large aggregations of wealth in families, and at the same time affords an easy and reasonably certain means of levying taxes, lightening the load for the ordinary tax-payer without imposing onerous burdens on the legatees.

THE RETIREMENT of Edwin Booth from the stage, deprives America of her greatest actor, and leaves a void that may not be filled for generations to come. Such genius as his is of rare occurrence, and humanity will be compelled to wait patiently for a counterpart. With characteristic modesty, the great dramatist appears likely to withdraw from public life without any formal farewell, such as is the custom among lesser lights.

THE THREATS of war that wend their way across the Atlantic, from Italy's seat of government, will cause little disturbance in the State Department or among commercial circles. If ever any blame is traced to the door of the United States government, just reparation will doubtless be made, but so far, the cause of the warlike murmurings appear to be mere local, state affairs, over which the Federal government has no control. If Louisiana sees fit to permit the matter to go unnoticed we do not see that anything can be done by any other powers. Unless the general government chooses to offer a gratuity by way of indemnity.

BY THE fire in Lowell last Sunday, the city loses nearly all of its valuable library, which comprised about 40,000 volumes, a great many of which can never be replaced. The war relics presented by Gen. Butler were also swept away by the flames.

The slight resistance opposed to the progress of the flames by the fire-proof door between Masonic Temple and Irving Block, proves how little such devices can be relied upon in cases of emergency. The pecuniary loss to the city is $40,000, on which there is insurance of $20,000 in local companies. The losses to other parties aggregate about $110,000 more. Few are fully insured and some have none at all.

The fire originated in a store in the lower part of a building adjoining Masonic Temple, and is said to have been caused by boys igniting some waste paper in a box.

VERMONT'S SENATOR, George F. Edmunds, has sent to Gov. Page a resignation of his seat in Congress, to take effect November 1st, and officially notified Vice President Morton. Mr. Edmunds has been in the Senate continuously, since April 5, 1866. He was born in Richmond, Vt., February 1, 1828. He was elected to the legislature in 1854 and presided as speaker of the House for three years. Subsequently he served a term in the Vermont Senate, over which body he presided in 1861-62.

In reply to the letter of resignation, Gov. expressed deep regret at his final determination to retire from the Senate.

His retirement has been rumored for some time, but being contradicted by those who ought to know, the announcement of his withdrawal has caused considerable surprise, mingled with a deep regret among the Republicans of Vermont, as well as other states.

AT THE monthly dinner of the Massachusetts Club, at Young's Hotel, last Saturday, Senator Dawes made a speech that was highly interesting to his hearers. He dwelt at length upon the past labor and progress of the Republican party and narrated many incidents that had passed out of the minds of many, and perhaps were never known to some of the younger persons present.

The Boston Globe in commenting on the speech of the Senator, after some suggestions about his unfamiliarity with the people he has for so many years represented in the United States Senate, goes on to say that he was listened to with that respect always shown to strangers. The editor denominate the address "a good regulation speech," and though he laments the degeneracy of the Republican party, is forced to admit that it had its foundation in usefulness, and enjoyed a term of honest prosperity.

Such admissions are quite refreshing coming from a paper that is devoted to the cause of the opposition. We do not expect an avowal of thorough approval of Republicanism. To admit that the party ever had any honesty of purpose or principle is quite as much as can be hoped for.

THE ABORTIVE attempt of Sir Charles Tupper to make a treaty between the United States and the Dominion of Canada, has a slight flavor of the ludicrous about it, that might have been spared the delegation had they received and heeded a telegram sent from Washington to Ottawa last Saturday. The failure to receive or notice the message, caused Sir Charles and his pompous retinue to visit Washington last Monday and leave again, after a few minutes consultation at the State Department, in a manner more common to a commercial traveler than a diplomatic corps. President Harrison has expressed a desire to be present when negotiations are in progress, and he evidently means to be too.

A suggestion has been made by the Dominion government that a treaty upon the basis of that of 1854 would be desirable, but it is not probable that she will be accommodated with a compliance of that request by the Secretary of State. Mr. Blaine was in full accord with the vote of Congress in 1865 by which a resolution was adopted requesting the President to give the proper notice to terminate the treaty, and he is not known to have changed his opinions upon the subject materially since. When another treaty is made, it is safe to assume that the United States will be recognized as a factor and not a cipher, as she seems to have been regarded heretofore.

Death of the Great Showman.

P. T. Barnum, whose name has for many years been familiar to almost every household in the land, died Tuesday evening at his home in Bridgeport, Conn., at the age of eighty years and nine months.

Among those whose genius and business it has been to entertain the world, Barnum must be regarded by far the most extraordinary. He was a general, a man who could organize, combine and manage, and carry on a show as a statesman can a government. He has been called the master of humbug, and English poets and European novelists have used his name as a synonym for imposition on the people. The cry of Islam, "Great is Allah and Mohammed is his prophet" was parodied for him to "Great is Barnum and 'Humbug' is his profit." And this in fact was his beginning of fame. He opened his show business with sheer frauds,—Joice Heth, the nurse of Washington, over 160 years old; the "woolly horse" that was said to have been captured by Fremont's expedition over the Rocky mountains; the "Feejee Mermaid," and scores of other curiosities, besides innumerable tricks designed to attract the public and succeeding therein,—these were his stock in trade for many years. But at the same time he interested the people in such genuine objects of rarity as General Tom Thumb; in such great matters as the singing of Jenny Lind, and in a multitude of curious things in his museums that were genuine. And for many years Mr. Barnum has known that nothing can be manufactured and imposed upon the people that is more strange than the wonders of the world, and in his "Greatest show on earth" he has grouped such interesting collections that it has been really a contribution to education to attend them. When some years ago he brought here specimens of many races in the yet unfamiliar quarters of the globe,—Zulus from South Africa, the wild Soudanese, the Todas of Afghanistan, and others,—it was a lesson in ethnology to see them. For the rest Mr. Barnum was a typical Yankee. He had no really high ideals, but he grew into certain principles of life, the deduction of his experience, and has for several years been noted as an advocate of temperance, and has even been drawn into an expression of his religious belief as a Universalist.

The life of this Hercules among showmen has been published in book form and is familiar to most, if not all, of our readers. He was born in Bethel, Conn., July 5, 1810. His father was a country innkeeper and trader. He had no education, except what was picked up by contact with men and affairs during his long career. Since he was 13 years old he has been obliged to rely upon his own efforts for subsistence.

DANA'S SARSAPARILLA CURE!

Authority has been granted to the city of Gloucester, to raise money for the 250th anniversary of the settlement of the town.

ESSEX COUNTY.

As we had occasion to visit the store of Almy, Bigelow & Washburn one day this week, we spent a little time in looking over the crowd of purchasers, and were gratified to see a large number of regular subscribers of the Press at the counters examining goods and making purchases. This enterprising firm have always been persistent and judicious advertisers, and we could not help thinking as we passed through the various departments filled with goods and purchasers, of the query sometimes raised by skeptics, "does advertising pay?" No more eloquent or emphatic reply can be made to that query than the success of such a firm as this. The growth of business of these gentlemen has been simply phenomenal, and all this prosperity is due to advertising combined, of course, with that enterprise which is always necessary to success in any line of business. The first requisite is to have the goods to sell, the next, to let everybody know it. Almy, Bigelow & Washburn never overlook any of the requisites.

The city of Haverhill and town of Bradford are to be united into one municipality.

In Beverly, nine hours will pass for a day's work after May 1.

Salem is taking commendable interest in the preservation of her old records.

John S. Williams, Esq., has been chosen Treasurer of the Salem Five-Cents Savings Bank in place of Charles H. Henderson, whose sudden death occurred recently.

The Ward Hill hotel, Bradford, is to be rebuilt, and work will be begun on the ruins at once.

Rev. F. W. Ryder of East Boston has decided to accept the call of the First Baptist church, Lawrence, and will at once enter upon his new field of labor.

Gloucester has 35 applications for liquor licenses, against 60 last year. The prices are $1200 for first class and $1500 for first and fourth.

Lynn has another "La Grippe" epidemic. Fatality is light.

Post 5, G. A. R. of Lynn held appropriate exercises at headquarters Monday night in commemoration of the 25th anniversary of the inception of the organization.

The Haverhill common council has passed an order that none but regular taxpayers and citizens be employed in the street department.

Michael J. Cavanagh and Mary A. McKeon were married in St. Joseph's church, Lynn, Monday afternoon, by Rev. Fr. Harrington. They will take up their residence in Providence. The groom is a brother of Edward Cavanagh, past grand master of the state lodge of Odd Fellows.

The annual ball of the Lawrence Police Relief Association which occurred in the City hall this week, netted $1000.

No opposition was offered, by the city of Salem, to the proposition to take more land around Wenham Lake. The Mayor and City Solicitor attended the hearing before the committee on Monday, as did also the Water Board.

The Naumkeag Street Railway Company is to relay its track from Beverly bridge to Peabody square for the greater part of the way. A heavier rail will be put down. Work begins on Bridge street this week.

Chas. Dudley has the contract to lay the rails for the Essex Electric Railroad extension to Salem Willows, and will begin work at once.

NOTICE.

DOGS MUST BE LICENSED BEFORE MAY FIRST.

Extracts from the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Every owner or keeper of a Dog of three months old or over, shall annually on or before the thirtieth day of April, cause it to be registered, numbered, described, and licensed for one year from the first day of the ensuing May, in the office of the clerk of the city or town wherein said dog is kept, and shall cause it to wear around its neck a collar distinctly marked with its owner's name and its registered number.

An owner of a dog may at any time have it licensed until the first day of the ensuing May; and a person becoming the owner or keeper of a dog after the first of May, not duly licensed, shall cause it to be registered, numbered, described and licensed as provided in the preceding section.

The fee for every license shall be two dollars for a male dog and five dollars for a female dog, unless a certificate of some competent person who performed the operation is filed with the clerk of the city or town, that said female dog has been subjected to the operation of spaying and is thereby deprived of the power to perpetuate her species, in which case the fee shall be two dollars.

Whoever keeps a dog contrary to the provisions of this chapter, shall forfeit five dollars, five dollars of which shall be paid to the complainant, and ten dollars to the treasurer of the county in which the dog is kept.

Every owner or keeper of dogs kept for breeding purposes, may receive annually a special license authorizing him to keep such dogs upon the premises described in such license. When the number of dogs so kept does not exceed five, the fee for such license shall be twenty-five dollars; when the number of dogs so kept exceeds five, the fee shall be fifty dollars, and no fee shall be required for the dogs of such owner or keeper, under the age of six months.

Any owner or keeper of a dog not duly licensed which becomes three months old after the thirtieth day of April in any year shall, whenever it is three months old, cause it to be registered, numbered, described, and licensed until the first day of the ensuing May, as provided in section eighty of chapter one hundred and two of the Public Statutes, and shall cause it to wear around its neck a collar distinctly marked with its owner's name and its registered number.

N. H. POOR,

Town Clerk.

Peabody, April 6th, 1891.

MORTGAGEE'S SALE

OF REAL ESTATE.

By virtue of a power of sale contained in a certain mortgage deed given by John O. Buxton of Peabody, in the County of Essex and Commonwealth of Massachusetts, to James A. Cook of said Peabody, dated the twenty-third day of June, A. D. 1887, and recorded in Essex County South District Registry of Deeds, in book 1199, leaf 83; which said mortgage has been duly assigned to Alexander B. Clark of said Peabody, by assignment dated April third, A. D. 1891, and recorded in said Registry of Deeds, in book 1305, leaf 152. For breach of the conditions contained in said mortgage, and for the purpose of foreclosing the same, will be sold at public auction, on the premises hereinafter described, on Monday, the fourth day of May, A. D. 1891, at two o'clock in the afternoon, all and singular the premises said mortgage deed conveyed, except so much thereof as has been released by deeds of release dated the twenty-third day of March, 1890, and the twentieth day of September, 1890, and recorded in said Registry of Deeds, in book 1244, leaf 456, and in book 1291, leaf 91, respectively, and by deed of release recorded in said Registry of Deeds, in book 1291, leaf 26. Said premises conveyed by said mortgage deed and not released as aforesaid, being bounded and described as follows:

A lot of land with the buildings thereon situated in said Peabody and bounded and described as follows: commencing on Andover street at a point about thirty feet distant from the corner of Endicott street, and running on said street about one hundred and thirty-one feet to land of the late Daniel Buxton; then in a Southerly direction about two hundred and twenty-one feet and a quarter; then in a Westerly direction about fifty-six and one-half feet; then Southerly about fifty-eight feet to land of Shea; then Easterly by land of Shea about one hundred and five feet to Endicott street; then Northerly by Endicott street about one hundred feet to land of S. E. Parker; then Westerly by land of Potter about eighty feet; then Northerly by said land of Potter about fifty and three-quarters feet; then Easterly by said land of Potter about thirty feet to land of the Town of Peabody; then Northerly by said land of S. E. Parker about forty feet; then Easterly by said land of the Town about ten feet; then Northerly about one hundred and eighteen feet to point begun at. Subject to a right of way on the Westerly side. Being a portion of the property last to said John O. Buxton by the late B. S. Osbo ne by will.

LOCAL LINES.

We are pleased to announce that the musical festival under the auspices of the Salem Oratorio Society is an assured success. Arrangements have been made by which those who desire, can obtain seat coupons at the Drug Store of William T. Lee.

An important notice to all the ladies of New England is appearing every day now in the Boston Daily Globe, 14 prizes running from $10 to $100 being offered. It requires simply a little literary effort on the part of the ladies. Every lady reader of this paper should get the Daily Globe and see the offer in full.

About thirty of Lennox's strikers came around this week for employment but found their places filled. They have been out eight months. Most of the men came from Lynn and were surprised to see so large a gang and so few Armenians among them, there being only one of that nationality in the works. Lennox & Co., are making arrangements to increase their business fifty per cent., and will turn out 300 dozen a day where they have been turning out 200 dozen. The firm has leased two more buildings and is fitting them up with machinery. When the factory is running to the full extent of its capacity, thirty-seven glassing jacks will be in operation.

Preparations are being made to reopen the old Essex Glue works, by King Upton. Before a great while, the works will probably be run to their full capacity. Mr. Upton's business is increasing very rapidly and he needs all the facilities he can command to supply the demands of his large trade.

Alexander Miller was arrested last Saturday night for drunkenness, and while confined in his cell made an attempt at suicide by hanging. He was discovered, and removed to the padded cell, where he made a second attempt, tying his suspender around his neck and securing one end to the door. He was prevented from carrying his fatal design into execution a second time. Monday morning he was committed to the house of correction for inebriety.

About 158 members attended the annual meeting of the South Church Tuesday evening; a social time was had until supper was served by caterer Killam of Beverly. After supper the tables were removed, and devotional exercises were participated in, led by Deacon Richard Smith. The annual reports of the Treasurer, Clerk and various committees were then read. Miss M. J. Fjord read her report for the year, which ended the tenth year of her labors as the church missionary. The election of officers resulted in the choice of George F. Barnes, Clerk, and B. N. Moore, Treasurer. The total membership now numbers 295.

One car of the Essex Electric road will be operated by the Ray motor next week.

Rev. Israel Ainsworth has resigned the pastorate of the Second Congregational Church, So. Peabody. Since his call to the First Congregational Church of Rockport, his people have been greatly exercised, and have met and pledged to support him, as at present, but without the extra work at West Peabody, and build the parsonage this summer. Mr. Ainsworth has felt the burden of the work he has had to do in connection with so large a parish but did not feel justified in putting additional burdens upon the people to lighten his own. The church and society have prospered during his pastorate of less than four years, spiritually and financially. The society has been freed from debt, over $1000 being paid toward a parsonage, and the congregations have almost doubled. Mrs. Ainsworth has contributed very much to this success by the use of her musical abilities for the good of the cause. The annual meeting of the church and society was held last Wednesday evening. The officers of the church are: clerk and treasurer, O. F. Newhall; standing committee, to serve with the pastor and deacons, W. E. Reed, C. F. Shillaber, Mrs. Oliver and Miss C. M. Shillaber; music committee, to serve with the pastor, C. F. Shillaber, C. L. Goodrich. Officers of the society: clerk, C. F. Shillaber; treasurer, W. Eugene Reed; collector, Wm. Tudbury; standing committee, Wm. Tudbury, Ivory H. Beede, Lewis Brown. The past year has been the most prosperous financially in the history of the society.

Veteran Republicans of Massachusetts 37th Anniversary.

A meeting of the surviving Anti-Slavery Veterans, dating from 1848 to 1865, who aided and united with the Republican party in the defence of the Union, will be held in Tremont Temple, Boston, on Wednesday, April 15, 1891, at 10 o'clock A. M., and at 2 o'clock P. M., for social reunion and greetings, as well as for consultation upon important measures of the government and party.

Unity Club Dramatics.

"Mrs. Walthrop's Bachelors" was presented last evening in the Unitarian chapel before an appreciative audience, under the auspices of the Unity Club. The cast was as follows: Judge Thorne, F. W. Bushby; Charles Gordon, his nephew, S. B. Mansfield; Prof. Granby, C. P. Bancroft; Dr. Wareham, F. E. Hobart; Wiggles, A. L. Pettee; Peters, C. H. Kimball; Mrs. Walthrop, M. A. Forness; Alice, her niece, M. Taylor; Mrs. Courtney, K. E. Wiley; Esther Grey, her friend, C. M. Wilson. The various parts were all creditably sustained, and the results were up to the usual standard of the entertainments given by the Unity Club. They always please their audiences.

Many have found immediate relief and permanent cure of aggravated cases of rheumatism by the persistent use of Salvation Oil. When applied according to the directions it rarely ever fails to cure the most obstinate cases. Try a bottle. It is sold everywhere for only 25 cents.

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL.

Masselet is composing a new opera.

Mr. Alfred De Seve succeeds to the directorship of the Cathedral choir, Boston.

Trinity church, of Boston, is to have a boy choir.

Miss Lizzie Webb Cary will go to London next month, where she will spend the summer.

The principal members of the Emma Abbott Opera Company have organized a new company.

The Globe Theatre is the centre of attraction just at present. Mr. Richard Mansfield in "Beau Brummell" occupies the stage, and the pleasure seekers occupy the auditorium.

Monday will witness a revival of the "Soudan" at the Boston Theatre. Doors will open at 1.30 and 7.15. Curtain rises at 2 and 7.45 o'clock.

William Redmond and Mrs. Thomas Barry have gained many new friends and pleased a host of old ones in their laughable comedy at the Grand Opera House. Next week they present the latest success "Cuchillo."

"Natural Gas," after a prolonged and successful Western tour, is coming East with its coffers distended with an accumulation of large receipts. Donnelly and Girard have had no cause to complain this season of a lack of patronage. Sam Cox says he is "in on it."

Miss Clara Beckwith, the champion swimmer of the world, is entertaining large audiences at the Grand Museum, corner of Washington and Dover streets.

"New Lamps for Old" still continues to draw large houses at the Boston Museum.

It is said that Otis Skinner will manage Margaret Mather's tour next season.

"Lady Tom" is the name of Maggie Mitchell's new play, in which she will be seen next season.

"The Dazzler," with the vivacious Lydia Thompson as the star has added Philadelphia to its long list of conquests. Despite Lent and Holy Week it has had a prosperous week in the Quaker City.

The last play read by Lawrence Barrett was a one act curtain-raiser, written by John Ernest McCann, called "A Lesson in Acting." He liked it so well that he wrote the poet-author a letter praising it very warmly, and this letter is probably the last one he wrote.

Boston seems wild on new theatres. Rumor has it that one is to be erected on Park Square, and another on Copley Square. As yet they are only on paper.

"Old Jed Prouty" is doing a large business at the Pittsburgh Duquesne theatre this week.

"Parsifal" will be given in concert form at Boston Music Hall April 15, under the direction of Mr. B. J. Lang. The Seidl orchestra of New York will participate, as will also six principals of the Metropolitan German Opera Company.

Suffering with rheumatism of the foot, I was unable to obtain any relief, until I gave Salvation Oil a trial and I can say the pain is all gone and I'm all right again. It has nothing equal to it as a pain-destroyer. John H. Reynolds, 5 Federal St., Baltimore, Md.

LITERARY NOTES.

The Season for May is just received, and contains an unusually fine and varied number of designs for Ladies' and Children's Costumes. There are some very beautiful effects shown in out door garments, both in long and short Wraps, Jackets, and a number of convenient and useful Wraps for Travelling. Considerable space is given in this number to Underwear for Ladies, Children and Infants, and a great variety of pretty designs in Needlework to be used as trimming. The work is all clearly illustrated, giving ladies the opportunity to copy all the beautiful styles represented. The Art work is very handsomely shown in many and varied styles—Nailwork, Embroidery, Lacework, Applique, Scorchwork, Knitting, Berlin, and in fact every style of fancy decorative work is ably represented. The Season is a publication that should be found in every home, and gives many a pleasing hour to ladies in every station in life. Yearly subscription, $3.50. Single copy, 30 cents. The International News Company, 83 and 85 Duane Street, N. Y.

By actual count there are forty-four pictures, all of them of the most interesting character, in this week's issue of Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper, which is printed both in English and German. The first page is a striking scene in the corridor of the Washington Pension Office. A full page is devoted to the reproduction of some beautiful amateur photographs, and there are illustrations of the California Citrus Fair, Gambling at Monte Carlo, Street Beggars of New York, A Hunt Breakfast, and a Richmond street scene. Price, 10 cents. It is full of choice Sunday reading.

Conferences between Democrats from the Eastern and Western states, as to the silver issues, and it is rumored that the question will not be made a party measure. The question is one upon which the two sections can never agree. Free silver is no more congenial to the tastes of Eastern Democrats than to Republicans.

WHAT IS SAPOLIO?

What will SAPOLIO do? Why it will clean paint, make oil-cloths bright, and give the floors, tables and shelves a new appearance. You can scour the knives and forks with it, and make the tin things shine brightly. The wash-basin, the bath-tub, even the greasy kitchen sink will be as clean as a new pin if you use SAPOLIO. One cake will prove all we say. Be a clever housekeeper and try it.

American Artists and America.

The attitude of the English and French critics has changed. Their indifference has changed into curiosity, and many American and Canadian artists have found their warmest and kindest recognition in Europe.

In art, all is accomplished by men with whom art is life. And Canadian and American artists have found that individual merit will tell in Paris sooner than anywhere else. One feels in Paris that living is an art—there is inspiration in walking the streets and jostling the crowds. Nearly all of the successful American and Canadian artists have studied and achieved their first successes in the ateliers of the French masters of today. The greatest difficulty which confronts them is to obtain recognition from their own countrymen. In Canada there is a disposition to pooh-pooh the productions of all native workers in any form of art. There is the adoration of success and names, which always marks a society but new to the refinements of older civilizations; and, of course, this is accompanied by a prejudice against men without established reputations—a prejudice that is almost antipathy, and an entire distrust of local judgments.—New England Magazine.

WIT AND HUMOR.

If we really are to have a national vegetable, what is wrong with the electric light plant?

The Somerville Journal thinks it is a great theory to know a great deal, but it is a greater theory to know enough not to tell it.

Bagley—On what grounds was Stay-there's pension granted? Brace—He was the first man to reach the Long bridge after Bull Run.

How's your flirtation with that New Jersey maiden doing? That's all off. Her father unloosed the mosquito on me one night, and I barely got away with my life.

I feel miserable, and I don't know what it is that makes me feel so. What have you been eating? Lobster and crystallized ginger. And don't know what makes you miserable? Did I say what? I meant which.

Curio dealer—Here's a skeleton of George Washington's pet cat. Collector—I don't want one so large. What's this small one? Curio dealer—That's a skeleton of the same cat when it was a kitten.

The custom of the cardinals of Rome of wearing red hats at ceremonies and processions was introduced by Pope Innocent IV., as a symbol to indicate the readiness of the cardinals to spill their blood for Jesus Christ.

During the reign of George III., the Duke of York had a duel with Colonel Lennox, and the worthy colonel succeeded in shooting away one of the duke's curls. It at once became the correct thing to wear a curl on one side of the temple only.

When Fox, the first of the Quakers, was sitting in church and the preacher said anything he did not like, he moved solemnly, put on his hat and kept it on until the disagreeable remarks concluded. This arose the Quaker custom of wearing hats in church.—Clothier and Furnisher.

Charles VII., of France, had a pair of ill-made legs. He wore a long coat to conceal them, and so everybody else worn long coats.

Alexander the Great had a twist in his neck. It was therefore fashionable for every one in that monarch's court to carry his neck in the same way.

The peruke is said to be due to the misfortune of Philip, Duke of Burgundy. His hair fell out, and his physicians advised him to cover his head with artificial hair.

Francis I., of France, was struck on the chin with a piece of tile. Of course, the wounded part could not be shaved. Thus beards came again into fashion, after having been out for nearly a century.

Scribblerus Journalisticus—Was there a demand for the author when your play was produced? Scribblerus Dramaticus—There was—a loud one, but thank heaven I got out by the stage door and escaped.

Tramp—Lady, is there any wood here to be sawed? Lady—Yes, sir, out in the shed. If you saw some I'll give you a lunch. Tramp (disgusted, as he turns to go)—Confound it! Isn't there one family in the town that's got all their wood sawed?

Scroggs—I say, Boggs, does Skinner belong to your athletic club? Boggs—No; why do you ask? Scroggs—Oh, he broke all records recently, as far as I know. He ran up a big board bill in London and "jumped" it, and the next heard of him was that he had landed in New York.

Barber—Have I ever shaved you before? Victim—Gracious! I guess not; do you think I would come to you a second time?

He awkwardly—Ah, Miss Mabel, I hope you understand my feelings! She I'm sure I'm quite in the dark! He—Then desperately suppose we strike a match!

A young mother asks her butcher to weigh the baby. With pleasure madame. After examining the scales;—Ah! Thirteen and a half pounds, madame, with the bones.

Yes, papa, Jack is poor, but he loves me. Mayn't I marry him, papa? Well, yes, if you want to. You dear old thing—but when? Immediately. Oh, but you know it's Lent. Yes, but wouldn't it be well to get broken into fasting right away.

Little Edith (on Miss Oldgold's lap)—Why, Miss Oldgold, you're not very old, are you? Miss Oldgold (blushing violently)—No, indeed, child; but why do you ask. Little Edith—Ma said you were old as the hills; but I don't believe it, for I rubbed my hand on your cheek just now and the paint is still fresh.

Say, dad, I hear that Deacon Strait has just been raising Cain in this neighborhood this summer. Tommy—Mr. Strait is a fine man, and if I hear you talk thus again I will give you a whipping. It's so, all the same, reiterated the hopeful, quickly. He's been raising Cain an' haulin' it to the sorghum mill. Tommy got the licking anyhow, just as he richly merited.

Your wife seems vexed. Yes. She went out to match some ribbon and found it at the first store.

Boston citizen (on his way home from church)—Wait outside a moment, please, Waldonia, while I step into this drug store and get a cigar. Wife of Boston citizen—I thought druggists in this town were not allowed to sell cigars Sunday? Boston citizen—They are allowed to sell them when needed for catarrh. (To druggist, a few moments later): Jodes, give me a teder cigar. Batch, please? Thanks.

Not for me to tell the story Of those wigs so seeming fair.

An Allegory in Song.

A grand "Allegory of the War in Song" is to be given under the auspices of the Grant Monument Association at the Madison Square Amphitheatre, New York, May 2, under the direction of the composer, Mr. S. G. Pratt, who has arranged this entertainment especially for the benefit of the Monument Fund.

The "Allegory" is comprised of patriotic and other popular songs prevalent during the war, arranged so as to present five episodes:

First, the power of patriotic music; second, the uprising at the North and march to battle; third, before the battle; fourth, after battle, and fifth, the return home.

Places on the stage will be reserved for 1,000 singers, and a chorus of 200 school children, and a miniature representation of the departure of troops, and also the "return home," of the veterans with their torn battle flags.

A large orchestra, all under the auspices of the Grand Army of the Republic, under command of General Floyd Clarkson, aided by Col. Amman, and a military band will assist under the direction of Mr. S. G. Pratt.—Musical Record.

THE DEVIL'S DEN.

Queer Stories Told About a Remarkable Florida Cavern.

The cave near John Dee's in Hamilton County, known as the Devil's Den, has ever been a mystery. No one now living has explored its depths, and many curious tales are told in connection with it. The editor of the Jasper News has gone to it at least half a dozen times, with the express purpose of exploring it, but, upon reaching its opening, deep down in a dark ravine, over-shadowed by tall pine and spreading oaks, feeling the cold, chilly current of air that is peculiar to the place, listening to the dripping waters echoing in the cavernous depths, viewing the over-hanging rocks, which seem ready to give way and fall, and the impenetrable darkness of the cavern, all combined, have never failed to produce a feeling of awe, that would soon ripen into fear, and cause him to get away from the place faster than he went to it.

It is related that in the early history of the country old Uncle Billy Bassett once happened to pass that way at a late hour in the night. It was brilliantly lighted up, and the sounds of music and revelry were heard therein. He, knowing nothing of the cave, joyfully supposed that he was approaching some house where he could obtain rest for the night. Going down into the ravine, he followed its course till upon turning an angle of rocks he came full upon the mouth of the cavern, an opening some twelve feet high and twenty wide. He took one look at the scene within, and incontinently fled from the spot with the speed of a frightened deer. He said that on a high ledge of rock four or five uncouth looking characters were clustered, making music on instruments that he was unacquainted with, while on the floor any number of naked yellow devils seven feet high, were dancing with might and main.

Ever since that time it has been called the Devil's Den.

Another story is that during the war it was occupied as a refuge and hiding place for deserters. One of them one day concluded that to pass away the time which was hanging so heavily on his hands, he would explore the cave and see what it contained. Up to this time its occupants had never gone over thirty or forty yards into it. So, procuring a good torch, and accompanied by a companion, he set out, or rather in, on a voyage of discovery. At a distance of seventy or eighty yards they came across hundreds of skeletons of human beings, which so terrified them that they quit the cave entirely, preferring a life in the army to an abode with the dead in that lonely cavern.—Florida Times Union.

JOHN M. PALMER.
Senator from Illinois.

One of the most bitter struggles ever seen in Illinois, has just been ended by the election of General Palmer as United States Senator instead of Senator Farwell. There were 154 ballots taken. The legislature met on January 13th. Each branch voted separately. General Palmer who had been nominated by the Democratic State Convention of last year to be the party candidate for the honor received the full party vote in both houses, which gave him a majority of one in the House over Governor Oglesby, the Republican nominee. Three members Cockrell Moore and Tembenack, Farmer's alliance men nominated A. I. Streeter. These three men held the balance as Oglesby had a majority in the Senate. The 101 Democrats in joint session stuck to Palmer and never voted for anybody. The granger members were firm in their determination, and maintained the grip they held, standing as they did, between two evenly balanced parties; the trio always voted for editor Streeter—meanwhile the people of the state grew impatient the farmers were urged by their constituents to vote for Palmer this element preferred a Democrat to a Republican. And when Kyle an Independent was elected in South Dakota by a combination of the Democrats with the Independents it was supposed that the farmers in the Illinois Legislature would reciprocate by throwing up their strength with that of the Democrats. This is what two of their members did with the result that General Palmer was elected by the majority of one vote.

Brigadier General John McCauley Palmer was born at Eagle Creek, Scott county, Kentucky, on the 18th of September, 1817. He removed to Illinois in the year 1832, settling in Carlinville, in that State, in 1839. He was admitted to the bar in 1840, and appointed a delegate to the state constitutional convention of 1847. In 1852 to 1855 he was a member of the State senate. In 1856 he was prominent in the organization of the Republican party, and being a delegate to the National Republican Convention of that year. He was also sent to the Peace Convention at Washington, February 4, 1861. He entered the Union army in April, 1861, as colonel of the Fourteenth Illinois Volunteers; accompanied General Fremont in his expedition to Springfield, Missouri; and on the 13th of December was made Brigadier General of Volunteers. He was with General Pope and commanded the First Brigade, First Division, of the Army of the Mississippi. He subsequently commanded a division at the battle of Stone River, where he was promoted for bravery, November 29th, 1862. He afterwards took part in the battle of Chickamauga, in 1863, and commanded the Fourteenth Army Corps under Sherman in the Atlanta campaign during 1864. He resigned in 1866, and three years afterwards he was elected governor of Illinois which office he held till 1873. John McCauley Palmer was an old Free Soiler. As Governor of the State he was a Republican. In 1872 he floundered to the Liberals with Trumbull and others, and kept on fighting with the Republicans until he fought himself clear into the ranks of the Democrats.

The Tanner's Chemical School.

The Tanners' Chemical School, to be founded under the protection of the National Morocco Manufacturers' Association, is at present a frequent topic of discussion in the leather and shoe lines, and one in which all of your readers are undoubtedly interested. The establishment of such a school has been promptly recognized as a long-felt necessity, and many have signified their willingness to assist the carrying out of this project by liberal subscriptions.

At the meeting of the National Morocco Manufacturers Association, at Philadelphia, January 8th, a committee was appointed, consisting of R. G. Salomon, Newark, N. J., Chairman; Wm. T. McNeely and Henry Burk, of Philadelphia; John G. Baker and J. Parke Postles, of Wilmington, Del.; Geo. K. Pevear and A. B. Martin, of Lynn, Mass.; Maurice S. Kerrigan and Geo. L. Rose, of New York, and L. A. Tate, of Gloversville, N. Y.

This committee is empowered to raise funds for the erection and support of a school, and they will be pleased to receive the subscriptions of any of your readers. Pending the arrangements under consideration by the committee, I will briefly refer to some opinions expressed as to the methods already suggested.

At the meeting of the Manufacturers' Association, in Philadelphia, on the morning of January 8th, when the subject was being ventilated, the idea was put forth of co-operation with the University of Pennsylvania, and of making the Tanners' Institute a branch of the same. Objections have been made to this as a very unwise step, firstly, that a university could not give the necessary attention to this branch; secondly, that a trade paper should be published in connection with the school, which would be impossible under such an arrangement; thirdly, that no university could conduct the matter "practically," all work being theoretical. This, it is argued, would be the death-blow to the institution, as, if it is desired to take a course in chemistry, it is not necessary to go to the University of Pennsylvania and subscribe a sum of money for it, and it is doubted that the professor of a college can teach a tanner anything of practical tanning. Again, it would be necessary to engage some one for this branch, and this would bring the tanning fraternity back to its original position.

Now, as to the idea of establishing a tannery in connection with the school. The students would spoil such an amount of leather that the cost would be immense; and besides, in the short time generally given to a course in such an institution, it would be utterly impossible for them to succeed in learning the art of tanning. A young man should be a practical tanner before he undertakes a course; then all practical work can be done on a small scale, such as ascertaining the effects of different oils on leather, the effects of the various kinds of tannin, etc. In this way the work would still be practical and still feasible, whereas to take a boy from school and make a tanner of him would not be practical. Also, the work conducted at a school, where all are practical tanners, would naturally be on a much higher scale of research; but when the other extreme is reached, and all practical work dropped away, such as would necessarily be the consequence of an alliance or connection with a university, the result would be a still greater evil.

The above is a synopsis of the many opinions that are given by parties, both from Europe and in this country, who are fully versed in the matter, and the more the subject is ventilated through the press, the more healthy arguments will be coming forward; and we will undoubtedly, before long, have the school established on a plan which will satisfy every tanner in the country.

In this project not only the tanners are interested, but the shoe manufacturers, the harness makers, the pocket-book line; and indeed every leather worker knows that by such a school in the leather business, which has undoubtedly made progress of late, but which has, by no means, kept pace with other manufacturing industries new developments would soon result that would unquestionably be beneficial. We have many tanners who are egotistic enough to say that such progress will be an injury to them, or that through a school greater competition in the leather line is to be feared. They, however, lost sight of the one important fact that we cannot enjoy a high protective tariff for many years to come, and that we must prepare ourselves to be better able to enter into the competition of the whole world; and the controlling position in that case can only be held by insuring the attainment of the greatest ability. The tanning business is still in its infancy in this country, but with American ingenuity and swiftness of conception, we will crown our efforts with laurels if we educate the coming generation for the accomplishment of their great task.—R. G. Salomon, in The Shoe.

"For God is my King of old, working Salvation in the midst of the earth."—Ps. 74: 12
"Thus saith the Lord, 'Is my hand shortened at all, that it cannot redeem? Or have no power to deliver?'—Isa. 50: 2.

Next year, being the fifth centennial anniversary of Christopher Columbus' discovery of this western continent, it is proposed to celebrate the occasion by a Columbian Exposition at Chicago which will partake of the character of a World's Fair. The World's W. C. T. U. will have part in the display and its Booth will be no insignificant feature of the grand affair. Preparations are already on foot and Mrs. Josephine R. Nichols of Indiana, who made such a success of the W. C. T. U. exhibit at the Paris Exposition, presenting its object and purpose so admirably as to win two gold medals, first prizes, will use every endeavor to make the work of the temperance woman appeal to the heart, eye and common sense of the public.

It is proposed that the juvenile department shall make no small part of this display and present an object lesson with marked and influencing effect. Miss Anna A. Gordon has issued a call to "friends of the temperance cause everywhere" as well as to those specially interested in juvenile temperance societies, to commence at once the practical carrying out of the arranged plans. The autographs of all children who have signed the triple pledge are desired on uniform red white and blue cards for fastening together in a total abstinence chain for festooning the headquarters of the W. C. T. U. department at the fair. Then the pledged boys and girls all over the world are asked to raise a sufficient number of 10 cents to erect a fountain in the city of Chicago which shall be inscribed as the gift of the boys and girls. The names of all who contribute dimes should be sent with the money, as it is proposed to preserve the lists. This fountain will be named for Miss Willard and unveiled on her birth-day, Sept. 28, 1892, a beautiful memorial to her worth. Besides, the children are asked to contribute articles for the sale table at the fair, any profits from which will be used in behalf of W. C. T. U. work among the children.

It is hoped that Peabody boys and girls will send a goodly number of these autograph cards and a creditable sum for the fountain, as well as the sum from the temperance men and women of the town, which will inscribe the name of Peabody on the wall of the great auditorium in the Woman's Temperance Temple which is to be completed in season for use during the exposition.

W. C. T. U. Pledge of Women not to wear Feathers:—We, whose names are hereunto affixed, agree not to wear the bodies or feathers of birds as a part of our clothing or headgear, and we call upon all right-minded women to join us in this pledge, reminding them that the Ornithological Society has stated that "over five million song birds are annually required by the dealers to ornament the hats of American women."

Court of Insolvency.

On Friday William Ropes, stove dealer at 17 and 19 Front St., Salem, filed his petition in voluntary insolvency. His liabilities are not definitely stated, but his schedule names 53 creditors, of whom Abner C. Goodell has the largest claim, $1003 71.

On Friday William Y. Ober, Lynn, filed his petition in voluntary insolvency. He owes $2957.55. His assets are included in one undivided third part of two parcels of land in Guildhall, Vt., mortgaged to the Passumpsic Bank of St. Johnsbury for $5000. Ernest H. Averill, shoe manufacturer of Salem, doing business as E. H. Averill & Co., has filed his voluntary petition in insolvency. He owes about $1500.

A GLOWING TRIBUTE FROM A Skilled Physician. DANA'S IS KING

THE FOLLOWING GLOWING TRIBUTE TO THE WONDERFUL EFFICACY OF DANA'S SARSAPARILLA, AS A GENUINE BLOOD PURIFIER, IS ENOUGH TO CONVINCE THE MOST SCEPTICAL, COMING AS IT DOES FROM A PHYSICIAN WELL KNOWN IN EASTERN MAINE AS ONE OF THE MOST SUCCESSFUL PRACTITIONERS IN THE MEDICAL FIELD, AND WHO IS ALSO AN ACTIVE CHRISTIAN WORKER IN THE CHURCH TO WHICH HE BELONGS:—

ISLESBORO, ME., Oct. 28, 1890.

DANA SARSAPARILLA Co.:—
Gentle: While I have always steadily refused to lend my influence to any Patent Medicine whatever, I feel that the time has come when duty demands that I should write and tell you of the wonderful effects of DANA'S SARSAPARILLA in my own family.

Some four years ago my little daughter began to show symptoms of Scrofula, which in a short time developed into the most severe and malignant type I ever saw. I am free to confess that I tested my skill to its utmost extent. I used the most reliable specifics known to Materia Medica. I consulted with other physicians, but, despite all I could do, I saw that she was falling day by day.

At this time a bottle of DANA'S came into my hands, and knowing of several cures performed by it, I decided to try it in my little daughter's case, but I assure you I had but little faith. I commenced to give it in small doses, diluted with water, and to my surprise and great joy, in less than a week she began to improve, and continued to do so very rapidly. Two bottles built the bridge to the shore of health. The third one brought her across all right. In fact CURED her. She is now twelve years of age, and as I write I can hear her ringing laugh, as she is enjoying life with her schoolmates. CONSIDER IT THE GREATEST BLOOD REMEDY KNOWN TO MAN.

Yours respectfully,

L. W. HAMMONDS, M.D.

Only Sarsaparilla GUARANTEED TO Cure.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT OF THE TOWN MEETING.

The third adjournment of the town meeting was called to order on Tuesday evening, by C. H. Goulding, Moderator, at 7.45 o'clock. He announced that the first business in order was to hear and act upon the report of the committee to whom were referred articles 20 and 21, in reference to the tele-meter. Amos Merrill, Esq., on behalf of the committee, reported a recommendation that the Water Board be empowered to purchase a tele-meter at an expense not exceeding $400, and that the sum of $400 be appropriated for that purpose. Mr. S. F. Blaney arose and said, were it not for what had been said in this connection at a previous meeting, he would not have been present on this occasion. Mr. Littlefield of the Water Board had said that such an instrument was necessary, and he had taken the trouble to visit the pumping station and ascertained that Mr. Littlefield was correct. He explained his change of front on the question by saying that when he was on the Board he had put in a pressure gauge, and prepared tables by which it was possible by some computations to approximately estimate the amount of water in the stand pipe. This had since become useless, by reason of some facts not made clear by the speaker. He hoped the report would be adopted. A vote was taken and the report was adopted without a dissenting voice.

The next business was to hear and on the report of the Water Board in relation to the extension of water mains on Mt. Pleasant. The Board reported that 1533 feet of pipe or a little over 7-8 of a mile would be required, which would cost $4000, and that water would be taken to an annual amount of not much over $100. That the highest point of the locality of the extensions was Connor's barn, which was 159 feet above the sea level, or about the level of the bottom of the stand pipe. They submitted a letter received from Andrew Nichols surveyor, which stated that at the highest point, water would flow at the sills of the houses. They recommended therefore that it was not advisable to make the extension. Mr. G. M. Foster moved an amendment that $4000, be appropriated and that the mains be extended the full distance asked for. He wanted to know on what the Water Board based their estimate of $100, as the annual income.

Mr. D. S. Littlefield replied: Upon a canvass made by the Board, since the matter was referred to them. He stated that Mr. Foster had since told him that Mr. King would take water to the amount of $40, which would raise their estimate some. Mr. Foster spoke in favor of the extension and estimated the income would be $127 per year, which, in lieu of the vote of the town a year ago, providing that pipes should be extended wherever 3 per cent could be realized on the cost, was sufficient to entitle the people on Mt. Pleasant to the extension asked for. Mr. R. H. Brown opposed the motion as he did not think the town could afford the outlay and he did not believe satisfactory service could be secured. Mr. C. W. Osborne also opposed the motion for similar reasons. He said the commercial and manufacturing interests were at a low ebb, and the High School and other improvements must be made, and therefore asked the town to wait another year any way. This was not a necessity. Mt. Pleasant had plenty of water and they could wait another year as well as not. Of course it was pleasant to turn a faucet and have the water flow without an effort, and he would not oppose the granting of this luxury if there were not other necessary expenses that call for all the money that the town can spare. He did not consider the supply of any service for fire purposes unless an engine was stationed on the spot, and the elevation was so great as to render the water service so poor that there was no certainty of the proposed takers continuing any length of time. The motion was put to vote and carried by 45 to 22.

The Selectmen reported a recommendation to appropriate $150 for raising the sidewalk on Brown street, So. Peabody, to improve the drainage. Mr. W. P. Clark moved the report be accepted and recommendations adopted, and it was so voted, without opposition. The Selectmen also reported a recommendation that $575 be appropriated to improve the drainage on County and Lynnfield streets, and that about 700 feet of 12 inch pipe be laid, as a part of the plan. Mr. Franklin Osborne moved the acceptance of the report and it was carried unanimously.

C. F. Winchester, for the committee to whom was referred the matter of altering the High School, handed a written report to the Moderator, to be read. The committee recommended altering the building in accordance with the plans proposed by W. D. Dennis of Salem, which provide for cutting the building in halves and putting in 25 feet. The extension would provide for 50 or 60 new seats and four new recitation rooms.

The report further recommended the appropriation from the treasury and that the town treasurer make 6 notes of $1000 each running from one to six years respectively, the first to date from July 1. Mr. Amos Merrill explained that the sum recommended would cover the whole expense, including steam heating apparatus. The report was adopted by a vote of 56, none voting in the negative.

Amos Merrill, Esq., as a member of the Finance Committee recommended that $105,600, and a further sum sufficient to cover the state and county tax be raised by taxation and that the balance of the appropriations be paid from the treasury and the income from the water rates. The total appropriations he stated to be somewhere in the neighborhood of $146,000. He thought the amount available from water rates and the cash on hand would amount to about $30,000.

It was voted to adopt the recommendation. The committee on the Walnut street extension reported that a bill had been appropriating their expense as follows: one third to Peabody, one third to Salem and one third to the county. The report was accepted. A motion was made to reconsider the appropriation for extending the water pipes but was defeated by a motion to dissolve the meeting. The following gentlemen were appointed to carry out the alterations of the high school: Amos Merrill, H. F. Walker, Samuel Trask, C. F. Winchester, T. J. Relihan, Thomas Carroll.

The Finance Committee for the following year is G. F. Sanger, H. F. Walker, Nathan Bushby, Warren Shaw, Charles B. Haven, John Linehan and George C. Farrington.

Les Pelerins contemplate a tallyho ride. They will put some scarlet on Danvers and other towns in their pilgrimage. J. W. Holley & Co. have set up their soda fountain and are supplying the sparkling fluid to those who are thirsty. Post 50, G. A. R., has hired the big Town Hall for Tuesday evening, April 28, and will run an old-fashioned dance on that night.

LOCAL LINES.

James E. Millea was refused a liquor license in Salem, this week.

Pay your water bill Monday and save the discount. It is the last day of grace.

James N. Ames has closed out his meat and provision business.

The Excelsior Club hold a dance in Temperance Hall, May 8th.

William S. Osborne has been confined to the house this week with La Grippe.

James P. King is able to ride out. We were pleased to see him on the Square this week.

William F. Pingree has been appointed agent for the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

Mrs. Charles W. Jenkins has been appointed Matron of the Sutton Home, to succeed Mrs. Drew.

The Committee on Manufactures has reported in favor of allowing Peabody to establish an electric light plant.

Theophilus Wall was before the court charged with a second offense of drunkenness, on Wednesday.

Ezra H. Shannon has been appointed registrar of voters in place of Aaron F. Clark, whose term has just expired.

Union Post 50, G. A. R., will hold a grand concert and costume party in Town Hall, April 28th. Tickets 50 cents. Concert tickets 25 cents.

Harry P. Hutchinson has been in Philadelphia this week on business. He is employed as a travelling salesman by the Standard Thermometer Co.

The W. C. T. U. will conduct services at the Alms House tomorrow, leaving the church at 2, P. M. Rev. Mr. Cummings will accompany the Union.

Rev. W. P. Ray will continue his pastoral labors with the Methodist church in town for another year. Rev. Geo. A. Phinney has been re-assigned to the Lafayette street church in Salem.

The School Committee met on Monday evening and voted to adopt the report that had been prepared, and ordered the same printed. It will be ready for distribution about the first of May.

H. C. Strout has sold out his pork business to J. P. Squire, and will remove to Cleveland, Ohio, where he will attend to the manufacture and sale of his patent odorless barrel cover.

The ladies who held the dance in Town Hall on Wednesday evening were not favored with a large party. The hard rainstorm doubtless prevented many from attending, who would otherwise have been present.

George Stevens is making some improvements in his fruit and cigar store, but the work will not interfere with the sale of the choicest brands of cigars and fine fruit or with the service of lunch to his numerous customers.

James L. Goodridge, formerly of this town, died in Brooklyn, Sunday, at the age of 76 years. The deceased was a son of Benjamin Goodridge, who kept the old tavern of that name, and was a brother of Miss Lydia Goodridge and Mrs. Deacon Smith.

Mr. and Mrs. D. H. Flint have returned to their home in West Peabody, from Kittery, where they have been making a short sojourn. Mr. Flint has not recovered his health sufficiently to be out of doors yet.

Elbridge Rust, Jacob Osborne, J. Benj. Palmer and A. A. Messer were members of a party of tourists that visited Grand Rivers, Ky., recently. They returned the early part of this week, well pleased with what they saw.

The Peabody carpenters held a meeting Tuesday evening and were addressed by J. G. Clinkard of Boston. The eight and nine hours movement has reached this town. Another meeting will be held next Tuesday to form a union.

Rev. Mr. Cummings, with a choir of little singers from the New England Home for Little Wanderers, will speak in the South Church tomorrow, at 10.30, presenting the claims of the Home. A collection in its behalf will be taken at the close of his address.

Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Swett observed their golden wedding at their home on Gardner street, where between fifty and sixty of their friends assembled bringing with them numerous gifts. Miss Ethel Swett read an original poem, followed by an appropriate address by Peter Sim. Mr. Swett although taken by surprise, replied in a pleasant manner. Miss Ida Tigh and Francis Sim rendered several musical selections in an artistic manner after which refreshments were served. Mr. Swett is in his seventy-third year and his wife is two years his junior. The happy event took place last Monday evening.

A social gathering of the Ladies' Aid Society was held at the residence of Mrs. Sebut Taylor. The usual collection was taken.

The shoe store occupied by O'Keefe at the corner of Boston and Essex streets, is to be closed out. Goods will be sold at any price. The building is to be taken down to make room for a new one.

The town treasurer has made arrangements with the South Danvers National Bank to receive its deposits of the town for the next year. 3 per cent will be allowed for the same, and 4 per cent will be charged on overdrafts, the same as last year.

The second annual party of the Somerset Club was held in Town Hall Monday evening. The season for dancing is nearly over but few remain on the list. The Excelsior club announce a party Friday evening May 8th and the Crescent club give a grand ball April 30th.

The Veteran Firemen's Association on Monday evening, elected Daniel B. Lord delegate to the New England League, for two years. Last evening they visited the Beverly Firemen's Association. It is the intention of the Firemen to endeavor to hold the next meet in town.

S. S. S. in New Quarters.

The Salem Shoe Store, No. 278 Essex street, has moved into new and handsome quarters. That is, the place has been thoroughly renovated. For a long time the store has been badly cramped for room, but that trouble has at last been overcome by making the store nearly twice its former size. Large and commodious shelves have been arranged the entire length of the room, while sets of drawers entirely surround the floor surface. In these are kept the heavy boots, while the shelves are filled with cartons containing new and fancy styled shoes. In the rear is a small room designated the rubber room, where all such goods are kept. The store as it now stands commands an excellent trade. An opening will be held all this week.—Salem Evening News.

CHAPTER I.

When he sang of love.

Tradition has dealt somewhat roughly with the reputation of the Barnegat folk of half a century ago; but that is hardly to be wondered at. It is quite as much as a live man can do nowadays, even by giving a good deal of attention to it, to protect his good name, so what "show" can the necessarily silent dead be expected to have? The fact is that the "wreckers of Barnegat" were not by any means so black as they have been painted. That modest claim in their behalf scarcely seems sufficient, for the same thing is proverbially said of the devil, so we may in strict justice go farther and affirm that among them were not a few very excellent men and women who never lighted false beacon fires or swung a ship's lantern from a cow's horns.

Unhappily there were then many wrecks on that dangerous coast, for warning lights were not so numerous as they now are, and the loss of life in those disasters was great, since there was no such well organized and admirably equipped life saving corps as we at present have. When the wrecks occurred the dwellers on Barnegat beach assumed that all rights of floats and jetsam were theirs, and perhaps piously viewed the casting ashore of a rich cargo as a special providence in their behalf. But the cruel treachery of luring a vessel to destruction by means of false lights was an infrequent crime—whatever sensational legend makers may say to the contrary—and there were numbers of brave strong men there who many a time heroically risked their lives to save shipwrecked persons from the terrible waves that in stormy weather thundered upon those sands.

David King and his stalwart sons, Donald and Andrew, were among the foremost of those who habitually so distinguished themselves. No one was more daring and indefatigable in capturing valuables from a wreck than were the Kings, but they would at any moment abandon the most tempting piece of salvage to save a drowning sailor, and that could not be truthfully said of all their neighbors. There was those who averred that this eccentricity brought the family good luck, and this imagining had not a little good effect in encouraging others to emulate their humane example, so that in time it came to be noted that wrecks were much less fatal in their neighborhood than upon other parts of the beach.

Janet King, the only daughter of David, had almost as much strength and dexterity with the oars as had either of her brothers, and was quite their equal in courage, which is equivalent to saying that in all the qualifications demanded for existence on Barnegat in those days she had no superiors in the community. And a consensus of the opinions of the young men in the vicinity would have unqualifiedly sustained the affirmation that in point of good looks she had no equals. Of course other young women saw defects in her style of beauty. They affirmed that her eyes were too big and black, her wavy raven black hair altogether too long and heavy, the voluptuous roundings of her finely developed form quite too pronounced. But that was to be expected. The girls of Barnegat were not radically different from other girls. Janet was not simply "pretty" or "good looking," but actually beautiful to a degree that awed the young fellows about her, caused them to feel awkward in her presence and made them shy of attempting advances to her, however wishfully they looked upon her from a respectful distance.

But one day there came a big, blue eyed, flaxen haired young hunter from the distant city of New York who was not so easily abashed, but rather inspired by beauty, and who very promptly made his admiration for her quite apparent.

Selden Rangely was, he said, his name. He had been duck shooting up about the mouth of Forked river until success became monotonous, and leaving his boat in the bay he had wandered along the coast aimlessly until he reached the hamlet where the Kings were leading citizens and found shelter in their house. There was in his mind a half formed purpose of strolling on as far as May's landing, or perhaps even farther, but it was quickly abandoned when he got one good look at Janet King. Where was his journey, he felt, was ended. And why should he go farther and certainly fare worse? It was bitter, bad November weather, so inclement that hardly one day out of three was fit to go ducking in, and the roads—in the few places where any existed—were execrable. Only a fool would think of exploring the New Jersey coast at such a season when he had the alternative of settling down by a warm fireside and making love to Janet King.

With some initial difficulty he persuaded her father to accept him as a boarder, despite Mr. King's protests that he knew nothing about keeping a hotel and did not wish to.

"But it is the eminently correct thing that you should," argued Selden Rangely. "I always live in a hotel, and would have to pay board somewhere else if not here. I want to stop here a few weeks anyway, and could not think of doing so at your expense. I would not be able to rid myself of the idea that I was trespassing on your hospitality. So I insist upon being allowed to pay you at the same rate I would pay at my hotel in New York."

So he had his way, and the sum thus fixed by himself was so liberal that it fairly took away the beach man's breath. Large as it was, David King accepted it at first with reluctance, but very soon began to find it quite pleasant to receive the weekly bright gold pieces that his guest drew from an evidently abundant stock in a heavy leathern money belt. Gold was at no time so abundant on Barnegat beach as to be viewed with indifference even by the Kings, who were "well to do folks" there. But, incredible as the fact was, the stranger did not seem to care for it. They concluded that "he must have slathers of money," and an estimation of that sort at least does not generally tend to render its subject unpopular.

Janet was fascinated by the handsome stranger himself, quite independently of his wealth. He was really the first educated, gentlemanly man of the world she had ever met, and by contrast with the young men she had known, seemed to her quite a superior sort of being. The wonders of the big, active world far outside the stagnant pool of Barnegat beach life, concerning which she had only vaguely dreamed, his conversation brought vividly before her, and she listened to him as if in an enchanted dream. Sometimes, in the solitude of her little room, the thought rushed upon and overwhelmed her that she knew so little and he so much that he must despise her for her ignorance, and she cried herself to sleep. So unsophisticated was she that she did not yet know beauty to be more than wisdom or strength or even wealth.

An old guitar hung upon the sitting room wall. It was a relic of some wreck and simply decorative, for nobody upon the beach could even tune it. But Selden Rangely's skillful fingers evoked from it the most entrancing melodies and witching chords that, blending with his strong yet mellow voice, thrilled her strangely when he sang of love. Love! Not until now had any one ever sung or said aught about love to her. But he did both. He told her that he loved her with all his soul, and vowed to do so forever, and "a new heaven and a new earth" seemed to open before her. No question of his sincerity disturbed her happiness, for her love for him was as perfect as that which he professed.

Her parents looked dubiously upon the fine gentleman's attentions to their daughter, but he had captivated the brothers, and they with Janet made a majority in the family council, so there was hardly a shadow of opposition on the part of the old folks to the marriage of Selden and Janet, which took place in the month of February.

About the middle of April Selden Rangely announced that it would be necessary for him to go to New York on business, but his trip would be brief. His programme had been fully discussed with his wife. He would draw some money from the bank, buy some things he deemed his wife should have, replenish his wardrobe, order an agent to buy and furnish a house, and within a fortnight he would return with the great surprise for Janet's father.

David King's cherished dream of the unattainable, as he frankly admitted it, was the ownership of a big first class schooner, on which he should be the master and his two sons the mates. That dream Janet's husband vowed to her should be realized. Nothing would be easier for him. Had he not more than sufficient money for it lying idle in the bank for lack of opportunity for profitable investment? He would simply draw out the necessary sum, bring it home, and put it in the old man's hands as a great surprise.

Secretly Janet felt that she would have liked dearly well to accompany her husband and see the great city, but as he did not propose that she should do so she was too proud to seem to force her company upon him when he did not appear to want it. And her love readily found excuse for him. His business would demand his attention, she said to herself; naturally he would find it inconvenient to be bothered with a woman—one who knew nothing of the ways of city life, and would be wholly dependent upon him for direction and companionship. If he went alone he would come back all the sooner—within a fortnight, he said. So, assuming a cheerfulness that she was far from feeling, she kissed him good-by and he departed.

The fortnight passed, and more fortnights after it, yet he returned not. And no letter came from him. He certainly should have written. Even if none of the King family could read writing he might have known they could get some friend to tell them what was in his letter. That was what David King said. But Janet excused him.

"He would not," she said, "write a letter to me for somebody else to read, and so long as he might not write to his wife he would write to nobody."

But her heart was sore; she felt very lonely and an indefinable anxiety distressed her.

CHAPTER II.

In the latter part of May, during a violent and protracted northeast storm, the hermaphrodite brig Fannie B., of Liverpool, was cast upon the Barnegat sands, not an eighth of a mile from the home of the Kings. She had aboard a number of passengers, several of whom were drowned, but among the saved were two, a young mother and her child, who were rescued by Janet King, or, to give her the name that properly was hers, Mrs. Janet Rangely. The woman, with her little daughter clasped in her arms, essayed to reach the shore on a hatch, in company with a couple of sailors who launched it after both the brig's boats had been swamped and lost. In the surf the great unwieldy hatch was tumbled over and over, whirled and tossed about like a feather in a cyclone, so that all who were upon it were swept off and engulfed in the roaring breakers.

One of the sailors never reappeared, and the other was hurled ashore more dead than alive seemingly. As for the woman, the tiger of the surf seemed to play with her like a cat does with a mouse, one moment bearing her in as if to leave her on the sand, the next carrying her out again in a wild swirl of the white spume and froth of the angry sea. Courageous Janet, standing on the beach, saw her so being done to death, and without a moment's hesitation plunged into the waves after her, seized her by the hair and dragged her to land, unconscious but alive. In all her struggles with death the mother had not loosened her hold upon the child, a pretty little golden blonde maid of two years or thereabout. Both were resuscitated with little difficulty and sheltered in the house of David King.

That evening the woman, fully recovered but snugly ensconced in warm blankets, told her story to Janet, who sat by the bed to keep her company. She said:

"I came from Manchester, England, to join my husband, who has been living in Philadelphia for a year past, and is now expecting our arrival, little imagining how near a thing it has been to his never seeing either of us again. He had to flee from England, but for nothing that he need be ashamed of. A man with whom he was associated in business robbed him outrageously, and they fought about it. In self defense against a murderous knife he cracked the rascal's skull with a bar of iron and thought he had killed him. He would have been justified in doing so, but they were alone; he knew that he could not prove the deed done in self defense, and in fear of arrest he fled that same night to Liverpool, without waiting even to say farewell to me."

"From Liverpool he managed to escape to this country. Until last October he deemed himself a murderer, and was haunted always by the fear of the gallows, but in that month he met face to face the man he thought he had murdered. The wretch's skull had healed up as good as new, and, having a wholesome fear of the consequences of inviting the police to make any inquiries into his affairs, he had never even complained of having been assaulted. When my husband learned that, and not until then, he ventured to write to me, telling me the story and directing me to come over with Edith as soon this spring as ocean travel should be safe and pleasant."

"Well," replied Janet smilingly, "you did not find it either safe or pleasant, but you are all right now, and in a few days will be with your husband again."

"Yes, thanks to you, brave, noble girl that you are. And you shall see that he will be grateful to you for saving his wife and child. He is no poor chap, able for nothing more than a 'thank you, ma'am.' He has done right well in this country. His firm is well known. No doubt you have heard of him."

"What is his name?"

"Selden Rangely."

Janet stared at her in horrified amazement, speechless, feeling a sudden wild whirling in her brain, vaguely wondering if she were really awake and not dreaming, heard that name or if a nightmare possessed her. The light in the room was dim, and the woman failed to see the deathly pallor that spread over the girl's face, did not notice her silence and unnerved sinking back in her low rocking chair, but just prattled on heedlessly and unsuspectingly about her husband, her baby and herself, the narrow confines of her world.

At length Janet spoke. Her throat seemed dry, her white lips hard and stiff, and she shivered as if with cold, but she forced her voice to ask:

"Does your little girl look much like her father?"

"Oh! she is the very image of him. The same blue eyes and light hair—lighter than his, of course, because she is only a baby yet, you know—but as much like him as—well, you will see for yourself when he comes in person to thank you for saving his little Edith's life."

Janet went out and walked on the beach in the darkness alone. She could not see where she was going, but that did not matter. The rain was falling, but she was not conscious of it. With her arms folded tightly across her breast, her fingers clinched in her flesh, her jaw set hard, and her wide eyes fixed upon vacancy she moved slowly, mechanically, trying to think.

So that woman was his wife! What, then, was she? A wreck. Love had come into her life with the suddenness of a storm and stranded her hopelessly. His blue eyes had been false beacons for her. Ah! how cruel had been his treachery! He swore that he loved her, would love her always, and she—poor, weak, credulous, ignorant fool that she was—had believed him. Oh, how she had trusted him! how she had loved him! And all the while he was simply amusing himself with her betrayal, laughing in his sleeve at her foolish faith and fondness. And when the time had come for him to go and receive his wife he had gone, lightly leaving her to her blighted life of loneliness, sorrow and shame! How was it possible that one who looked so noble could be so base? How could his lying lips promise a lifelong love to her when in his heart he knew that his wife, the woman he really loved, was coming across the sea to him? And what a mocking fate it was that it must needs be she, herself, and no other, who should drag that woman out of the waves, back to life—for him! Oh, had she but known—no, no! Not that. She would do it over again. But, O God! how hard it was to think of and to bear!

She did not take any heed to where she was going until she walked into an arm that the rising tide had flung across the beach, and was almost carried off her feet by a strong and stealthy wave. Then she turned and went home, treading more firmly, as if her agonized and turbulent thoughts had settled themselves in a formulated purpose of action. Outside the door, standing in the dark with his tarpaulins on, she encountered her father.

"I got sort of anxious about you and started out to look for you," he said. "Where have you been?"

"Taking a walk. My head was hot and I wanted to cool it."

"Woman and her baby all right, I suppose?"

"Yes."

"Has she told you yet who she is?"

"Yes."

"What's her name?"

"Mrs. Selden Rangely."

"What! not?"

"Yes, his wife; from England."

She spoke in a hoarse whisper, and passing him entered the house without another word. Mr. David King remained outside a long time, freeing his mind in phrases that doubtless made the recording angel sigh.

The next day Mrs. Rangely and her child started in a beach wagon for Tom's river, where they would be enabled to take the regular stage for Philadelphia.

Not only did Janet suppress the hideous discovery she had made and nerve herself to reply smilingly to the woman's untiring efforts of effusive gratitude, and bid her "good-by and goodspeed" when she took her leave, but the poor girl even found arguments to restrain her father from executing a design that he had formed the night before. He wished to accompany the woman on her journey that she might unconsciously lead him to his vengeance upon the betrayer of his child. But Janet said to him:

"You shall not do so. Leave him to his conscience and to God. I have the right to demand this, to say what shall be done to him. I am the one most deeply wronged, and I forbid your seeking to avenge me upon him."

"Do you mean to tell me you forgive him?" hotly demanded the old man, with the fierce fire of his Scotch blood blazing in his eyes.

"No, I cannot say that," she replied huskily; "that is too much, but I bide my time. I will not have your deed bruited my shame abroad to the world."

"There's something in that," assented her father grimly, "so we'll bide a bit. Waiting is not forgetting. He'll be main glad to greet his wife, no doubt."

It was a keen thrust, and she felt it as he meant she should, but she answered with stony calm:

"She is innocent. She has harmed me not. For why should I break her heart with the knowledge that he is as false to her as to me?"

Concluded next week.

Am I Jew or Gentile? or the Genealogy of Jesus Christ, proving His Divinity, by Thomas A. Davies. A unique book correcting the alleged errors of ages in reference to this most important subject. Refreshing for its originality, and worthy the special attention of the theologian as well as the general reader. Published and for sale by E. H. Coffin, 49 John Street, New York. Price, 25 cents.

The April Arena opens with a paper by Prof. Geo. W. Winterburn, M. D., of New York, dealing with the future of philosophy. Dr. Winterburn, who formerly edited the American Homoeopath, in his forcible essay reviews the rise, growth, and fallacies of philosophy during the past, pointing out what he believes will constitute the accepted philosophy of the future. Thomas G. Shearman, in a paper of great strength, sets forth his views on the evils and injustice of direct taxation. R. Mason Osgood, A. M., M. D., of New York, contributes an interesting contribution on recent discoveries in Hypnotism. Dr. Osgood is a member of the London Society for Physical Research and has given profound attention to the marvelous powers of mind which during the past few years have challenged the closest attention of many of the greatest thinkers of the age. One of the most striking features of this issue of the Arena is Prof. Jas. T. Bixby's contribution on Buddhism in the New Testament. It is a reply to Dr. Felix Oswald's paper on the same subject, and is probably the ablest presentation of the Christian side of this problem which has yet appeared.

Arthur Dudley Vinton contributes a thoughtful paper on Mortality and Environment. E. P. Powell, the well-known author of Our Heredity from God, and other important scientific and literary works, writes on Alexander Hamilton as a popular leader. This paper traces the analogy between the position of Mr. Hamilton and that of the extreme wing of the Republican party of today. It is, furthermore, an able critical essay written in a popular vein. Prof. Jos. Rodes Buchanan concludes his remarkable essay on Nationalization of the Land is first presented. Short papers are contributed by Rev. W. H. Savage, G. Weippiert, and A. G. Emery. The editor writes on Extravagance and Penury in our Metropolis, Leprosy of the Soul, and White Slaves of New York. This issue of The Arena is at once rich in variety and strong in its presentation of great fundamental problems, which are agitating the popular mind at the present time. No magazine of the present age is in such perfect touch with progressive and reformative thought as this review.

THE PARNELL envoys do not find money waiting for them in great quantities as they expected. The general confidence in Ireland's great liberator has suffered by the developments of the past few months.

It is suggested by some of the leading journals of the country that the bottom is beginning to drop out of the Farmer's Alliance movement, and New England farmers are receiving full credit for the celerity with which they discerned the emptiness of the scheme.

SUNDAY WITNESSED the advent of 3334 immigrants in New York city. About one-sixth of them were from "Sunny Italy." One of the number had perhaps received a "sun stroke." He was insane, and will have to be cared for and returned by the Steamship company. The Lynn item aptly puts it thus:

"There was a time when immigrants were welcome, but now they enter under suspicion and later they are accepted in small numbers if not excluded altogether."

WE LEARN with deep regret of the suspension of one of our townsmen, who for several years has been engaged in a business that has furnished employment to a great many men and been of substantial benefit to the town. Mr. Carroll is a native of Peabody, has been educated in our schools and has always taken a great interest in our institutions, and in the misfortune that has befallen him, he has the general sympathy of the public. Peabody can ill-afford to lose such an establishment as his, and we hope for public as well as for personal reasons, that he may see a way out of his present difficulties and be able to resume the business which is now disturbed by his financial crisis.

WITH THE large expenditures made necessary by the waterworks extensions, ordered by votes of the town the question presents itself is the Water Department self-sustaining? There was a time when extensions were strenuously opposed by certain parties who now seem to have lost all interest in the department, and every effort was then made to make that board appear particularly profitable. As was suggested by Mr. C. W. Osborne at the adjourned town meeting, this week, when Mr. Gardner asked to have water carried through Gardner street, to supply his farm and protect his property, he was opposed year after year, notwithstanding he offered a bond to secure the town four per cent upon the outlay, and the same opposition was raised when Mr. William H. Brown asked that his establishment be supplied, and offered a guarantee of four per cent, which was the standard then in vogue. The present Water Board is anxious to make that department self-sustaining; but the expressed will of the citizens must be heeded, regardless of their interests. The Board are servants of the people, and, to a certain extent, governed by the popular will, and what they would do if left to their own discretion, counts for naught when hampered by interferences such as have been interposed.

Voters and tax payers should consider that whatever is deficient in this department must be made up by general appropriations and taxation, and whatever revenue is diverted or curtailed must surely be felt by those who pay the taxes of the town.

NO ONE who has given the matter any serious consideration, will deny that evening town meetings are disastrous to the welfare of the community. The experiences of the meeting just brought to a close this week, furnish abundant testimony of the thoughtless and profligate manner in which the money of the town is voted away. Few vote in the affirmative in many instances, and often, as was the case on Tuesday evening, none raise a dissenting voice. And yet the silence on the part of the apparent minority is not on account of acquiescence, but rather, because of a general dislike that people seem to entertain for voting on the losing side. A little more aggressiveness on the part of the minority, might in many instances stem the tide or turn the scale when measures are before the meetings which seem to touch the popular chord. Many of the measures adopted this spring which have involved large expenditures of money, have been voted for by parties having no interest in the issues, and had they been presented in their true light by some one whom the majority of the voters are accustomed to follow, results might have been different. But here is the prime evil of evening meetings. Those who could lead the voters are either guided themselves by misconceptions, or else they wilfully mislead their followers. Of the citizens who attend the meetings in the daytime, a majority of them are inclined to do their own thinking, or at least are not blinded by prejudice against those who pay the great bulk of town taxes, and with such people, the interest of the town can be trusted with comparative safety. We question, however, if the town is not too large and varied in its population to admit of the present form of government. It is questionable whether a city form of government, even if it becomes necessary to accomplish that expedient by annexation, would not be safer and cheaper than the present town meeting plan. Large bodies are always more or less unmanageable and this is especially true when diversity of interest is added to bulk.

We would recommend to our readers as food for reflection, the scheme of a city government. Certain expenses would be, of course, necessarily increased, but, on the whole, would not annexation to another municipality greatly economize expenses in most of the departments? In all matters of private business, consolidation is sought for economic reasons. Why will not the rule apply to municipalities?

THERE is just the least grain of sarcasm in the expression of Ex-Minister Phelps on the Behring sea controversy, where he says there are three ways of settling the difficulty. The first by putting a stop without further delay, to the depredations upon the breeding seals; second, to concede the right to destroy the seal fishery; third, to continue the discussion with Great Britain until the extermination of the seal is completed, and the subject of the dispute thereby exhausted, for which, as he adds, "we shall not have long to wait." We believe he presented a true bill when he said the English Government diplomatically evades the real issue and delays action because it knows well by experience, "that whatever Administration may be charged for the time being, with the government of the United States, will in the effort it makes to assert its rights, encounter the hearty condemnation of the political party opposed to it; that the arguments it addresses to the foreign government will be abundantly answered and refuted by American writers, and their authors held up to derision; and that the next election is very likely to bring into power a new Administration which may abandon the contentions of their predecessors and put the case on entirely different grounds." England rightly assumes to disregard the rights of the United States. It is a lamentable fact, and one that makes us sometimes ask the question—is popular government a failure? that administrations dodge and hedge for fear of personal, political consequences. There is an element of instability about a republic that fails to command the respect of audacious monarchies like Great Britain. Sometimes the bluff is carried too far, and the republic shows its blood and zeal in a decisive manner.

But whatever errors and abuses may be permitted under our form of government, still greater disregard of popular rights exist in every monarchy, and England may at no distant time, prove to the world that the great mass of her subjects appreciate this fact, by herself joining the sisterhood of republics.

THE REPLY of Secretary Blaine to the Italian Premier is clean cut and be decisive. Adopting the position assumed by Daniel Webster in 1851, when this country was called upon to pay for Spanish subjects, who were murdered in the same city of New Orleans, by a mob that tore down the building in which was located the office of the Spanish Consul. Mr. Blaine denies the right of Italy to indemnity for the loss of life by the recent disturbances in the "Crescent City." He sees no reason why Italians or other foreigners coming voluntarily to this country to pursue their vocations should demand or except any better protection than the Federal Government is able to give native born citizens. Un-naturalized foreign residents have the right to bring suit in our courts, and may even prosecute their claims for damages in the Federal Courts, (a privilege not accorded to citizens under ordinary circumstances.) He points out an ample remedy for the representatives of the murdered Italians in the Louisiana civil code. But he denies that he ever recognized the right of Italy, to indemnity, under the treaty.

Congress may make reparation, as it did in the case of the Spanish massacre, but if so, it should, in our opinion, rest upon the same basis of benevolent consideration for the afflictions of innocent sufferers. There is no reason other than what rests in pure sentiment, why Congress should any make gratuitous reparation for the loss of life sustained, certainly nothing of the kind would be done if American citizens were slaughtered by mob violence, and in fact, when in 1853 appropriations were made in behalf of the Spanish sufferers, no notice was taken of the loss of life that resulted to American citizens at the same time and from the same cause.

Italy has been playing a cheap game of bluff. The departure of her Minister from Washington, on a leave of absence granted before the New Orleans affair, was suffered to be recognized as a preliminary to a declaration of hostilities, in order to frighten this government. But the plot is exposed, and she now stands revealed in her true light. She does not want fight and she has not wanted it. Money and a little notoriety is the chief prize coveted by those who control her foreign affairs. The notoriety she has for what it is worth, but the money will be considered later.

nowadays, would scarcely seem to need advertisement, for by its overpowering size and importance, it inevitably commands attention far and wide. It has grown to be famous throughout Essex county and has proven what can be accomplished by persistently following a speciality for many years.

Grays and Tans

are in the air. Months ago we saw it coming, and prepared for a supply of these colorings in all the fabrics of spring, on a scale that we dare not speak of. The consequence is, today, while they are scarce in many quarters, here they abound in seemingly limitless quantities. But every yard will be needed.

We especially invite attention to the great and singular exhibit we make in these two colorings of the day, in every desirable fabric of the times.

PROBATE NOTICE.SCROFULA

Is that impurity of the blood which produces unsightly lumps or swellings in the neck; which causes running sores on the arms, legs, or feet; which develops ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, often causing blindness or deafness; which is the origin of pimples, cancerous growths, or "humors," which, fastening upon the lungs, causes consumption and death. It is the most ancient of all diseases, and very few persons are entirely free from it.

How Can It Be CURED

By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the remarkable cures it has accomplished, has proven itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. If you suffer from scrofula, try Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"Every spring my wife and children have been troubled with scrofula, my little boy, three years old, being a terrible sufferer. Last spring he was one mass of sores from head to foot. We took Hood's Sarsaparilla, and all have been cured of the scrofula. My little boy is entirely free from sores, and all four of my children look bright and healthy." W. B. ATHERTON, Passaic City, N. The Jubilee Concert.

A very pleasing jubilee concert was given by members of the Murray Association last evening, in the Universalist chapel. The house was full, which indicated that everybody expected a first class entertainment, and none were disappointed. The singers in this concert were all colored, and their songs were all original—once. The 6th number on the programme was a "Selected" solo, by Eliza Snipes; (everybody in the hall declared she sang like Alice Nelson, but of course it wasn't she.) Eliza sang a genuine, original, local satire, in which the electric lights were brightened up a little, the Postmaster came in for a share of encomium, and a well-known Bank official was slightly lampooned. Eliza was encored again and again and was several times compelled, much against her will (?) to come forward, and part grudgingly with the jewels of her satirical song.

In the second part, the Hampden (Cream) Students were introduced. They sang "Sea Saw," with good effect, Perley acting as King pin, or pivot. The 11th number, a solo, selected, by Sam Jackson, who, had he been white, would have greatly resembled Albert H. Merrill, was rendered with good effect. The selection was of a highly sentimental nature, and the colored lass who played the banjo accompaniment, responded to the sentiment in a manner that provoked much mirth amongst the audience. The lassie, by the way somebody mistook for Addie—I think that is what they called her. Ben Ellis rendered the last solo—"Keep in the middle of the road" with such good effect as to call forth hearty encores, and Charles—I mean Ben, looked a little tired when he was finally permitted to retire.

Rev. A. F. Welch announced for the association, that the new drama "Placer Gold" will be given a week from next Wednesday evening.

The Danvers Historical Society will celebrate on Monday, the 20th of April 1891, the First Battle of the Revolutionary War (April 19, 1775), with special reference to the part which patriots of the town took in connection with the event. Meetings will take place at the Town Hall, at 3 o'clock, and also at 7.30 P. M., when addresses will be made by Hon. R. S. Rantoul, of Salem, Hon. Mellen Chamberlain, of Boston, President E. H. Capen, D. D., of Tufts College and others, these speeches being interspersed with short biographical sketches of some of the Danvers men who responded to the call of their country.

The receipts of the Marblehead post-office for the year ending March 31, were $7052 17 against $5072 23 for the preceding year.

LOCAL LINES.

Co-operative Bank meeting to-night.

The Essex Electric Co. are repainting the poles in the streets.

A farmer on Lowell street is bringing up a litter of pigs on the bottle.

Mr. B. H. Taylor is preparing foundations for a new residence in West Peabody.

Rev. A. F. Welch will exchange tomorrow with G. I. Keirn of Portland, who is said to be a very able and eloquent preacher.

John W. Holley retires from the Call today. Salem, Peabody and Danvers are covered by Ed. Little.

Joseph and Jacob Rand better known as the "cubs" were arrested this morning charged with stealing a bridle and blanket from the Rogers Farm.

Rev. Mr. Reynolds, the new pastor of the Baptist Church, was tendered a reception Wednesday evening by members of the church and society. Vocal and instrumental music were furnished.

Gustavus Merrill has a cane of white oak, taken from a French man-of-war that went down in Boston harbor in 1782. The identical piece of wood that the cane is made from was in the water for about eighty years. The owner thinks, therefore, it is unnecessary to "wet it down."

Charles A., only child of William Farnham, formerly of this town, died in Gloucester Monday, at the age of 14 years, of rheumatism around the heart, the result of the measles. The burial took place at the Elm street cemetery Thursday at 2 30 P. M.

The Essex car propelled by the Rae motor is not considered by the passengers so smooth-running as those equipped with the Franklin. No cars that have the power communicated to both sets of trucks, run as smoothly as those geared after the style of the Franklin.

Mr. William P. White, son of Mrs. George W. Elliott of West Peabody, was united in marriage, to Miss Lizzie E. Chamberlain of Ryegate, Vt., at the residence of the bride's parents, on Fast Day. On Monday the twain, returning from their bridal trip, took up their abode in West Peabody.

A gentleman crossing the Square one day this week, noticed the sign of Distin, the tailor, 18 Main street. He entered, selected a suit, and was surprised to see the large assortment and extremely low prices. If you want a spring suit or overcoat, give him a call at once and make a selection. He can fit you like a glove.

The Rae motor on the Essex Electric is giving fairly good satisfaction. It is slower than the Franklin motor with which the rest of the road is equipped, but aside from this, passengers notice little if any difference. The Rae is put on as an experiment only. The manufacturers attaching it to their own expense, in order to show what it will do.

The Wright tennis club held its annual meeting Monday evening and voted in 16 new members, making the total membership 64. The club will further improve its grounds and will have the finest in the county. The following officers were chosen: President, Harry P. Hutchinson; vice president, George T. Osborn, Edward S. Nichols; secretary, A. H. Patterson; treasurer, John F. Moore; representatives to county league, H. P. Hutchinson, J. J. Thorndike.

The tanning and currying establishment of F. Osborne & Co. on Foster street has shut down for an indefinite period, and about one hundred and fifty men are thrown out of employment. This establishment has always been one of the busiest in town and has the name of being one of the best to work in. The cause of the suspension is the settlement of the estate of one of the partners, recently deceased, and to bring about a reorganization of the firm before resuming business.

Citizens of Peabody were pained to learn of the assignment of Thomas Carroll, this week. Heavy failures, combined with other causes necessitated a suspension, and last Monday it was announced that an assignment had been made to P. J. Lynch, of the firm of Lynch Bros. of Beverly. No satisfactory estimate of the liabilities can be made until the meeting of the creditors which will take place in a few days. But they will aggregate something like $30,000. The assets are thought to amount to fully half the liabilities.

A temperance social was held in Franklin Hall Thursday evening which was a very enjoyable occasion. About 225 persons sat down to refreshments in Temperance Hall. Rev. I. Ainsworth presided over the speech making. With very happy little speeches, he introduced Rev. W. P. Ray, Rev. J. B. Wilson of Freeport, Me., Rev. Mr. Hobbs, Rev. A. F. Welch, Mr. Charles Goulding, Frank E. Farnham, Miss E. T. Larkin, Rev. Mr. Hudson and Rev. G. A. Hall. Mrs. Benj. Upton favored with a selection of songs, and all expressed themselves as well pleased with the gathering.

Household Economy.

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL.

"A Midnight Bell" will be withdrawn after to-night and give place to that romantic play, the most gigantic stage production of any age—the "Soudan," with the original cast, and marvelously realistic scenes, which will begin a revival on Monday, at the Boston Theatre.

John L. Stoddard will deliver his famous lecture on the "Passion Play of 1890," at the Tremont Theatre, Monday.

"Beau Brummell" has the Globe Theatre boards. It is immense.

"The Colonel" will command attention at the Grand Opera House, next week.

Rentz-Santley Novelty and Burlesque Co. at the Howard, to-night. Next week, J. H. Wallick.

The successful run of the "Senator" closes at the Hollis Street Theatre to-night. Monday Julia Marlowe will commence an engagement at this attractive resort. Sales of seats began lively on Thursday morning.

The third week of "New Lamps for Old," at the Boston Museum found no abatement of interest.

ESSEX COUNTY.

George A. Andrews, who has been a prominent dry goods dealer at No. 72 Main street, Essex, was arrested on Saturday afternoon on charge of setting fire to the store occupied by him. The building is owned by Mrs. Ann G. Burnham. District Officer Shaw, who made the arrest took Andrews to Ipswich before Trial Justice Charles A. Sayward, who ordered the prisoner to recognize in the sum of $3000 for his appearance on Friday. Andrews was taken to Salem jail in default of sureties, by Officer Shaw. Certain circumstances at the time of the fire suggested incendiarism, and officers have been investigating the case since. Andrews was born and reared in Essex. He studied for the ministry and was ordained as a freewill Baptist clergyman, leaving Essex to preach in Maine. He returned to his native town about a dozen years ago and established himself in the dry goods business, retiring from the pulpit. He has been a citizen of excellent reputation among his fellow townsmen.

Ipswich wants a street railroad. If they don't ask too high for a franchise, they may get it.

Hon. Wm. D. Northend of Salem, gave an interesting lecture before a large audience in the Unitarian church, Newburyport, last Sunday evening, on Crime and its Cure. He took a strong stand against the truant school system, as he has heretofore done.

Haverhill had a mad dog scare last Sunday. A hound belonging in Kingston, N. H., escaped from its keeper and made his way through Bradford, where 50 or 60 dogs were bitten, then proceeded to Haverhill, where it is thought about 150 more were bitten by the diseased canine. The hound was shot by the police and many of the dogs bitten have already been killed and others will be despatched. Several thousand people gathered upon the street to see the animal and intense excitement prevailed for a time.

One of the old buildings formerly a part of the Salem Laboratory plant, on Walter street, took fire on Saturday noon and burned fiercely for some time. It was saturated with combustible fluids. The structure was just being remodeled and enlarged. It was pretty completely gutted. The place has been used of late for cleansing oily cotton waste.

Gen. Wm. Cogswell will deliver the memorial-day address at Haverhill.

REMEMBER THESE.

It will puzzle posterity to make out why some men have been given statues.

The only way to get people to live right is to first get them to believe right.

Love is the only thing in this life that man needs that he cannot get for himself.

One of the greatest victories possible in this life is to be able to say no to yourself.

Water never rises above its level, and no man's life ever rises higher than his belief.

One of the hardest things in the world to do is for one woman to deceive another.

If you want to make yourself miserable, the easiest way to do it is to become a fault-finder.

Nothing but having a hard time ourselves will enable us to sympathize very much with other people.

If there wasn't any money in this world it would be hard to find out just how mean some men are.

It is a grand thing for us when we find out that we are not responsible for all the work in the world.

There isn't one man in ten thousand who knows what kind of a man he would be if he had plenty of money.

When a crowd of men get together they talk about women in general, and when women get together they talk about some man in particular.

The man who could run a newspaper to suit everybody went to heaven long ago. But hell still yawns for the numerous individual who thinks he can run a newspaper just that way.

Mrs. Larkin—Here's a paper which says the burglar should not be turned away empty. Mr. Larkin—That's right. Fill it with lead.

Father—I wish you would not lace so tightly. It is positively inhuman. Daughter—Why, I thought you would be pleased, father. The material for this dress cost seven dollars a yard.

The Nestor of the Magazines.

"According to Homer, Nestor, the old warrior and the wise counsellor of the Greeks, had ruled over three generations of men, and was wise as the immortal gods."

The North American Review.

has been in the van of American thought for more than three quarters of a century, ranking always with the best and most influential periodicals in the world. It is the mouth-piece of the men who know most about the great topics on which Americans require to be informed from month to month, its contributors being the leaders of thought and action in every field. Those who would take counsel of the highest knowledge on the affairs of the time, and learn what is to be said regarding them by the recognized authorities on both sides, must therefore read THE NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW, the Nestor of the magazines.

"The North American Review is ahead of any magazine this country has ever seen in the importance of the topics it discusses and the eminence of its contributors."—Albany Argus.

"Has become, as it were, the intelligent American citizen's hand-book on great questions of the hour."—Buffalo Express.

The North American Review touches Americans on almost every point in which they are interested."—Boston Herald.

"A moulder of intelligent opinion by the impartial presentation of both sides of important subjects."—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

The list of recent contributors to the Review forms a roll of representative men and women of the time, including W. E. Gladstone, J. G. Blaine, Cardinal Gibbons, Speaker Reed, Ex-Speaker Carlisle, W. McKinley, Jr., Ouida, Mme. Adam, General Sherman, Admiral Porter, Mme. Blavatsky, T. A. Edison, Bishop H. C. Potter, Elizabeth S. WIT AND HUMOR.

The Continent says that when Gen. Spinola gets through with his collars he has them cut down into shirts for his page in Congress.

They were talking about trees. My favorite, she said, is the oak. It is so noble, so magnificent in its strength. But what is your favorite? Yew, he replied.

No, siree, said the umbrella manufacturer, I shall not advertise in your paper. I've watched your attitude towards my business. Last summer you predicted seven clear to two rainy days, and I don't consider that friendly.

What sort of a man is young Cadley? asked the tailor at the commercial agency. One of the most promising on our list. Thanks. That's all I want to know. I've enough promising young men on my books now to bankrupt a richer man.

The bustle of a big city is never tied on, says the Denver Sun. And it is never noticed on the outskirts, adds the Minneapolis Tribune. However gentlemen, like all other bustles, it is always kept up by the use of enterprising newspapers.

Mistress—Do you like children? Domestic—Depends a deal on the children, mum. Well, yes, I presume it does. Where did you work last? With Mrs. Goodheart, mum. She had only one child. Oh, well, if you could stand that horrid little brat of Mrs. Goodheart's I'm sure you will not object to my six little darlings.

Being asked what conscience was, a boy replied, "An inward monitor." Asked what a monitor meant, the ready answer was, "An ironclad vessel." Another lad was asked what he understood by celerity, and perhaps from experience, he described it as something to put hot plates down with.

Spriggs (who is bald) What makes your whiskers so thin on the right side of your face? Figgs—Oh, that comes from always sleeping on my right side. That rubs away the hair. Briggs—If that's the rule, then I suppose Spriggs must sleep while standing on his head.

She—Why has that pretty settler got such a big green ribbon? He—Irish, I suppose.

When a man is living he is in the singular number; when he is dead he becomes plural. He becomes not a "remain," but "remains."

Tramp (to hired girl)—Could I get a bite here? Hired girl—No; we ain't got anything on the place that would bite such a looking object as you are.

Exchange—What! you say that Mr. Smith, the merchant, has gone blind? Here's a pretty how d'ye do. I've got a bill on the man which is made out payable at sight!

Irate Customer—Here, you old scoundrel, you guaranteed these flannels to last a year, and look at them after having been twice washed. Merchant—S'help me, you got 'em t'ree weeks and wash 'em twice! I said von year and von wash.

Don't you ever go to see comedies? Inquired Miss Laura. No, said Miss Irene, laughing produces wrinkles. And Miss Irene went on reading the "Editor's Drawer" in Harper's.

Where the Periodical Comes In.—Bunting—I know now why spears are sometimes called periodicals. Larkin—Isn't it because some men take them at regular intervals? Bunting—No. It is because reading makes a full man.

Jem—Who's our foremost general, Adm'r Tom?—Well judging from the advertisements in this paper, I should say General Debility.

A MYSTERY EXPLAINED.

The papers contain frequent notices of rich, pretty and educated girls eloping with negroes, tramps and coachmen. The well-known specialist, Dr. Franklin Miles, says all such girls are more or less hysterical, nervous, very impulsive, unbalanced; usually subject to headache, neuralgia, sleeplessness, immoderate crying or laughing. These show a weak nervous system for which there is no remedy equal to Restorative Nervine. Trial bottles and a fine book containing many marvelous cures, free at William T. Lee's, who also sells, and guarantees Dr. Miles' celebrated New Heart Cure, the finest of heart tonics. Cures fluttering, short breath, etc.

Our Public Smokers.

How many people were aware of the fact that the committees of their representatives in the General Court are smoking at the public expense? Not many, probably; but the itemized expenses of certain committees for March which we printed yesterday will give them a new view of men and things at the state-house. We present below the bills of some of these committees in a new form:

Committee on drainage:—
Total expenses,	$46.50
For cigars,	14.00
Committee on manufactures:—
Total expenses,	1,067.73
For cigars,	29.55
Committee on prisons:—
Total expenses,	190.55
For cigars,	25.00
Committee on railroads:—
Total expenses,	22.50
For cigars,	10.50
Committee on roads and bridges:—
Total expenses,	73.00
For cigars,	14.00

Five committees for one month present a bill of $93.55 for cigars—more than 6 per cent. of the total expenses of all the committees and for four of the committees over 19 per cent. And this money will buy 1500 very good cigars—as good as legislators ought to feel that they could afford to smoke at the state's expense. Some of the committee members probably do not smoke at all, and the committees were not probably on duty more than 15 days at the outside during the month. It will be seen, therefore, that they not only smoked at the state's expense but smoked furiously, and much as a tramp when he has broken into the well-stocked larder of some house. They went at it in the spirit that the legislators of last year went at the good things spread on the tables at the West End railroad's banquet—as though a free "feed" did not fall in their path every day. Let the people just look over the bills above presented and see how they smoked.

Now why should the state furnish cigars for the committeemen of the General Court? Why, any more than furnish them liquor or chewing tobacco or cough drops or liver pills? And why should any legislator holding other than a sordid view of his position and its opportunities care to smoke at the public expense? These cigar bills should not be allowed. They are evidences of the deplorably low tone into which the Legislature has sunk in recent years. When deadheadism runs to this length it ought to be bounced.

Springfield Republican.

An Informal Wedding.

A remarkable tale of an "informal" wedding is related by a clergyman who was for some time settled in a small town in western New York. The father of the bride invited the minister to spend the evening at his house, and, incidentally to marry his daughter. He asked at what time the ceremony was to be performed, but was told that it was not yet decided; the whole thing was to be very informal, and the minister had better plan to spend the evening, as they had arranged to have a "grand good time."

I presented myself at his house, therefore, early in the evening, and found a large company assembled. The young people were playing games in one room, while their elders chatted socially in another.

As the evening wore on music had its part in the festivity. The bride elect "performed" on the melodeon, while the future partner of her joys exerted his energies upon the flute.

Ten o'clock came, and when the host graciously invited every one out to a "spread in the dining room," I began to think that possibly they had changed their minds and the wedding was not to take place after all. But as I stood rather irresolutely, wondering what was expected of me, the host took me by the arm and led the way into the dining room. He placed me at the head of the long table, while the bride and groom were seated at my right and left.

All hands were busy with the good things with which the table was heaped, when the host, who had been hovering about the company instead of sitting down, whispered in my ear, "I guess this is as good a time as any."

Then he added, aloud, "Stand up, Mary and John!" And surely they did stand up, and I performed the ceremony, with one of the "contracting parties" on one side of the table and one on the other, their hands being joined over a dish of excellent baked Indian pudding, which had the place of honor before me.

As soon as I had pronounced the pair husband and wife the groom left his seat, and going around to the bride's side of the table, gave her a hearty kiss, after which he returned to his own seat and renewed his attack upon the supper.

I have had queer experiences at other weddings, but never one where I felt the absurdity so keenly as on this truly "informal" occasion.—Youth's Companion.

HEIGHT OF CRUELTY.

Nervous women seldom receive the sympathy they deserve. While often the picture of health, they are constantly ailing. To withhold sympathy from these unfortunates is the height of cruelty. They have a weak heart, causing the shortness of breath, fluttering, pain in side, weak and hungry spells, and finally swelling of ankles, oppression, choking, smothering and dropsy. Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure is just the thing for them. For their nervousness, headache, weakness, etc, his Restorative Nervine is unequalled. Fine treatise on "Heart and Nervous Diseases" and marvelous testimonials free. Sold and guaranteed by Wm. T. Lee.

Walter Scott's Library Chair.

Francis Wilson, the comedian, is the proud possessor of the chair which Sir Walter Scott used in his library at Abbotsford. A beautiful bit of furniture it is, and well worth, aside from all sentimental considerations, the large price paid by the enterprising and discriminating curio, writes Eugene Field in the Chicago News. As we understand it, Bouton, the New York dealer, had this chair on exhibition several months. Mr. Wilson happened along one day, having just returned from a professional tour in the West. Mr. William Winter, dramatic critic of the Tribune, was looking at the chair; he had been after it for some time, but was waiting for the price to abate somewhat.

"The Players' Club should have that chair," said he to Bouton, "and if you'll give better terms, I'll get a number of the members to chip in and buy it."

To this appeal Bouton sturdily remained deaf. After Mr. Winter had left the place Wilson said to Bouton: "Send the chair up to my house; here is a check for the money."

There are rumors to the effect that when Mr. Winter heard of this transaction he rent his garments and gnashed his teeth, and wildly implored somebody to hang a millstone about his neck and cast him into outer darkness.

—Boston Herald.

HE TOLD THE TRUTH!

I was troubled with Liver Complaint for years, and suffered terribly. Lake, the druggist, advised me to take Sulphur Bitters. I took three bottles and now I am a well man.—L. Fenner, Waterbury, Conn.

This seems to be the year for young people to die, but if you will take good care of yourself you may be able to pull through all right.

People are very inconsistent. When a man is trying to sleep, they will make so much noise he can't sleep, but when he is lying dead in his house, they will walk around on tip toe, and talk in hushed voices, though he is in a sleep that knows no waking. It is a pity that they do not treat him with as much consideration as they treat his remains.

TRY DANA'S SARSAPARILLA!

A man who has practiced medicine for 40 years, ought to know salt from sugar; read what he says:

TOLEDO, O., Jan. 10, 1887.

Messrs. F. J. Cheney & Co.—Gentlemen:—I have been in the general practice of medicine for most 40 years, and would say that in all my practice and experience have never seen a preparation that I could prescribe with as much confidence of success as I can Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by you. Have prescribed it a great many times and its effect is wonderful, and would say in conclusion that I have yet to find a case of Catarrh that it would not cure, if they would take it according to directions.

Yours truly,

Office, 215 Summit St.

We will give $100 for any case of Catarrh that cannot be cured with Hall's Catarrh Cure. Taken internally.

English Capital in Our Theatres.

H. R. Jacobs, who is the owner of 15 theatres, said yesterday that an English syndicate had been formed to buy his route. He asks $500,000, and they offer only half that amount, but in all probability all of Mr. Jacobs' theatrical interest will soon pass into the hands of the syndicate.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all other Throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper, W. A. NOYES, 820 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.

"For God is my King of old, working Salvation in the midst of the earth."—Ps. 74: 12
"Thus saith the Lord, 'Is my hand shortened at all, that it cannot redeem? Or have no power to deliver?'—Isa. 50: 2.

The funeral train of Senator Hearst, of California, was said to be a whiskey shop on wheels, where poker was the principal amusement. Senator Stamford had his car attached to the train to accompany it to California, but when he saw the long train of Pullmans laden with relatives of senators, bent on having a good time at government expense, he had his car detached from the train, and it left without him.—The Lever of Chicago.

This funeral party, which became a drunken junket across the continent, was in charge of Mr. Valentine, and Senators Sawyer, Stockbridge, Vance, Berry, Blue and Pugh. The Grafton excursion train caught up with the Hearst train at El Paso, Texas, on the return trip, and was close behind all the way to St. Louis. On board the Grafton train was Mrs. Helen M. Gougar of Lafayette, Indiana, who thinks she saw behaviour more shameless, on the funeral train during this trip, than ever came to her notice before, and at St. Louis she left her party, unwilling to continue to Chicago in such close proximity to a congressional spree, and sickened beyond expression by the disgrace heaped upon the nation. Mrs. Gougar says the baggage car of the Hearst train was full of wine and champagne and the waiters were kept busy in carrying in filled bottles and returning with them empty. About eleven hours out of El Paso the baggage car of the Hearst train got off the track and both there, and at Texarkana, most disgraceful scenes were enacted by the highest law-makers of the land in their eagerness to see that they did not lose any precious bottle of their stock. The empty bottles were being carried back to Washington for the purpose of establishing with exactitude how much was drunk that the Sergeant might have a record. The shame of this prolonged debauch is a subject that concerns every citizen of the land.

Lady Macdonald, wife of the Premier of Canada, has long been an abstainer. A lady of high social position met her one day at a grand dinner and noted that she took no wine. Expressing her surprise she asked, "Did you not set out wine when you entertained the Marquis of Lorne?" "Never!" was Lady Macdonald's reply. "But did you not feel that you must not apologize?" was asked. "Certainly not; wine is not a natural beverage, and so should rather come in than go out with apology." The clear answer, and the noble example, led the second lady to become an abstainer also.

"WHAT IT COSTS.—The whole amount of money spent annually for liquor and tobacco would pay for all the bread, meat clothing shoes, sugar and molasses, public education and Christian Missions, and have enough left to build 28,000 good, comfortable homes for 150,000 people.

Again, if the 1,600 millions of dollars spent for these poisons were in silver dollars and laid side by side on the equator, they would make a band around the earth and then go nearly around again. The whole amount of liquor consumed annually would fill a canal 20 feet wide, 20 feet deep and 46 miles long, and so we might say that in this huge canal of poison 80,000 persons are drowned each year.

Do you trade at the Salem Shoe Store?

Let us give you several reasons why you should.

We are determined to build up a large trade whether we make any profit or not.

We have the money to pay spot cash for all we buy, owing no man a cent on our stock.

Having the money we are enabled to get lower prices from the manufacturers, who in many cases must have spot cash for their shoes.

We buy almost wholly from manufacturers, thereby saving our customers at least one profit.

We are satisfied with a small profit believing that it is better to sell a large quantity at a small profit than a few at a large one.

We have enlarged and improved our store, thus giving the facilities for a largely increased business.

We are now receiving large lines of new shoes for spring and summer wear. Call and look them over and we will show you some of the handsomest you ever saw.

EASTER OPENING — OF FINE — Spring Clothing!

Furnishing Goods,
HATS & CAPS, FOR MEN'S, BOYS' AND CHILDREN'S WEAR.

WINTER CLOTHING. Generally when Easter comes, it's certainly time to think of Spring Overcoats—where you can get the best at the best prices. "The early bird" is always greeted with pleasure by all. Early buyers are always suited best. We'll suit you with a Spring suit, any time you call, but it is better to lead the procession. Extremes in dress do not show good taste. The best style for you is not appropriate for a chicken and may rotte for the next man. "Fine feathers make fine birds" and fine Clothing makes a fine man—in appearance surely.

With us you don't have to "shell out" much money to get fine Clothing in style, material and fit, and you know it will wear well and look well.

We have now in stock for the benefit of early buyers, 1500 Men's and Young Men's Dress and Business Suits including Prince Alberts, 3 Button Cutaway Frocks, and Sacks. Over 50 different patterns to select from at prices for the finest grades ranging from $15.00 to $28.00.

And for the lower grades,

$6.00 to $12.00.

We wish to call especial attention to our elegant display of Spring Overcoats. We have nearly one thousand of these useful garments in stock, including all the new shades and some of the finest goods manufactured. There are over 40 different patterns; they are perfect in fit and we shall sell the finest grades at

The lower grades at:

We have now in stock nearly three thousand Boys' and Children's Suits including all the latest novelties which we shall sell at prices which will be sure to please our patrons.

MRS. BRACKETT.

ALMOST A MIRACLE!

Read and Remember!

MRS. BRACKETT IS THE WIFE OF THE REV. DAVID BRACKETT, PASTOR OF THE FIRST F. BAPTIST CHURCH, OF THORN- DIKE, ME., AND A LADY HIGHLY ESTEEMED BY ALL WHO KNOW HER. SHE SAYS:—

BROOKS, ME., Oct. 22, 1890.
Gents:—When I commenced the use of DANA'S SARSAPARILLA for Rheumatism, I had lost the use of my right arm. THE SHOULDER JOINT WAS VERY TENDER AND VERY STIFF. I could not sew, and could not get my hand to my head. I had a great deal of pain in the chest, especially around my lungs. My skin was yellow and rough, and I was tired all the time.

I have now taken four bottles, and the pain and soreness are gone. Complexion natural, and tired feeling fast leaving. I sleep well nights, and the STIFF JOINT IN THE SHOULDER IS FAST RESUMING ITS NATURAL ELASTICITY. I can sew or do any work as usual.

I am still using the SARSAPARILLA, and expect to entirely recover from the effects of the rheumatism that has troubled me so long. I think DANA'S SARSAPARILLA IS DEATH TO RHEUMATISM.

Yours truly,
MRS. D. BRACKETT.

The only Sarsaparilla guaranteed to absolutely cure Diseases of the Stomach, Liver, and Kidneys, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Loss of Appetite, Sick Headache, Muscular Rheumatism, Diarrhoea, Female Weakness, Enervation, General Debility, Eruptions of the Skin, Pimples, Boils, Tumors, Scrofulous Affections, Cancerous Humors, Salt Rheum, Syphilis, Catarrh, Ringworm, Carbuncles, Ulcers, and Sores, Malarial Poison, Pruritus, etc., etc.

LOCAL LINES.

Rev. Israel Ainsworth has moved to Rockport.

The boy with dandelions is numerous just at present.

Mr. Robert Murray left town Monday, for Colorado.

Augustus H. Sanger, Jr., removed to Waltham yesterday.

Money sold at 10 cents premium at the Co-operative Bank last Saturday.

J. H. & J. C. Rourke, No. 23 Caller street, have closed their grocery store.

John H. J. Colcord has gone to Florida on a tour of business and pleasure.

The local tennis clubs are preparing for business, by having their courts put in condition.

Dr. A. A. Frost, the popular dentist, has removed to 214 Essex street, over Ropes' drug store.

The Murray Association will give the interesting drama, Placer Gold, next Friday evening.

A lodge of thirty members of another one-year-order, was started in Franklin Hall on Tuesday evening.

Charles E. Teague has been on his Boston express route again this week, after his long illness of two months.

Mr. Nathan Bushby spoke at the Danvers Historical Society gathering, on Captains Caleb Low and Samuel Epes.

H. K. Pavear was driving on Main street last Sunday, when suddenly the hind wheel collapsed. No injuries resulted.

The shavers at George Clerk's barber shop refused a reduction of two cents per dozen, Monday morning, and quit.

John J. Sweeney has purchased a lot of land on Tremont street next to Charles E. Stone, and will erect a residence.

The dramatic entertainment of the Murray association "Placer Gold," has been postponed until Friday evening next week.

Dr. Campbell who has succeeded to the dental practice of Dr. Williams can be found at 291 Essex street, Salem, next to Mechanic Hall.

The dump on Warren street has just been fixed up and cleared out, but it was done in such an unsatisfactory manner that the Board of Health will order it to be done over.

The 7 o'clock Naumkeag Electric, from the square, burned out a motor on Boston street hill, near the old burying ground, Sunday evening. The car was packed with passengers who were obliged to take other cars.

Several Peabody vocalists participated in the Salem Oratorio Musical Festival this week.

Rev. Mr. Cummings gave an address in the South Church last Sunday forenoon, he made an appeal for aid for the New England Home for Little Wanderers. A collection of $87 was taken in response to his appeal.

The Essex Electric Street Railway Company, will issue a new time table on Monday. Some changes have been made recently. The first car leaves Salem City Hall, at 6 o'clock A. M. and the last car leaves the Square at 11.30 P. M.

The meeting of carpenters in Ashland Hall on Tuesday evening was not very largely attended, and an adjournment was voted, to meet with the Union of Salem, Monday evening. The movement will not be likely to be very successful here.

Baldwin's hotel will close the first of May, the landlord having found it a losing venture without a liquor license. If the building can be leased it will probably be re-opened and run as a first class boarding house, with accommodations for transient guests.

The bill to authorize the town to establish an electric light plant, with the bills for the benefit of several other towns, was side tracked this week to give the right-of-way to a general law enabling all municipalities to engage in the same business.

Rev. Israel Ainsworth will be installed as pastor of the Congregational church at Rockport on Thursday next, April 30. Among those invited are Rev. DeWitt S. Clark of the Tabernacle church, Salem, and Rev. Wm. B. Smith of the Baptist church, Rockport.

An illustrated History of the Salem Oratorio has been written and published by John P. Fernald, formerly editor of the PRESS. It is having a large sale at 15 cents per copy. The book contains about 40 pages. It is neatly executed and is highly appreciated by the society.

R. E. Robson, the old and well-known manufacturer of, and dealer in bicycles, calls attention in another column, to his large stock of cycles of all kinds. He has two places of business, 154 Essex street and 39 Boston street, Salem. You will do well to give him a call.

Miss S. F. Kittredge of the Woman's Relief Corp., was presented by her comrades, at the last meeting, with an elegant lamp, and corp's charm, a gold chain, and box of flowers, the latter being intended for her mother. About fifty ladies were present, all of whom had a hand in the enterprise.

Riders of bi-cycles and tri-cycles, should be very careful to read what Charles E. Whitten has to say about them in another column. J. H. Sherman, manager of the store, 295 Essex street, beat the record on one of the machines sold by this firm, making 123 miles in the short space of 12 hours.

Women of Peabody are reminded that, when the town assessors begin on Friday, May 1, to collect the names of voters to make up the tax list of 1891, they may give their names to the officials just as they give the names of the male members of their families, if they desire to vote for school committee next year.

William E. Stanley was arrested this week, for using profane language on a Salem and Danvers horse car while passing through Margin street. He had an altercation with Mr. King, driver of the car, and some profane epithets were used in the heat of the discussion. Stanley was fined $5 without costs.

A party from this town attended the invitation party of the Arbutus Club of Danvers Tuesday evening. Among the visitors were Dr. John Shanahan, Mr. and Mrs. Jas. J. Carroll, John P. Murphy, C. J. Houghton, R. F. Morris, Miss Mollie E. Hines, Miss Kittie Warren, Miss Josie Marron and John F. O'Connell.

A Washington street lady was drawing some water to drink Tuesday when a bloodsucker, two inches long, came out of the faucet, through a hole in the wire gauze strainer in the filterer. If she had not looked at the water before drinking it, she would probably have swallowed the leech. It is now on exhibition at B. F. Stevens' store.

The American Express business seems to be a kind of shuttlecock in this town. The last man who took the agency, was William McDonald, the popular hackman. He has concluded to let somebody else try it after May 1st. Mr. George H. Green will be his successor. We wish him success. The line is a very great convenience in shipping parcels, outside of the route covered by Munroe & Arnold and Teagues express.

Francis H. Appleton will give an illustrated lecture on Forestry at the West School House this evening. A barge will leave the Square at 7 o'clock, to convey those who wish to attend.

Joseph W. Leonard, who was charged with shooting Timothy O'Connell on the first day of the present month, in the pastures, was tried at the Juvenile term of the District Court, Thursday and sentenced to the Concord Reformatory. He appealed.

At a council held in the Second Congregational church, South Peabody representatives of the various congregational churches, of Salem, Danvers, Lynnfield Centre, Lynn and Peabody being present; the following resolutions were adopted: "The council desires to place upon record its grateful recognition of the Christian scholarship and ability of the retiring pastor, and of the efficient service which he has rendered to this church during the three and one-half years of his pastorate. Most heartily and unreservedly do we recommend him to the churches as a brother beloved in the Lord, a faithful and earnest preacher of the gospel and a diligent and affectionate pastor. Our sympathies and prayers go with him to the new field of labor, with a strong hope and fervent prayer that a worthy successor to his work may soon be secured."

The trial of Joseph and Jacob Rand, whose arrest was noted in our last issue, took place on Tuesday morning John Sheehan coachman at the Rogers farm appeared, and identified the blanket and bridle found in their possession, as property of his employer. Testified that the articles were in Mrs. Rogers barn a short time prior to last Saturday, when they were found in the possession of the Rands. Mr. Treadwell a brother-in-law of the prisoners, and now or formerly guardian for them testified that the property was bought by the Rands. Joseph also took the stand and gave nodding answers to a lot of leading questions intended to dispute the theory of guilt; at one time forgetting himself and giving an answer in a half growl, which was the nearest he has been known to approach to speaking, for many years. The court thought there was some doubt, and ordered the prisoners discharged.

A complaint was made before Judge Merrill last week by Frank Perley, against his wife, Rose E. Perley, whom he married six years ago, she being then 16 years of age. After several applications by the husband, a warrant was finally issued for her arrest, on the charge of keeping a disorderly house at the residence of Charles C. Galeucia on Lyonfield street. At midnight, last Saturday, officers Carlin, Grady, Jones and Johnson visited the premises and Perley demanded entrance to her room, which was in the upper portion of a shed adjoining Galeucia's house. Upon the approach of the officers, who demanded that she open the door, Mrs. Perley sprang off the bunk upon which she was lying and asked, "Why should I open the door for you?" The officers then told her who they were, and she let them in. Her eyes flashed and in one hand she held a revolver with which she would have shot anyone but an officer. No one was in the room with the woman and there was not the slightest suspicion that any one had been there, but the officers had a warrant for her arrest and after giving her ample time to dress they took her to the police station and locked her up. At the trial her husband took the stand and was subjected to a galling fire of cross-examination by F. E. Farnham, Esq., who appeared for the defence, and was forced to admit that he was seeking for a divorce, and that the proceedings had been put up by him to get evidence for his divorce case. Evidence of guilt was so flimsy, and the motive so apparent, that Judge Merrill ordered her discharge without further ceremony. There was not the slightest foundation for the criminal charge. Mrs. Perley had been living apart from her husband for reasons which she claims are ample justification, and has been obliged to earn her own living. She was doing nursing in Mr. Galeucia's family at the time of the proceedings, and accommodations were made for her in the room where she was arrested, as the house did not afford sufficient number of sleeping apartments. So far as Mr. Galeucia's family know, there has never been anything to create the slightest suspicion of wrong doing. She appeared to be a quiet and industrious woman, notwithstanding the fact she had a revolver where it could be used. She claims that affairs have transpired hitherto, which have suggested the necessity of protection.

LITERARY NOTES.

A story of unusual power and strange plot will begin in the May Cosmopolitan and run through three numbers: The story of a man, who three times in his life undertakes to paint Jesus. As a young painter full of health and life, full of joy, he puts on his canvas, a Greek ideal of strength and beauty; just as the picture is on the point of completion, he learns to love a beautiful woman who returns his passion. After weeks at her feet he returns to his studio one day, and is filled with disappointment when he gazes upon the face of the Christ. It is the face of a beautiful heathen god, bearing no impress of that divine love which the painter now knows must belong there. His canvas is turned on the wall, and inspired by love he sets to work upon the image of a new Christ, who would be a God of Love. Again his picture is completed when the second great change comes over his life. She whom he adores turns from him to give her love to the Prussian officer whose Greek beauty had been the model for his first picture. Going back to work under the shadow of this deep sorrow, he looks upon the face of Christ upon his easel, and sees that once more he has failed. There is the beautiful face irradiating love, but there is not upon it the refining touch of sorrow that must have been in the face of Him who was "a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief." There was this wanting. He must set to work again, and paint not only the beauty of the Divine Perfection, and the love that embraced all mankind, but the Sorrow of the Man God, who suffered for our sins. The author, Hjalmer Hjorth Boyesen, thinks he has given the best work of his life in this singular story. Two other pieces of fiction will attract attention in the May number of the Cosmopolitan; two real war stories by men who have been in the thick of the fight. One is by Archibald Forbes, the famous war correspondent, and the other by Albion W. Tourgee, author of, "The Fool's Errand." The illustrations of all three are something unusual. Boyesen's story, illustrated by Wenzell, so well known through the pages of "Life"; Forbes' story by Frederic Villiers, another famous war correspondent and artist, and Tourgee's story by Zogbaum. In addition to its strong fiction, this number contains a beautifully illustrated article on the Cleopatras of the Stage; another on New Philadelphia, for which the drawings were made by Harry Fenn. Some wonderful flash-light photographs illustrate the underground workings of a Leadville Silver Mine. Kennels and Kennel Clubs, and Dr. Koch and his Lymph, by one who went to Berlin to study the subject, are two articles with numerous illustrations. (Price 25 cents. Cosmopolitan Pub. Co., Madison Square, N. Y.)

Mr. Bok, the Editor of the Ladies' Home Journal, recently gave some interesting figures relative to the manuscripts received by his magazine during 1890. Owing to its departments and peculiar character, the Journal probably receives more manuscripts than any magazine published. Mr. Bok says that he received at his office a total number of 15,205 manuscripts. Of these, 2,280 were poems; 1,746 stories and 11,179 miscellaneous articles. Of the poems, 66 were accepted; of the stories, only 21, and of the articles 410, of which latter, however, over 300 were solicited articles. Thus, it will be seen that of the entire 15,000 manuscripts only 497 were accepted; a trifle over three per cent. Deducting from this the 300 accepted articles written at the Editor's solicitation, the net percentage of unsolicited manuscripts accepted is brought down to 197, or a little more than one per cent. Statistics such as these show how much utter trash is being written, and the number of persons writing who ought to be employing their time at something else.

It is not surprising that in over 100,000 households Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper is regularly found. This week's first page presents the first of a series of pictures of "Representative Railway Men;" Barnum's funeral has a page; the retirement of Edwin Booth, the actor, is signalized by nine pictures of him in various characters; the amateur photographic page is excellent; the Pennsylvania strike has a page, and Carlsbad (Austria), the most noted health resort in the world, has a page and four columns of intensely interesting descriptive matter. Get it of your newsdealer for ten cents.

The April St. Nicholas opens with a delightful illustrated sketch by Mrs. Foote, "The Gates on Grandfather's Farm,"—remembrances of a New England farm suggested by the associations with its old gateways. It is full of feeling, and while not beyond the young readers will be fully appreciated only by their elders. Mr. Welles gives us further autographs from his remarkable collection, especially a complete set of the Presidents' signatures, and a charming letter from Thackeray, hitherto unpublished. It is entirely characteristic of the great author and suggestive of his poem, "The White Squall." Mr. Frank S. Woodruff describes some "Busy Corners of the Orient," and shows us the primitive forms of industry in Syria. The article is illustrated by Mr. George Wharton Edwards. There is a peculiar sort of fanciful story told by Tudor Jenks, amusingly illustrated by E. B. Bessell, and a story for the little folks, called "Charlie's Shadows and their Shadow House," by Mattie E. Pettus, which is well fitted for reading aloud. The verse is excellent. Katherine S. Alcorn gives us a poetic parallel for the Hare and Tortoise fable, called "The Little Foot-page," for which Birch has drawn the graceful pictures; Margaret Johnson in "The Merrythought" is as cleverly humorous as usual, and poetry of a less purely amusing type is well represented by Richard E. Burton, Helen Gray Cone, Katharine Pyle, Valentine Adams, and others. The two serials, "Toby Trafford," and "The Boy Settlers," are steadily growing in interest, while "Elfin's Visit to Clondland" is concluded by an installment fully illustrated by amusing drawings. The frontispiece is an engraving by T. Johnson from Adrien Hanneman's beautiful portrait of a child, and is a fitting introduction to this beautifully illustrated number.

Sister Rose Gertrude has written another article for The Ladies' Home Journal for June, on "What It Is to Be a Leper," in which she gives a clear glimpse of leper life in Molokai; how the disease is contracted; how it is treated and cured, and how the lepers live in their exile.

Harper's Bazar for next week will contain "The Clever Cuckoo," a very charming bird paper by Olive Thorne Miller; "The Nineteenth Century Club," by Mary Gay Humphreys; and a story, "Uncle Nathan's Ear Trumpet," by Bessie Chandler.

It is a fact that a great deal of study is now being put upon the advertising pages of our leading periodicals. Experts write advertisements, the best artists design illustrations, and it is a matter of considerable interest, therefore, when one of the leading advertising firms of the country announce that they have published a sample book, in which they show 200 or more different advertisements they have written and designed for their customers. Alden & Faxon, Cincinnati, Ohio, well known in the advertising field, have just published a book with this title, and will send it on receipt of six cents in stamps. In addition to the advertisements, information and hints are given to advertisers.

The American Advertiser Reporter contains a list of all known advertisers. A new edition has lately appeared. It contains the names of about 50,000 persons interested in advertising.

A sample copy of Printers' Ink of the issue of May 6th will be mailed to every one of those persons whose names do not already appear on Printers' Ink mailing list. The edition of Printers' Ink for May 6th will slightly exceed 56,500 copies. No advance will be charged on the regular advertising rates for this special edition. Fifty cents a line, $100 a page is the price. Copy must be in hand not later than April 29th. Address orders to Geo. P. Rowell & Co., Publishers of Printers' Ink, 10 Spruce Street, N. Y.

George F. Edmunds was born in Richmond, Vermont, Feb. 1, 1823. He was educated at the common school and by a private tutor, studied law at an early age, and began the practice of law in 1849. In 1851 he settled in Burlington, and in 1854, 1855, 1857, 1858 and 1859, was elected to the Vermont Legislature serving three years as speaker, in 1861 and 1862 he was elected to the State Senate, officiating as President pro tem. of that body during those years. On the breaking out of the Rebellion he was a member of the State Convention which met to form a coalition between the Republicans and War Democrats and drew up the resolutions which were adopted in that Convention as the basis of union for the country. On the death of Solomon Foot he was appointed in his place to the United States Senate, taking his seat in April 1866 and the appointment confirmed by the Legislature. The Committees on which he served were those of Commerce, Pensions, Public Lands, Retrenchment and the Judiciary. During the Forty-second and Forty-third Congresses he was chairman of the committee on the Judiciary, and was re-elected to the Senate for the term ending in 1881. He was a member of the Electoral Commissions in 1876, which decided the Presidential controversy between Mr. Hayes and Mr. Tilden. At the National Convention in 1880 he received some votes for the nomination to the Presidency. The resignation of Mr. Edmunds from the United States Senate, which was announced to the governor of Vermont recently, will be a matter of deep regret to the best citizens of all parties throughout the country. Mr. Edmunds is by no means an old man, being but 63. He has been a member of the Senate for twenty-five years, and had previously been a member of the Vermont Legislature for six years, during which time he was three years speaker of the assembly and two years President of the Senate. This is a remarkable if not unprecedented record of continuous public service. In his long experience Senator Edmunds has become one of the most eminent and most valued members of the Senate and he has most amply justified the unshaken confidences reposed in him by his state. With the personal reasons, which induce him to retire from the Senate now, the public can have no concern but his state can not replace him at once, and the whole country will miss him.

Death of Gen. Von Moltke.

Field Marshal Count Von Moltke died suddenly last night. He attended the session of the Reichstag yesterday afternoon apparently in good health, and at 9 45 died suddenly of heart disease.

Jimson—All this talk about young wives' biscuits being as hard as bricks is a slanderous lie. Jimson—I'm glad to hear you say so, Jimson. Jimson—Yes, I've been married four weeks now, and every loaf of bread that Mrs. Jimson has made so far has been as soggy and soft as apple dump.

Terrible Ravages of La Grippe.

Boston papers facetiously remark that "La Grippe is seldom fatal unless you use all the remedies recommended for it." They are correct. The writer fully believes that the end of the poor "grip" victim, if he tried all the patent medicines that have adorned (?) the pages of our leading newspapers as sure "cures for La Grippe," would be like Mark Twain, who for his famous cold tried every remedy advised by his friends, until his stomach became so weak he began to vomit and continued until, as he avers, "he was like to throw up his mortal soul." We notice one of the leading advertisers of the day has been conspicuous at this opportune time by the absence of any claim to cure the "grip." They certainly deserve a "chromo" and we feel like giving them a free "ad" for their compassion upon our readers. The more so for the reason that probably more people have used their remedy, that good old medicine, Johnson's Anodyne Liniment for this foreign influenza, than all others combined. And why not? Certainly no other will relieve catarrhal colds, coughs, bronchial troubles, or neuralgic pains, as promptly as that same old Anodyne Liniment, and the above are all the symptoms or results of La Grippe. Herein lies the real danger from this epidemic of influenza; it leaves the mucous membrane linings of the nose, throat and bronchial tubes tender and very susceptible to the catarrh, bronchial troubles and pneumonia, which come with February and March in our northern climate. We shall still pin our faith to a remedy for this after danger which acts promptly to allay inflammation; for therein lies the chief danger from throat and lung troubles. And surely a remedy that has the friends that Johnson's Anodyne Liniment has, after eighty years' trial by a critical public, and has been used for the "grip" more extensively than all the advertised remedies deserves, as we said, a medal, and has before it, we hope, a prosperous year as an octogenarian. L. S. Johnson & Co., Boston, Mass., the manufacturers, will send a valuable pamphlet free.

Mighty Good Thing For a Fighting Editor to Have.

The editor was seated at his desk, grinding out copy as though it was noon, and he was obliged to get out three columns for a two o'clock evening sheet. He was interrupted. Editors usually are, and this was a serious interruption, for there appeared before him a large man, bearing on his face a scowl that cast a shadow upon the horizon, and made the room more dark and dingy than usual. He distinctly stated that he had not come to demand a retraction. That was evidently too tame a proceeding for his fierce mood. He hissed out the startling fact that he had come for gore, red gore. The editor preserved a calm demeanor; it seems to be the customary thing for them to do so under these circumstances. He asked in a voice that did not tremble in the least, the wherefore of visitor's sanguinary desire. The insulted one referred to an article which had appeared in the last issue. "Let me see," said the editor, "I must look into this," and he arose as if to get his file of papers. Going over to the side of the room where there was a bed, another joint evidence of economy on the part of the pillmaker and the scribe, and raising the clothes that draped on the floor, he said, "Say, mister, now I don't wish you any harm, but this is all that is left of the last party that came in here in your frame of mind," and he exposed a full sized skeleton belonging to the doctor. One look was enough, and with a howl of fear, the big self-avenger of injured vanity, made his escape down the creaking stairs.—Chicago Herald.

The Origin of "Sub Rosa."

The Latin phrase, sub rosa, is used in elegant speech to indicate secrecy, and means "under the rose" or "not to be told." The origin of the rose is as follows: The first rose that ever was seen was given to Harpocrates, the god of silence, by Cupid, to induce the former not to betray Venus in her questionable goings on; and from this myth, the ancients made it the symbol of silence, and it was a custom to place a rose above their heads in their banqueting rooms, in order to indicate that nothing said or done there, was to be told outside. A company of wise men once banded themselves together into a club—though they did not call it by that name—whose sole object was mutual improvement. For the furtherance of this object, they swore each other to silence during their meetings, the conversation being carried on by means of symbols and pantomime. At length came a man wiser than all the rest, asking for admission. They would gladly have received him, but their prescribed number was already filled, to indicate which fact, they sorrowfully filled a wine-glass to the brim with wine, so that a drop more would make it overflow. He understood, and quick as thought, dropped a rose leaf upon the brimming liquid, where it floated without making it run over. The wise men were so delighted at this, that they stretched their rules and received him with great joy. And so has come down to us "the rose leaf on the brimming wine cup."—Chelsea Telegraph & Pioneer.

Schliemann's Trickery.

He relates many incidents of interest connected with his researches at Hisarlik, and the deceptions he was often obliged to practise when dividing, according to the terms of his contract with the Turkish government, the objects discovered. Availing himself of the ignorance of the men composing the Turkish guard, who carefully watched all his proceedings, he succeeded not infrequently in passing upon them an object not worthy of preservation, and retaining for himself a less pretentious, but in reality an intrinsically valuable finding, which he was determined to secure. Thus, on one occasion, when two slabs of inscribed stone, one, decidedly modern, the other of unquestionable antiquity were set aside for distribution, Schliemann expressed so much anxiety to retain the former, that the Turks, were completely deceived, and vehemently demanded the larger and worthless object and the apparently reluctant archaeologist was forced to content himself with the one he so ardently desired to obtain. This peculiar mixture of simplicity and cunning was a prominent feature of his mental attributes.—New England Magazine.

HE TOLD THE TRUTH!

I was troubled with Liver Complaint for years, and suffered terribly. Lake, the druggist, advised me to take Sulphur Bitters. I took three bottles and now I am a well man.—L. Fenner, Waterbury, Conn.

THE SECRET OF SUCCESS.

William T. Lee, druggist, believes that the secret of success is perseverance. Therefore he persists in keeping the finest line of perfumery, toilet articles, cosmetics, drugs and chemicals on the market. He especially invites all persons who have palpitation, short breath, weak or hungry spells, pain in side or shoulder, oppression, night mare, dry cough, smothering, dropsy or heart disease to try Dr. Miles' unequalled New Heart Cure, before it is too late. It has the largest sale of any similar remedy. Fine book of testimonials free. Dr. Miles' Restorative Nerve is unsurpassed for sleeplessness, headache, fits, etc., and it contains no opiate.

CONDENSATIONS.

American authors celebrated the passage of the international copyright bill, in New York, Monday.

It is stated on good authority in Salem that the owners of the Brookhouse estate in that city have practically decided to build a block on their land, with stores underneath and a hotel in the upper stories.

The Secretary of the Treasury will issue an order forbidding the sealing of freight cars in Canada by Consuls, for passage through the United States. All cars must be inspected by custom officials this side of the line.

Postmaster William Wallace, of Indianapolis, brother of Jew Wallace and first law partner of President Harrison, is dead.

The Chronicle's Berlin correspondent says the Bulgarian government will dispatch a note to Russia accusing Russian officials of instigating the murder of M. Balcheff, the Bulgarian finance minister, and demanding the punishment of the assassins, who have taken refuge on Russian territory.

Twenty National Banks in Kansas have signified intentions of reorganizing under the new state law. It takes less capital. Many private banks will take advantage of the same law.

Assistant Secretary Davis of the Salem Y. M. C. A., has resigned.

Rumor has it that Secretary Proctor will succeed Senator Edmunds. The delegates from Canada say they were treated cordially by Senator Blaine.

There are several candidates for the seat to be vacated in November by Senator Edmunds.

THE PUBLIC bar bill will probably become a law.

THE SWEATING bill was laid over by the Legislature until next Tuesday.

THE BILL to extend the terms of office of Boston's Mayor to two years is being advanced toward final passage in the legislature.

THE DEMOCRATIC press seems to feel the snub given Secretary Blaine by President Harrison, more than the Secretary himself does. The solicitude for Mr. Blaine's welfare looks as if they were about ready to claim him.

THE SUGGESTION of the Press that the town might, with profit, adopt a city form of government, is creating considerable discussion locally, and the plan, which of course involves the question of annexation, is received with quite a large degree of favor.

THE LEGISLATURE did not take kindly to the bill excluding civilians from eligibility to the Governor's staff. One may as well receive military honors without earning them by holding such a position as by playing soldier, and wearing shoulder straps in the average militia company. Both are purely ornamental offices.

A VERY pertinent question is asked by the Salem Register:—"Are we to have any attention paid to the condition of our records by the Legislature this year or are the records to be left to the mercies of town clerks who obtain the munificent salary of $10 and $25?" The subject is one in which the public has a deep concern, and should be given a careful consideration by the Legislature.

THE BILL before the legislature, to stop the business of corporations issuing bonds or certificates payable in rotation by number, would be likely to prove a greater hardship on holders of the bonds than would result from ordinary failures of the companies.

People know when they attempt to get a dollar for fifty cents they are taking some chances of loss. But the chances of loss are no greater than those taken by the same faithful guardians of public interest who favor the bill, when they buy stocks in anticipation of a rise of the market. The whole scheme of civilized life is a game of chance, and moralists who attempt to draw the line between the legitimate and the immoral games of chance, should be careful to carry a steady hand. Certain kinds of practice are agreed upon as immoral, but there is a wide field of disputed territory that may never be settled, except in the minds of certain self-constituted public censors.

THE NECESSARY two thirds majority was not secured in the Legislature, Thursday, on the resolve providing for the Constitutional Amendment restraining cities or towns from being divided against the will of the majority. On the roll call there were 115 yeas to 67 nays and 9 pairs. Mr. Francis H. Appleton of this town voted in favor of the resolve, as did most of the Essex County representatives, who have been eye witnesses, to the protracted and oft-repeated struggle between the regular, permanent residents of Beverly and her tax-dodging summer sojourners.

A MEASURE is pending before the Legislature to provide for appeals from the decisions of the State Board of Inspectors of Public Buildings. Such legislation is much needed. The present law allows an arbitrary discretion to the inspectors, who are often men entirely unfitted to judge of the matters over which they assume dictation; men whose only claim to fill their official positions consists of political "pulls". If an appeal is provided it will work well in two ways—by allowing arbitrary and erroneous decisions to be reviewed by parties competent to judge of the merits of a case, and it will also have a tendency to make the State Inspectors more cautious in the exercise of their discretion.

THE EPISODE that occurred in the United States Court this week when Gen. B. F. Butler was ejected from the court room by order of Justice Carpenter, was a most unfortunate affair. Gen. Butler had replied in a characteristic manner to an imputation upon his professional integrity, by the presiding justice, and had for that alleged offense, been forbidden to appear before Judge Carpenter. This seemingly arbitrary exercise of judicial prerogative was an unquestionably legal proceeding upon the part of the Court, and no one but the General, would ever presume to intrude after having received such a rebuke. But General Butler is not so easily abashed as most men, and he dared to "beard the lion in his den," so to speak. He did appear again in the same case, and thus provoked the issuance of the order to the United States Marshal to eject him. It would have been in better taste for the General to have sent another attorney to look after the interests of his client, under the circumstances, even if the magistrate were in the wrong. The latter course would have avoided a very undignified scene, that must expose both court and counsel to unfavorable criticism.

THE REPORT of the school committee which will be issued the latter part of next week, sets forth the necessity of a truant school. The committee find as they have in the past that so long as the boys know there is practically no place to which they can be committed, truancy will continue to annoy the teachers and interfere with the school work of the habitual truants, and those scholars with whom they are thrown into contact as well. The County Commissioners have kept us waiting a long time and they should endeavor to make amends for past neglect by preparing a suitable institution without further delay.

The report further favors the establishment of vacation schools, to accommodate such scholars as are unable to visit the seashore and mountains during the summer months, and prefer to employ their time in acquiring useful learning.

Whether many would avail themselves of such a school, is questionable, but if provision can be made for the industrious pupils, at slight expense, surely the experiment is worth trying. It is probable that most of those who would avail themselves of the privileges of such an institution would do so under parental compulsion. Many poor families, as the report suggests, find it difficult to look after the children during the long vacations.

The point is well taken by the chairman, that vacations are becoming unnecessarily and perhaps detrimentally long, and the question he asks, whether there is any end to the encroachment on the time of school work, is certainly a very pertinent one. Six weeks, used to be long enough, and there was a time when scholars got along on even shorter summer vacations, without any particular detriment to intellect or general health.

Charles Woodbury will visit Alexandria Lodge of Masons, this week to present that lodge with a gavel, in behalf of Liberty Lodge of Beverly. The implement was made from a piece of the "old Elm on Boston Common," under which Gen. Washington took his commission. It is enclosed in an elegant antique oak case lined with satin. Upon the top of the lid is displayed a gavel in relief made of the same wood as the case. This gift from the lodge is in return for similar courtesies extended by the Alexandria lodge.

"Some lives are like Horse shoes the more worn the brighter." Busy wives who use SAPOLIO never seem to grow old. Try a cake...

A complete wreck of domestic happiness has often resulted from badly washed dishes, from an unclean kitchen, or from trifles which seemed light as air. But by these things a man often judges of his wife's devotion to her family, and charges her with general neglect when he finds her careless in these particulars. Many a home owes a large part of its thrifty neatness and its consequent happiness to SAPOLIO.

Grocers often substitute cheaper goods for SAPOLIO, to make a better profit. Send back such articles, and insist on having just what you ordered.

NOTICE.DOGS MUST BE LICENSED BEFORE MAY FIRST.

Extracts from the Laws of the Commonwealth.

Every owner or keeper of a Dog of three months old or over, shall annually on or before the thirtieth day of April, cause it to be registered, numbered, described and licensed for one year from the first day of the ensuing May, in the office of the clerk of the city or town wherein said dog is kept, and shall cause it to wear around its neck a collar distinctly marked with its owner's name and its registered number.

An owner of a dog may at any time have it licensed until the first day of the ensuing May; and a person becoming the owner or keeper of a dog after the first of May, not duly licensed, shall cause it to be registered, numbered, described and licensed as provided in the preceding section.

The fee for every license shall be two dollars for a male dog and five dollars for a female dog, unless a certificate of some competent person who performed the operation is filed with the clerk of the city or town, that said female dog has been subjected to the operation of spaying and is thereby deprived of the power to perpetuate her species, in which case the fee shall be two dollars.

Whoever keeps a dog contrary to the provisions of this chapter, shall forfeit fifteen dollars, five dollars of which shall be paid to the complainant, and ten dollars to the treasurer of the county in which the dog is kept.

Every owner or keeper of dogs kept for breeding purposes, may receive annually a special license authorizing him to keep such dogs upon the premises described in such license. When a dog of three months or less does not exceed five, the fee for such license shall be twenty-five dollars; when the number of dogs so kept exceeds five, the fee shall be fifty dollars, and no fee shall be required for the dogs of such owner or keeper, under the age of six months.

Any owner or keeper of a dog not duly licensed which becomes three months old after the thirtieth day of April in any year shall whenever it is three months old cause it to be registered, numbered, described and licensed until the first day of the ensuing May, as provided in section eighty of chapter one hundred and two of the Public Statutes, and shall cause it to wear around its neck a collar distinctly marked with its owner's name and its registered number.

N. H. POOR,
Town Clerk.

Peabody, April 6th, 1891.

MORTGAGEE'S SALE OF REAL ESTATE.

By virtue of a power of sale contained in a certain mortgage deed given by John O. Buxton of Peabody, in the County of Essex and Commonwealth of Massachusetts, to James A. Cook of said Peabody, dated the twenty-third day of June, A. D. 1887, and recorded in Essex County South District Registry of Deeds, in Book 1219, Leaf 82, which said mortgage has been duly assigned to Alexander B. Clark of said Peabody, by assignment dated April third, A. D. 1891, and recorded in said Registry of Deeds, in Book 1305, Leaf 152. For breach of the conditions contained in said mortgage, and for the purpose of foreclosing the same will be sold at public auction, on the premises hereinafter described, on Monday, the fourth day of May, A. D. 1891, at two o'clock in the afternoon, all and singular the premises conveyed by said mortgage deed and not released as aforesaid, being bounded and described as follows:

A lot of land with the buildings thereon situated in said Peabody and bounded and described as follows: commencing on Andover street at a point ninety-three feet distant from the corner of Endicott street, and running on said street about one hundred and thirty-one feet to land of the late Daniel Buxton; then in a Southerly direction about two hundred and twenty-one feet and a quarter; then in a Westerly direction about fifty-six and one-half feet; then Southerly about fifty-eight feet to land of Shea; then Easterly by land of Shea about one hundred and five feet to Endicott street; then Northerly by Endicott street about one hundred feet to land of S. F. Potter; then Westerly by said land of Potter about eighty feet; then Northerly by said land of Potter about fifty and three quarters feet to land of the late Daniel Buxton; then Northerly by said land of the Town of Peabody; then Northerly by said land of the Town about forty feet; then Easterly by said land of the Town about ten feet; then Northerly about one hundred and eighteen feet to point herein at. Subject to a right of way on the Westerly side. Being a portion of the property left to said John O. Buxton by the late B. S. Osbo ne by will.

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL.

The revival of the Soudan at the Boston Theatre has proved as successful as could have been expected by its most sanguine admirers, matinee and evening performances have been given and full houses have welcomed each appearance. If any of our readers have so far failed to enjoy this marvellous drama, they should at once secure seats and indulge in the luxury.

The Hollis Street Theatre has had large audiences all the week to see Julia Marlowe. To-night "Ingomar" will be presented. This being its only production during the present engagement.

Monday night Agnes Huntington commences an engagement of one week only, prior to her departure for London. The attraction will be the comic opera, "Paul Jones." Matinees will be held Wednesday and Saturday.

To-night closes the engagement of Richard Mansfield in "Beau Brummell," at the Globe Theatre. Monday evening Wilson Barrett's new play, "A Four Legged Fortune," will be put on the stage.

At the Park, "A Night's Frolic."

The Tremont will open an engagement with Sol Smith Russell, in "A Poor Relation," Monday.

"New Lamps for Old" still draws crowded and enthusiastic houses at the Boston Museum.

Boston will have a new theatre. It will occupy land in rear of the Bijou and Park.

Robert Downing, the distinguished young American actor, who has been called "a modern Forrest" by the greatest of dramatic critics, will be the attraction at the Grand Opera House all of next week, supported by the beautiful and charming actress, Eugenie Blair. Mr. Downing will be seen in a round of standard legitimate plays, including "Virginus," "The Gladiator," "Damon and Pythias," "Ingomar," etc., all of which will be elegantly staged, both as to scenery and costumes. His support includes several of the best legitimate actors and actresses of the American stage, and fine performances of the plays to be presented may be looked for. The reputation Mr. Downing has won for himself in the past two seasons has placed him at the head of his profession as an exponent of the heroic characters of the stage. Nature has admirably fitted Mr. Downing for the roles, and he has judiciously supplemented the work of nature with some admirable art. The prevailing charm of his work is its deliberation, its concentration, and seldom does he make drafts upon his fund of reserved power. His propulsion is at times magnificent but he discreetly avoids the appearance of putting forth the utmost of his power, an impression invariably fatal to the highest art. Besides Mr. Downing, at the Grand Opera House, will be looked forward to with considerable interest among the lovers of the legitimate, inasmuch as he has not been seen in the city for two seasons, and that now he stands as the representative of the heroic on the American stage. Mr. Downing has a bright future before him. He is a young man, but thirty-four years of age, and should he continue to improve in his work as he has in the past few years, he will be one of the greatest heroic actors ever known to the stage. The programme for the week will be as follows: Monday and Friday evenings, Sheridan Knowles' grand play, "Virginus"; Tuesday and Saturday matinees, Marie Lovell's beautiful romantic drama, "Ingomar"; Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday evenings and Thursday matinee, Saunet's sublime tragedy, "The Gladiator"; Wednesday evening, the only performance of John Bannin's always-popular tragedy, "Damon and Pythias." New scenery, elegant costumes, great casts, original music, etc. Tickets are selling rapidly, and large houses are assured during Mr. Downing's engagement.

LITERARY NOTES.

An artist or an author, however wide his fame, is only thoroughly comprehended, after all, by a certain circle. It is only the art world which has a good memory for artists' names and doings. The outside public is curious, but as it leaves the theatre, the art gallery, or the library, its recollection of the reputations it has made or unmade is slight indeed. Just across the channel, in art Mecca of the modern world—Paris, English art is disposed of with a shrug of the shoulders; and as for American art—that is, a distinctively American school of painters—the French critics predict its advent as near the millennium than is pleasing to American enthusiasts. I confess myself inclined to think that art on this continent will not receive the attention it merits until the genius of the American people is released from the present fever of money-getting.—From "Canadian Art and Artists," by W. Blackburn Harte, in the New England Magazine for April.

Six Centuries of Work and Wages—A History of English Labor—By J. E. Thorold Rogers, M. P., late Professor of Political Economy in the University of Oxford.—Abridged.—With Charts and Appendix by the Rev. W. D. P. Bliss.—Introduction by Richard T. Ely, Ph.D., Associate Professor of Political Economy in Johns Hopkins University.—Price 25 cents.—The Humboldt Publishing Co., Astor Place, New York.

This is the first number of the Social Science Library, which puts at the disposition of the public a record that is invaluable. It is the story of the English poor against the avarice of priest and king, landlord and capitalist; a story told by the records of thousands of court rolls, and stewards' accounts, compiled by unconscious historians who little dreamed of the tale the figures they so patiently added up would one day be made to tell. From the beginning of the thirteenth century, when almost every one not only possessed land but cultivated it; when a landless man was looked on as an outlaw and a stranger; when the use of the arable land of the manor was usually communal; from that remote date to modern times, Prof. Rogers, conducts the reader through the successive stages of a drama whose motive was the cheapening of labor for the benefit of the monopolist. And surely no time could be more fitting than the present for publication of this work which, with its special charts, clear type, good paper and elegant make up, is destined to have an extensive sale.

NOTED AND QUOTED.

It is quite interesting to see how the members of the present Legislature act towards the salary grab bill. A great many of them want it, the members of the committee on finance want it, but no one is willing to father any movement to secure the increase from $750 to $1000. This ought to be argument enough against it. When any measure is so bad that a man is ashamed to be known to be in favor of it, to let it drop would be a very proper course.—Newburyport News.

Women in Spain have petitioned the ministry in Madrid for admission to all state schools and universities. They aim first especially at the professions of medicine and pharmacy.

The Nicaragua canal route, it is said, was first chosen in preference to any other in 1551 by a Spanish explorer named Gomara.

One of the main arguments against municipal ownership of a stone crusher was because road material could be secured for less than the city could crush it and the price of $1 per ton was cited as an instance, yet the city has never secured any stone for that figure.—Newburyport News.

Co-operative housekeeping is receiving a trial in Utica, N. Y. Fifty persons are engaged in the scheme, which has been in progress several weeks and so far has proved quite satisfactory. The present cost is less than $3 per week, for each person. A good house and all the delicacies of the season are enjoyed. It is expected to reduce the cost to $2.50 or less.

The Lawrence American is of the opinion that the recent Republican dinner demonstrated that the manner in which the public patronage has been purveyed in Massachusetts, has not awakened a vast amount of enthusiasm for the administration. And yet the major has been carefully, yea, tenderly looked after, for, lo! these many years, and is even now talked of for the pension commission. What can the matter be?—Haverhill Gazette.

Some people keep their minds so constantly fixed on getting into heaven when they die that they completely overlook their duty to their fellow-men on earth.

Absolutely the Best.

England's hold on her most important colonies is gradually weakening, and it is only a question of time when their independence will be declared.

Burdette says: "Don't worry, my son, don't worry. Don't worry about something that you think may happen tomorrow—because you may die tonight, and tomorrow will find you beyond the reach of worry. Don't worry over a thing that happened yesterday, because yesterday is one hundred years away. If you don't believe it, just try to reach after it and bring it back.

Don't worry about anything that is happening today, because today will only last fifteen or twenty minutes. If you don't believe it, tell your creditors you'll be ready to settle in full with them by sunset. Don't worry about things you can't help, because there's no need to worry. Don't worry at all. If you want to be penitent now and then, it won't hurt you a bit to go into the sack-cloth-and-ashes business a little. It will do you good. If you want to cry a little once in a long while, that isn't a bad thing. If you feel like going out and clubbing yourself occasionally, I think you need it, and will lend you a helping hand at it, and put a plaster on you afterwards. All these things will do you good. But worry, worry, fret, fret, fret—why, there's neither sorrow, penitence, strength, penance, reformation, hope, nor resolution in it. It's just worry."

That teachers are now generally well paid, especially the women, who are the larger part, cannot be truthfully said. They must maintain a certain standard of living, and to do this and save enough for descent support when they retire is impossible. The result is that teaching is very generally regarded as a temporary makeshift, not as a profession. In public school, teaching is an employment rather than a profession.—Harper's Weekly.

Edward Bellamy recently established the New Nation in Boston, and when a full Nationalist state ticket was put in the field in Rhode Island that paper exclaimed in black type, "Well done, Rhode Island." The Nationalists polled 384 votes, about seven-tenths of one per cent. of the total vote for governor. Everything must have a beginning, but sometimes the beginning is the end. The Nationalist party of Rhode Island may never be heard of again.—South-bridge Journal.

The anniversary of Gen. Grant's birthday, April 27, will be marked by the breaking of ground for the foundation for a monument in Riverside park, New York. Perhaps this fact may serve as an impetus toward securing the funds that are yet needed for the monument. A number of projects have been proposed for increasing the amount, which as yet does not exceed $150,000, but little progress has been made. Why the people of New York city do not rise to the emergency and subscribe the necessary amount, and thereby atone for their shameful neglect in not having honored with a fitting memorial long ere this the greatest general of the War for the Union, passes understanding.—Ex.

A kiss is about the only thing you can steal and at the same time make the owner richer than she was before. Even the most conceited of men may be pardoned his good opinion of himself if he remembers what his mother and the neighbors said about him when he was a baby.

On Wednesday night, the barn of Henry C. Batchelder, the ice dealer, in South Peabody, was broken open and a valuable horse was stolen, together with a bridle. It has been reported that a young man was seen riding a horse through Lynn, in the direction of Boston, that answered the description of the stolen animal. Chief Peasley was notified as soon as the theft was discovered, and a thorough search was instituted; telegrams were sent to Chiefs of Police in several cities and towns, but no clue has yet been found, and he was seen going through Broadway, Chelsea. Postals giving full description of the horse were sent out yesterday, by Chief Peasley.

A brilliant reception was held in the large Town Hall last evening, by Henry O. Upton's day dancing school. The balconies were filled with parents, relatives and friends of the little ones. The grand procession was at 8 o'clock, and about 80 couples were in line, led by Misses Alice Winchester and Ena Hoag. The costumes were very showy, and the general effects gratifying. The Sailors Hornpipe, by Miss Mabel C. Hitchings, Spanish dance, by Nattie O. Brown and his sister, Eliza, the Highland Fling, by Miss Edith Clifford, were features of especial attraction, and merit much commendation. The Waltz Minuet, a new step arranged by Mr. Upton, was prettily performed, and favorably received. The second part of the orders continued an invitation to parents and friends to participate, which was quite generally accepted. Music was by the Salem Cadet Orchestra.

TWILIGHT.

Oh, twilight hour of faint and mystic light, When shadows fall across the fading land, And long forgotten voices of the past Float back and chant like spirits of the night, In voices sad and solemn, till at last, Wavering, they cease in the uncertain light.

When mists along the water rise and drift And hang upon the rippling wavelets clear, In which the dark reflections of the trees Shadowy, indistinct and dim appear.

Like specters, tall and gaunt, the cedar trees Stand dark against the golden tinted sky, Whilst from their topmost boughs the settling crowd Utters its desolate and direful cry.

The undulating reeds sway to the breeze That o'er them sighs its plaintive wailing note; In the twilight hush like vespers soft it sounds, As o'er the tranquil water it doth float.

Oh, silent hour, dreamlike and indistinct, When long forgotten voices of the past Return, and hold communion with the soul! Oh, sad and sacred hour of dying day, Whose death the hallowed Angelus doth toll, Kneel thou to silent night and his dread sway.

The Rothschilds' Charity.

A story about the head of the banking house of Rothschilds was related at the Grand Pacific hotel by Baron Heinrich, of Berlin. "Some years ago the old cashier of the great establishment," said the Baron, "went to Rothschild and told him that after thirty years of service he had managed to save 250,000 francs and he desired to go into business for himself. His employer regretted his cashier's departure, but bade him good luck. The cashier embarked in speculation and in a short time lost every cent. Recognizing the fact that while he was a good servant he was a poor master, he called on the Rothschilds, told his story and asked for re-employment.

"The banker installed him in his old place, and advancing him a year's salary advised him to invest it in a certain stock. The cashier did so. The banker instructed his brokers how to act, and between them they sent the price up to a point at which the banker advised the cashier to sell. The cashier did so at a profit that recouped for all his losses. The price then settled down to its normal figure, and the banker charged himself with the 250,000 francs which he knew his old employee would have been too proud to take outright as a gift."—Chicago Post.

The Price of Wisdom.

There is nothing stranger to youth than the persistency with which age professes its experience; there is nothing more trying to age than the determination of youth not to accept it. The fathers, mothers and guardians who have learned their hard lessons would be glad to impart their knowledge, without its ruinous price, to those they love. But the youngsters will have none of it. No; they must buy their own wisdom, "dree their own weird," "pay the piper" themselves. No yearning affection can shield them from the trials and temptations they rush so gayly to meet.

But why should the elders continually mourn that such is the case? They have spent their lives in learning how to live. So did their predecessors. Their children will do the same. The law is universal. Knowledge comes only with age and wisdom with the close of life. It must be that it was so intended. The blunders of youth, the struggles of maturity, the regrets of age, are all part of the inevitable training of each soul; a training necessary before it is prepared to enter on a fuller life.—Harper's Bazar.

The Interview.

To the newspaper interview we are indebted for a vast amount of enlightenment, learning and wisdom that the interviewer has got from men who, without his suggestion, would never have given it to the world. The principle of interviewing, going right to the source of information, gives us accuracy also. And take it all in all, the American newspaper contains the most truthful history that has ever been written.

A fine interviewer is one of the most valuable men on a great journal. He must be a man of education, acquainted with affairs, skilled in the use of words; above all, he must possess an instinctive understanding of human nature. A fine man who is being interviewed is like a fine fish that you have hooked. You will fail if you attempt to "yank him." You must humor him a little; play out and reel in; let him have his own way, and then he is lost and you land him.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Defects and Excellencies.

"I am sorry, Henry," said Uncle George, "that you exhibit so little proficiency in orthography. That letter you wrote to Mr. Brown the other day had so many misspelled words that it set the whole counting room in a roar."

"H'm!" said Henry. "That's just the way in this world. There were a good many words in that letter that I know were spelled right, but of course I got no credit for that."—Boston Transcript.

New York has contributed 26 cabinet officers in all, Massachusetts 24, Pennsylvania 23, Virginia 21 and Ohio 17. Missouri comes well down toward the foot of the list with 4 to its credit. All of the original thirteen states except Rhode Island have been represented at one time or other in the president's ministerial council.

The late S. S. Cox was toasted once at a dinner in New York by an admirer who told him he joked too much and recommended him, in Emerson's language, to "hitch his wagon to a star." He promptly replied that he would do so and that the star should be Sirius.

THROUGH THE FLUME.

KNOWLEDGE OF ANCIENT HISTORY HELPED OUT MINERS.

They Followed the Example Set by Cyrus the Great When He Captured Babylon. A Few Tons of Silver Ore Instead of a City Was at Stake, However.

There were gathered in the lobby of the Windsor hotel a number of engineers and mining superintendents. As is frequently the case, there was a good deal of talk of shop. Among the number present were men who had been working, at one time or another, in nearly every prominent silver camp in the United States. The climax, however, was reached when one of the mining men showed how a knowledge of ancient history once came into play and paid a man exceedingly well.

"Of course," he said, "you have all heard of the Pelican and the Dives mines at Georgetown, and know that there has been very rich ore taken from these claims. There was a dispute between the owners of the claims. The Dives used to keep its ore and have it all sampled Sunday. The idea was that no civil process could be served Sunday, and by getting the ore down and sampled that day there was no chance for their opponents to do anything. Of course, after the ore was sampled, no one could swear to its identity when removed from the sampler, and so it was safe the rest of the week.

"The Dives people aimed to ship down about 100 tons each Sunday, this amount of ore being valued at about $50,000. Mr. Schneider, the banker, who was afterward shot, was the owner of the Pelican and was anxious to get even with the Dives people in any way possible.

"One day he told one of the miners around Georgetown that he could have all the ore that he could get from the Dives people, and that he would purchase the same at full value at the Pelican mill.

"The bargain certainly gave no one a legal title to the ore thus to be obtained, and as to the moral aspects of the question I suppose that didn't bother any one of them. The law certainly would have looked upon ore taken from the Dives people under this arrangement as stolen ore.

OBTAINED THE KEYS.

"The miner with whom the arrangement had been made had for some time had some low grade ore in sacks in one of the bins of the Foster sampler, a mill about half a mile above the sampler where the ore of the Dives people was sampled. One evening, after he had made arrangements with a couple of friends, he went to Mr. Foster, after the latter had locked up his sampler, and asked him for the key of the mill, as he wanted to get the sacks holding the low grade ore stacked in the mill. Mr. Foster, of course, had no objection and handed over the key.

"During the night there came along a wagon loaded with ore picked out at the Dives mine by one who knew the grade of the ore. It was dropped on the hill and the two men packed the ore in the Foster sampler. The ore was put in the sacks which formerly held the low grade galena ore. It was impossible to take away the ore that night, so it was left, with the hope that Mr. Foster would not notice anything out of the way. But when the next night it was noticed by the two conspirators that a brand new lock was placed on the door of the mill, and that all the windows had been firmly fastened down, they needed no one to tell them that Mr. Foster wanted an explanation of how worthless galena ore had suddenly become ore running 500 ounces in silver.

"The two conspirators sneaked around the mill, hunting for an unguarded place, but every point was locked, no door opened, no window was unshut. To break in meant burglary, and burglary means Canyon City for a term, if discovered. So what to do became the question.

KNOWLEDGE OF HISTORY.

"Here came in the advantage of reading. Says the one to the other. 'Have you ever read any ancient history?' 'No,' was the reply, 'and what good would it be here?' 'Well, if you had, you would know how to solve the problem of entering this mill without breaking it. Cyrus entered Babylon by turning the river that flowed beneath the walls of the city and entered by the way thus opened. We must do the same with the water running through the flume entering the mill, and thus enter without breaking through the wall or through the roof.'

"It wasn't much of a job to turn the water of the flume at the headgate, and in a few minutes the flume was dry. Here was a good pathway leading into the mill, and nothing needed to be broken or in any way injured.

"It wasn't very long before our two conspirators were in the mill and were moving the sacks with the rich ore, about which Mr. Foster was so particular and anxious to learn something.

"The time at command did not allow of carrying the ore entirely away. Not only that, but it was not safe to handle just that class of ore immediately, for, at the least, it meant a cutting of a good deal of the profit of the job. Here again the flume and its supply of water came in handy. The sacks with the ore were dropped over the tail flume, and as soon as the water was turned on there was a veil of water hiding all that wealth hidden behind it.

"When the conspirators had moved all the ore they returned by the way they had come, again turned on the water, and then nothing on the outside showed that the mill no longer held the ore it once did. When the doors were opened in the morning everything was found as usual, except that the ore, to guard which all the paddocks and nails and screws had been brought into requisition, was gone.

"In due time the ore was removed from beneath its curtain of water, brought to the Pelican sampler and sold. It ran 476 ounces in silver to every ton, and as there was a little more than five tons, it can be readily calculated that good pay was received for the sleep lost at night."—Denver News.

One branch of the present Legislature have been brought to a realizing sense of their duty and obligations to the people of the State and as a result there has been reported a resolution for a constitutional amendment to prevent the division of towns against the wishes of a majority of the legal voters thereof duly expressed at the ballot box. Strange as it may seem the measure encountered not a little opposition from some of the Solons who are wise only in their own own conceit, but the justice and good sense of it secured its adoption by a respectable majority. Among the many commendable things done by the present Legislature the treatment of the public demand for this constitutional amendment is by no means the least important.—Woburn Journal.

Evidences of an aluminum mineral deposit, it is declared, have been found in the clay beds in the near vicinity of the Danversport railroad station. The Boston Pottery Company has already secured a large tract of land and will utilize the clay for its art purposes and the aluminum, if found in as large quantities as anticipated, will also be made a source of profit. The clay beds of Danvers are of great depth and have heretofore furnished some of the best brick to be found in New England. Work has already begun for the pottery company.—Salem Register.

PROBATE NOTICE.

Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

ESSEX, ss. PROBATE COURT.

To the Heirs at-Law and others interested in the Estate of Serena Ayer, late of Peabody, in said County, widow, deceased, testate.

WHEREAS, Mahew S. Clark, Alexander B. Merrill and Henry Wardwell, executors of the last will and testament of said deceased, have presented for allowance the first and final account of their administration upon the estate of said deceased.

You are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court to be holden at Salem, in said County, on the third Monday of May, next, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause, if any you have, why the same should not be allowed. And the said executors are ordered to serve this citation by publishing the same once a week, in the Peabody Press, a newspaper printed at Peabody, three weeks successively the last publication to be two days at least before said Court.

The Nestor of the Magazines.

"According to Homer, Nestor, the old warrior and the wise counsellor of the Greeks, had ruled over three generations of men, and was wise as the immortal gods."

has been in the van of American thought for more than three quarters of a century, ranking always with the best and most influential periodicals in the world. It is the mouth-piece of the men who know most about the great topics on which Americans require to be informed from month to month, its contributors being the leaders of thought and action in every field. Those who would take counsel of the highest knowledge on the affairs of the time, and learn what is to be said regarding them by the recognized authorities on both sides, must therefore read THE NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW, the Nestor of the magazines.

"The North American Review is ahead of any magazine in this country in its view of the importance of the topics it discusses and the eminence of its contributors."—Albany Argus.

"Has become, as it were, the intelligent American citizen's hand-book on great questions of the hour."—Buffalo Express.

The North American Review touches Americans on almost every point in which they are interested."—Boston Herald.

"A moulder of intelligent opinion by the impartial presentation of both sides of important subjects."—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

The list of recent contributors to the Review forms a roll of representative men and women of the time, including W. E. Gladstone, J. G. CHAPTER III.

She quickly cut away the sailor knots.

At dusk one evening ten days later, Janet, chancing to go to the door and look out toward the beach, noticed a scuffle among three men at such a distance from her that in the indistinct light then prevailing she could not determine positively who they were or exactly what they were doing. Two of them she fancied were her brothers, Donald and Andrew, but of the identity of the third she had not even a suspicion. No outcry came from the struggling group, and taking it for granted that they were simply indulging in the rough wrestling and horseplay common among the younger beachmen she turned back to her household duties. But after a few minutes a strong impression flashed upon her that she should go out there and ascertain what had been going on. Without knowing why she found herself running at full speed to the place. Darkness had fallen very suddenly, owing not only to the setting of the sun but the rising in the moonless sky of heavy clouds, precursors of a coming storm.

Close down by the water, however, the frothy whiteness of the breaking surf seemed to a little dispel the obscurity, making not exactly light but rather the ghost of light for a small space on the sand, and there she stumbled over the prostrate body of a man. She dropped upon one knee and laid a hand upon him, in so doing sensing by intuition that it was he whom she had called "husband." It was too dark to see his face, but she felt the thick, soft curls of his hair and knew him. Yes, it was Selden Rangely, with his feet tied together, his arms securely bound behind his back, and a twisted handkerchief forced between his jaws as a gag and knotted tightly at the back of his head.

She tore the handkerchief away and demanded:

"Who did this?"

"Donald and Andrew," he replied gaspingly.

"Are you hurt?"

"Somewhat bruised and strained, that is all. They pounced upon me so suddenly and unexpectedly that there was no chance for much of a fight."

He spoke slowly, breathing hard. For a moment she hesitated. Had not her brothers a right to vengeance on their own account? Had he not brought shame upon them, too, through her? She might be willing to leave his punishment to a higher power, but if they were not should she presume to interfere? Then in an instant the true nature of the temptation flashed upon her, and her thoughts returned to harmony with her nobler self. But her voice was cold and hard as she asked him:

"Have you a knife?"

"There is one in my right vest pocket."

She found it and quickly cut away the elaborate sailor knots with which they had made him fast. While she was busy doing so he asked in a bewildered way:

"Why the mischief should Donald and Andrew have jumped on me?"

"You should know," she answered dryly.

"I should! Well, I'll be snaf if I do!"

"You'll be shot anyway, if father comes here before I get you out of this. Andrew has gone to bring him."

"Ah! Then there is no time to be lost."

"And Donald has gone to get a boat. What is all this you have about you inside your clothing?"

"Gravel. They stuffed my clothing with it in order to, as Donald was good enough to explain, anchor me out securely in deep water." It really seems to me the most extraordinary reception ever tendered by a family to one of its members. I wish you would explain it if you can."

"There is no time for that now. A minute's delay may cost you your life. Follow me closely and shake that gravel out when you get into water too deep for it to make a splash."

She led the way straight into the surf, wading out so far that only her head was above the surface, he obediently following close. Then, standing near him, she whispered:

"Do not raise your voice. Sound travels on the water. We are safe here from being seen, but not from being heard. Why did you dare to come back here?"

"I came to my wife."

"From your wife, you mean?"

"No. I don't mean anything of the sort. What do you mean?"

"Hush!"

They stood still, listening to the low grinding sound of an oar rapidly plied as a scull which passed within ten yards of them, and could just discern, dimly outlined against the murky sky, the figure of a man standing in the boat. It was Donald King, going to the beach for the man he proposed to "anchor out."

When he had gone by they waded on along the beach parallel with the shore, still keeping only their heads out of water.

"This is terribly hard work," complained Selden. "It would be much easier to swim, if we must stay in the water."

"In this darkness we would lose direction and might go out to sea. The depth guides us."

They struggled on, but the man's impatience could not long be restrained.

"For Heaven's sake, Janet," he appealed to her, "tell me what all this means!"

"It means that I am not going to let my father and brothers stain their souls with murder for the righting of my wrong upon a wretch like you."

"A wretch like me! Why, are you crazy, Janet? I know I've been away a good deal longer than I expected to be, but I can explain!"

"There is no time for explanations now, and they are needless anyway. Facts explain themselves. Your wife and child have been here. That is enough."

"My wife and child! Oh, but this is maddening! I swear to you that I!"

"Take no more oaths, Selden Rangely. Here we have reached a boat, and—yes, thank God! the oars are in it. Climb into it and row for your life! Get away from here as fast as and as far as you can. Listen! They have met and found the severed ropes. You hear them cursing. They are in deadly earnest. If they catch you they will kill you like a dog. And you deserve it. I do not save you for your sake, but for theirs. Go back to Philadelphia to your wife, and may God in his justice deal with you as you have deserved by your dealing with me!"

Selden Rangely was momentarily too intensely petrified by astonishment to speak or move. When he had recovered himself Janet had altogether disappeared. Instantly upon the utterance of her last word she had dived and swam away under water, he could not tell in what direction. There was manifestly nothing for him to do but take her advice, for the present at least, so he clambered into the boat, took up the oars and set himself energetically to the putting of as much space as possible between himself and his inexplicable brothers-in-law.

Janet succeeded in unobservedly re-entering the house and changing her wet clothing for dry long before her father and brothers came in. Indeed she had retired to her own room and was preparing for bed when she heard them enter, but at the sound of their steps came out again to see that they got the supper left standing in the kitchen for them, and to lightly chide them for their unwonted neglect of the evening meal. They looked at her sharply, but there was nothing in her manner to betray that she knew aught of the contemplated tragedy or had any share in the frustration of their plans.

"Well," she said, having taken up the food before the fire and placed it on the kitchen table, "everything is either cold or dried up now, but you will have to make out with it as you best can. Mother went to bed an hour ago. When you are done throw this cloth over the table. I will clear up the dishes in the morning."

She retired again to her room.

"She had nothing to do with it," affirmed Donald in a low but positive tone, as if in answer to a previously offered suggestion.

"Hadt we better tell her?" asked Andrew in a whisper.

"No," replied his father. "You can never know beforehand how women will take things; never be sure when they cease to love. I'm afraid the poor girl thinks too much of him even yet. Besides, we've made a poor fist of this night's job, and there's no call to talk about it now or any other time. We had him in our hands and let him get away. The more shame to us!"

"He may have been dazed when he got himself loose and floundered into the surf," suggested Andrew.

"There's some little hope of that," assented the old man, "since he is not on the beach, and we are pretty sure of that. But if he should still be alive, and we get another chance to lay hands on him, there must be no second failure to kill him."

Within a week they had another chance. It was on a hot afternoon, when the whole King family were gathered in the shade before the house. Mrs. King sat on the door step knitting; the old man, perched on one end of a water butt, smoked and watched his sons mending a seine that had been torn by a shark; while Janet, standing beside her mother, seemed lost in reverie, her gaze fixed dreamily upon the ocean's lazily heaving waves of green and gold. A broad wheeled beach wagon, drawn by a couple of tough, shaggy little ponies, came creaking from the highway, rounded the corner of the house, and as it drew up before the family group Janet's husband sprang down from beside the driver. At the same moment, from the back seat of the vehicle, leaped a duplicate Selden Rangely—tall, well built, frank faced, raven-haired and blue-eyed as the original—who aided in her descent to the ground a plump little lady with a child in her arms, Mrs. Rangely and Edith.

"Oh, you poor dear!" exclaimed the impulsive Englishwoman, precipitating herself and baby into Janet's arms.

"What a lot of trouble I have innocently caused you! But how was I to suppose that Sel had a cousin in this country when they did not themselves know it? How was I to know that there was any other Sel in the world but my Sel?"

Janet's husband took up the burden of explanation.

"I think you will listen to me now, Janet," he said, with a merry twinkle in his eyes. "At all events, you cannot get away from me by diving this time."

David King and his sons looked significantly at each other, and Donald uttered a half suppressed "Gosh!" for those few words made them understand Janet's share in that mysterious escape.

"When I went to the city I found my father very ill. He was a hard, austere man, who had planned my life for me in the way he wanted it, and not I, so we did not get along very well together. But so long as he did not know of my marrying without his consent he softened a great deal toward the last and took me into favor again completely before he died. When he passed away I came back here for my wife, and at her suggestion went to look up any possible Mrs. Rangelys Philadelphia might harbor. You see I have found one, her husband, too; and in so doing discovered a cousin I never dreamed of having. It appears that my father and his brother quarreled in boyhood, and thereafter ignored each other's existence all their lives. But each having a son, gave to him, as it happened, the same old name of Selden, which is historic in our family, and I do not think any one, looking at the resemblance between us, can question our relationship. Now, Janet, my own dear wife, what is my desert?"

"My love and unquestioning trust forevermore," she replied, yielding to his fond embrace.

THE END.

Wood Stews.

We have all had our sympathies aroused by the statement that the natives of northern Siberia are often, during famines, compelled to resort to wood for food. The fact is that careless observers have simply been imposed upon, or they have jumped at conclusions without caring, or perhaps being able to make inquiries, and because they thought that a statement about being compelled to use wood for food would make a heart rendering page for their books, and by inference show what a distressing time they themselves must have had among such surroundings.

Wood in a certain form is a most common and constant article of diet on the Lena river, all along the north coast and in the immediate neighborhood of Yakutsk, in fact wherever the Yakut resides.

North of Verchoyansk, except in a few sheltered valleys, it may be said there is no other wood than the larch, and for miles south of the tree limit absolutely no other.

The natives eat it because they like it. Even when fish are plentiful it usually forms part of the evening meal, as the many cleanly stripped larch logs near every hut testify.

These people know by experience that the fact of their eating wood arouses the sympathies of strangers, and shrewdly use it to excite pity and to obtain a gift of tea and tobacco. They scrape off the thick layers immediately under the bark of a log, and chopping it fine mix it with snow. It is then boiled in a kettle. Sometimes a little fish roe is mixed with it, and further south cow's milk or butter.

"I have often," says William H. Schuetze, "seen it eaten without anything additional, although, as in the present instance, there was apparently enough other food on hand."—Yonah's Companion.

The Ways of Old Time Boston.

Visiting in Boston seems in old times to have been attended with some difficulties, and if the inferences which one would naturally draw from certain entries in the old records are correct, the authorities of the town were not accustomed to be overgiven to the encouragement of hospitality, whatever may have been the case with individuals. For a meeting of the selectmen of the town held on Nov. 19, 1740, for instance, the record begins as follows:

"Mrs. Rebekah Young, Appearing Informs that She with One Child is lately come into this Town, from Harwich to Visit her Sister, that She intends to return in the Spring, & that She hath brought with her to the Value of Two Hundred Pounds in Money and Household Goods.

"Liberty is Granted her to tarry until the Spring, and then to return to Harwich with her Child or give security to Indemnify the Town."

The good folk of Boston were in a perpetual panic in those days lest they should get upon their hands to take care of paupers that really belonged to some other community, and it is very likely that they had good reason for their fear and their precautions. One would suppose, however, that a woman who could bring with her a couple of hundred pounds in gold and gear might be of sufficient importance to be spared the formality of appearing before the selectmen of the town. It would be interesting to know how small an amount of belongings would have admitted her to the privilege of passing the winter with her sister.—Boston Courier.

Waco's Wonderful Rats.

Waco, Tex., is infested with rats in countless legions. They run through the streets, invade the stores and residences, devour grain, flour and groceries, and make themselves unmitigated nuisances, which the application of ordinary and extraordinary remedies has failed to remove. While they accept almost anything that comes in their way as edible, they have a penchant for eggs, and the way they convey them from the nests to their holes is thus related by Sam Whaley, the jailer, who has made their habits a study:

"I set an old black hen right up there," he said, pointing to the corner of the jail yard where Sheriff Dan Ford's horses are stabled, "and they carried off every egg and broke the hen up. She went to laying again in two weeks, and made her nest in another stall. Two eggs were in the nest, and these remained undisturbed, but when the third was laid it disappeared, two still remaining. I watched and saw the rats come—four of them."

"The smallest of the quartet straddled his four legs over the egg, hugged it tight, then rolled over on his back, holding the egg tightly pressed against his belly. One rat took the prostrate one by the ears just like a boy holding the handles of a wheelbarrow and kept him steady, while the other two took him by the tail, and away they went, pushing and pulling until they got the egg to their hole under the brick wall."—Cor. St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

No Good Substitute for Tea.

There has never been discovered a good substitute for tea. During the war of the revolution our forefathers adopted a "liberty tea," which was made from a four leaved plant called "loose strife." This plant was pulled up like flax; its stalks, stripped of their leaves, were boiled; the leaves were then put into an iron kettle, and the liquor of the stalks poured over them. After this process the leaves were laid upon platters and carefully dried in a brick oven heated for the purpose.

Tea, flavored with vanilla and rum, is a popular drink in Germany. The rum prevents the tea drinker from lying awake at night.—Detroit Free Press.

In Greece there are 80,000 hives, producing 3,000,000 pounds of honey; in Denmark 90,000, producing 2,000,000 pounds; in Russia 110,000, producing the same; in Belgium 200,000, producing 5,000,000 pounds; in Holland 240,000, producing 6,000,000 pounds; in France 950,000, producing 28,000,000 pounds; in Germany 1,450,000, and in Austria 1,550,000, each producing 40,000,000 pounds of honey.

THE END.

Transportation from Panama in 1849.

We paid our money and went on board the vessel, which was anchored about three miles from shore. We found a promiscuous crowd from every nation under heaven, the predominating type being that of the American rough. The deck was so densely packed with men from stem to stern that we could scarcely move. Many were prostrate with sickness, or supported by friends, or lying in hammocks swung along the side rigging. All day long this crowd of men were seething, swaying, quarreling and cursing. No food was provided, and hunger and thirst gave an edge to the bad passions of the mob.

The captain, a United States naval officer, had not assumed command because he was shut off from his men by the chaotic crowd. At length, toward evening, he stood on the quarter deck and shouted above the angry mutters and jargon of the crowd that the deck must be cleared for his men so that they could raise the anchor. I had conferred with a few of the more respectable

"Thus saith the Lord, 'Is my hand shortened at all, that it cannot redeem? Or have no power to deliver?'—Isa. 50: 2.

Sometime ago W. Jennings Demorest, Esq., of New York City, conceived the idea that the cause of temperance and prohibition could be aided in more ways than one, by getting the boys and girls to recite temperance pieces in elocutionary contests and to that effect he made most liberal offers. The recitations are from a book prepared for the purpose and include extracts from speeches made by Finch, Miss Willard, St. John, Bain, Herrick Johnson, D. D., and others, as well as Mr. Demorest himself. The contestants must number eight or ten and be between the ages of twelve and twenty-one years of age. The best speaker, considering voice, articulation, gesture, memory, and general effect, will receive a silver medal valued at two dollars and a half. Eight or more winners of a silver medal may come together in a contest for a gold medal and again eight or more winners of the first gold medal can strive in like way for a grand gold medal, and when eight are possessed of grand gold medals, a diamond medal worth one hundred dollars is forthcoming for the best speaker in that contest. These medals are all the gift of Mr. Demorest. He has already disposed of over fourteen thousand of them, during the past year, at an expense to him of over twenty thousand dollars. Seventy-six of these medals have been won by Bay State youth, but they are those of lesser value. Only one diamond medal has been won and that by a bright young miss of Nebraska. Mr. Demorest has not yet tired of the demands made upon his generosity, and says that the medals are being turned out of the mint by the barrel-full. Some have gone to youth in foreign lands across both great oceans. But the boys and girls in this Commonwealth have not yet won a creditable representative number of these medals. Massachusetts is not up to her usual alert and wide awake condition if more of Mr. Demorest's medals do not come hitherward before his "pile" is gone or he departed from earth life. The W. C. T. U. would like to help the boys and girls of Peabody to win some of these medals.

A Demorest Medal Contest was held at Northampton, on April 2, with an audience filling City Hall, whereby the second gold medal was awarded in Hampshire County. At a contest at Worcester on April 6, Miss Lottie E. Lamson won a silver medal. Another silver medal contest will occur in this city on May 4.

The Mass. W. C. T. U. Unions are raising money to secure new state headquarters.

The Woman's Temperance Publishing Association of Chicago sent out last year 120,000,000 pages of tracts.

President Harrison seems to be giving this country a bad example of temperance and morality in his extended tour through the West and South. The Chicago Inter-Ocean, which is called the great temperance organ of the Republican party, says, "There will be plenty of water on the train. There have been arrangements for something else. The steward, with a corkscrew sticking out of an upper vest pocket, was on his knees in front of the wine chest stacking up bottles that were adorned with white, red, orange and green labels—bottles whose mouths were stopped with gold, silver and emerald seals, and a few black bottles that were choked with common and unadorned corks."

Do you trade at the Salem Shoe Store?

Let us give you several reasons why you should.

We are determined to build up a large trade whether we make any profit or not.

We have the money to pay spot cash for all we buy, owing no man a cent on our stock.

Having the money we are enabled to get lower prices from the manufacturers, who in many cases must have spot cash for their shoes.

We buy almost wholly from manufacturers, thereby saving our customers at least one profit.

We are satisfied with a small profit believing that it is better to sell a large quantity at a small profit than a few at a large one.

We have enlarged and improved our store, thus giving the facilities for a largely increased business.

We are now receiving large lines of new shoes for spring and summer wear. Call and look them over and we will show you some of the handsomest you ever saw.

CABINETS

$4.00
PER DOZ.

Our price has always been $5.00 without deviation; and for two years we have done no club work. We shall probably never sell clubs again, their day having gone by, but there are many who do not care during these dull times to pay so much as $5.00 a dozen for pictures, but who still want the best. As we wish to reach this class, but do not believe in charging two prices for the same thing, we have decided to adopt the medium price of $4.00 for a short time. The quality of work will be the same as heretofore.

GEO. F. MARSHALL.
One Bottle
Effects a Radical Cure.

MAY 25, 1890.
DANA SARSAPARILLA CO.—

Gents: I wish to testify to the value of your Sarsaparilla. For some time past I have been troubled with my kidneys, being obliged to use the vessel many times during the night, and in the morning the urine deposited would have a dense, milky appearance, besides leaving a brick-colored stain on the vessel, which would require scrubbing to eradicate. About three months ago I met your agent, Mr. Simpson, who advised me to try a bottle of your Sarsaparilla, and after much urging I did try it, and am forced to say that the result is truly wonderful. I am no longer obliged to get up in the night, my urine has no sediment, and I feel that the ONE BOTTLE which I have taken has effected a RADICAL CURE. I cheerfully recommend DANA'S SARSAPARILLA to all persons afflicted as I have been.

Yours respectfully,
GEO. F. MARSHALL,
Lewiston, Me.
Formerly Custom-house Officer, Portland, Me.

JACK THE RIPPER AGAIN.

The Victim a Former Resident of Salem.

A revolting murder bearing a striking resemblance to the numerous Whitechapel, London, murders, in the character of the victim, the location, and the manner in which the body was mutilated by the assassin, occurred in New York last week. The so-called hotel in which the deed was committed is in one of the vilest portions of the city, and the character of house is the lowest order of brothels. The victim is a woman advanced in years, and one who has "drained the cup of degradation to its dregs."

A peculiar interest attaches to the crime in this locality, as the woman was formerly a resident of our neighboring city of Salem. Captain James Brown, when 17 or 18 years, on a voyage to New York, met a pretty young English girl named Carrie Montgomery. She was born in Liverpool, England, and in 1832, while a child, came to America, with her parents, who settled in Brooklyn, N. Y. At the time Capt. Brown met her, she was 16 years old in the full bloom and beauty of youth, and the young sailor fell in love with her and they were married and lived together in Salem, occupying a house on B.ckett street. They enjoyed ten years of married life, and had three children, two daughters and a son. The former survive her. Brown made rapid advances, and was promoted to the command of the brig Tigus. He sailed for the late Charles Hoffman to the west coast of Africa. The young bride won a large circle of friends and was a member of the Central Baptist church. The young captain was prosperous and frugal and accumulated some property. In time, after about ten years of matrimonial bliss, Carrie developed an appetite for the "arden" and in 1863 the family removed to New York. The environments of the metropolis fed fuel to the flame of dissipation, and finally a separation occurred between her and her husband. The two daughters were brought back to Salem by their father and given into the care of Captain Peter Lawson his uncle, who educated them. Captain Brown entered the navy and served through the war and then returned to his African voyages. He died of fever about twelve years ago while in command of the "Ark Continent."

His wife took to the stage and played in the "Bowery" for a short time, but finally returned to Salem and for a while appeared to have reformed, but about 15 years ago she returned to New York where she sank deeper than before. She is said to have been on the stage within 5 or 6 years. Her companions learning of her dramatic labors, gave her the name of Shakespeare.

It was thought by the New York authorities that the daughters would take charge of the remains, but they refused to do so, and they were accordingly consigned to Potter's Field but before interment, word was received that the body would be taken in charge. Undertaker Smith of Salem, visited New York and brought the corpse to Salem where the last rites were performed with due reverence.

The whole police department of New York City are on the trial, and several arrests have been made. The murderer is fully identified and will be arrested before long.

Officer George W. Jones Resigns.

In accordance with the recommendation of the Selectmen, officer Grady was assigned to the beat on the Square and officers Jones and Pingree were paired off for the Dublin district. Some trouble is said to have existed between the two officers for quite a while, and Mr. Jones refused to go on duty with Mr. Pingree, and accordingly threw down his badge and accoutrements, saying he was done. It is intimated that other reasons besides personal difficulties prompted the officer to decline serving with Mr. Pingree, but no explanation has been made by Mr. Jones. The Dublin beat is now covered by officers McManus and Pingree.

The Fire Department.

Some of the older firemen in town offer a suggestion to the present board of engineers which certainly seems plausible. When the alarm of fire was pulled on Monday afternoon, one of the pair of horses that pull the apparatus was about a mile from the station, attached to a tipcart loaded with gravel. The driver on hearing the alarm immediately turned and drove as fast as he could to the station and carted the gravel all that distance. Under existing rules, he had no right to dump the load. It is the opinion of all interested in the matter that this state of affairs should be remedied, for it would appear to be a senseless adherence to red tape to allow the thing to go on.—Salem Evening News.

Post 50, G. A. R., has decided to hold its 11th anniversary on May 1st. The department commander and staff will be present. A concert will be given by the full Eighth Regiment band orchestra and after the concert there will be a dance with the dancers attired in the costumes of their great grandparents.

A barn in Wakefield, owned by Mr. Jonathan King of this town, was set on fire last Sunday morning, and burned nearly to the ground. The damage amounted to $1200. The insurance on the property was $400. Enoch Wiley occupied the building. He sustained the loss of several cows, horses and agricultural tools and implements.

West Peabody summoned the fire department Monday afternoon to extinguish a blaze. About twenty-five cords of wood belonging to George H. Hutchinson were consumed, causing damage of about $100. Considerable underbrush was also burned. The cause of the fire is not known, but it is thought to have been started by sparks from a locomotive.

The best cure we know of for Constipation and Headache is the pleasant herb drink called Lane's Family Medicine. It is said to be Oregon grape root, combined with simple herbs, and is made for use by pouring boiling water into the dried roots and herbs. It is one of the best spring medicines, and is remarkably efficacious in all blood disorders. It is now the sovereign remedy with ladies for clearing up the complexion. Druggists sell the package at 50c and $1.

The assessors started on their annual rounds yesterday. They are distributed as follows: Cyrus T. Batchelder has what is known as the centre district, for precinct 2. This takes in the territory south of Foster street and west of the railroad track to Swampscott avenue and all the property to the Salem line. Levi Preston has the territory north of the Lowell track and west of Wallis street. John E. Herick has all of West Peabody and Lowell street to Foster street. C. F. Shillaber has South Peabody down to Swampscott avenue. T. J. Rehman takes all of the Dublin district east of Wallis.

Whence Art Thou, Gallant Stranger?

"Whence art thou, gallant stranger?" "I come from yonder hall. A hundred casements blaze at night, and I am lord of all; Your light is but a rush light, yet so cheerful is its ray, Beseech you, let me enter here to muse an hour away." "God rest thee, noble stranger! 'tis well it should be so; Yet must they stoop and bend their pride that seek a roof so low." "My larder bursts with fatness, the spoil of every sky, With grape and pine and pasties fine, and all that gold can buy; Yet all were left untasted, the white wine and the red, To seek a morsel at your board of curd and barley bread." "Now look not here, bright stranger, for relish for thy meat, For hunger is the only herb to make the bitter sweet." "Mine is as princely habit as ever eye did see— A scarlet doublet laced with gold, with golden filigree, A mantle and a nodding plume—yet would I give them all For yonder suit of sober gray that hangs against the wall." "It is the cold, fair stanger, that makes the homespun fine; Go battle with the northern blast, and thou shalt call it thine." "No lack have I of pastime the leaden hours to grace, Of song and music for the mask, of weapons for the chase; Yet, truth above all others, that broadaxe would I try, With which at nightfall from the wood you hasten whistling by." "Proud stranger, naught but labor my trusty axe can prove, And the wrestling with the forest is bread for those I love!" "Yet patience, gentle graybeard! A royal guest I see, An hourly presence at your hearth that will not stoop for me. Who else is this but Happiness, the goddess that I woo? Oh, tell me where you met her first, that I may seek her too." "Now listen well, good stranger, while the secret I declare: I found the Path of Duty once, and she was lurking there." —Harper's Young People.

WIT AND HUMOR.

The proportions of the human figure are six times the length of the right foot. The face, from the highest point of the forehead, where the hair begins, to the end of the chin, is one-tenth of the whole stature. The hand, from the wrist to the end of the middle finger, is also one-tenth of the total height. From the crown to the nape of the neck is one-twelfth of the stature.

The plan of publishing a weekly Massachusetts Official Gazette, to contain official papers, acts, resolves, etc., of the legislature, does not find favor with Boston daily papers. They think they do that sort of work well enough themselves.—Somerville Journal.

Judge—He knew what he wanted— Newspaper Clerk—"Your advertisement reads, 'Wanted, a little girl to mind a baby.' Don't you think it would sound better if it read like this, 'Wanted, a little girl to care for a baby?'" Advertiser—"No. Mind is the correct word. You don't know that baby."

The subscription price of this paper has not been increased by the McKinley bill, but we want to disabuse the minds of some people of the idea that it has been put upon the free list.

Writers in the magazines are inquiring why more girls do not marry. We do not know how it may be in other States, but in Massachusetts we are led to believe it is because the men do not ask them to.

Mr. Bilton (on the second story)— Why have you put that top step of the stairs above the level of the floor? Architect—I thought you wanted all modern improvements. That's the step a fellow always reaches for when he gets to the top of the stairs in the dark.

Where is our manhood? asks a woman editor. Well, well! That's a puzzler.

Women suffer most from the selfishness of men, and women do most to encourage it.

Yes, madame, returned the editor. That is he, over by the window whistling "Annie Rooney."

This country has one million miles of telegraph wires; enough to reach forty times around the globe.

Are you fond of music? asked a stranger of the young man at the concert who was applauding vigorously after a pretty girl had sung a song in a very painful way. Not particularly, replied the young man frankly, but I am extremely fond of the musician.

One More Candidate—Another Presidential possibility, sighed the political writer.

An English publisher announces a new work entitled: He Always Pleases His Wife. It is fiction.

A tender-hearted judge; A man who had been convicted of stealing a small amount, was brought into court for sentence. He looked very sad and homeless, and the court was much moved by his contrite appearance. "Have you ever been sentenced to imprisonment?" the judge asked. "Never—never!" exclaimed the prisoner, bursting into tears. "Don't cry—don't cry," said Judge Q., consolingly, "you're going to be now."

Traveller—I want to find a first-class hotel, something high-toned, but still quiet and homelike. Colonel Whipshaw (of the Rattlesnake ranch)—What yer lookin' fer, podner, is the Coyote House, on Grub-stake avenue. They shot a man there last week for not usin' a butter knife.

John seems to be a bright boy in some respects, said the teacher, and he writes pretty well, but I can't seem to teach him to punctuate correctly. O, well, said his father, that doesn't matter in the least. I am going to make a sign painter of John when he grows up.

Is your musical critic in? asked the little woman.

He called her little "Sweetie" When the arrow pierced his heart, But saw, when he had married her, She was a little tart.

What's his name? Don't know yet. He only arrived last night. Weighs ten pounds.

Look here, growled the advertiser to the country editor; I ordered my advertisement placed next to reading matter, and you've put it among your editorials.

Not immortal—Do you think Patkins, the poet, will live? He may live, but his poems won't.

A Boston puzzle editor printed a facsimile of Jay Gould's signature and only six experts guessed it. But Jay's signature on a check will go just the same.

Sir Arthur Sullivan was on one occasion dining in New York, and was seated next to a lady who evidently knew less than she imagined. She inquired of Sir Arthur whether Bach was composing anything at present. "No," he replied, taking in the situation; "at present he is decomposing." —Philadelphia Record.

War! on scrofula and every form of impure blood is boldly declared by Hood's Sarsaparilla, the great conqueror of all blood disease. When given a fair trial will prove its merit.

Doctor Johnson And The Americans.

In the year 1784, while Johnson was slowly and painfully breathing his last, a good many things, now curious and interesting to read of, are recorded to have happened. Thus, on July 7th of that year, William Bishop, town crier (they spelled it "cryer") of the city, "attended by proper officers"—one can plainly see two beards with wigs, gold-headed sticks, and long coats, and perhaps an officer in green and gold from the Lord Mayor's household—went to the Royal Exchange, and there by order read two royal proclamations. The first of these announced that a treaty of peace had been signed at Paris between Great Britain, France and the United States of America. No doubt, after the history of the past ten years, any person was welcome. The next proclamation called upon all the King's loyal subjects and citizens of London to observe a solemn day of Thanksgiving on July 29th. That day was doubtless observed with closed shops, ringing of church bells, and services. After church the 'Prentices most certainly made holiday. Since it is agreed among all nations that a Te Deum must be sung for a victory, something must be sung or said for defeat or shame, if only to thank Heaven that the thing is no worse, and to pray for statesmen with more wisdom. Perhaps there were in the city churches some clergymen who explained why we ought to thank Heaven at all times, even for wooden-headed ministers and an obstinate King who had forced rebellion upon the American colonists, and embroiled the country at the same time with France, Spain and Holland; for generals who had made British armies lay down their arms; and for the judicial blindness which had fallen upon the best and wisest in the land—even upon Samuel Johnson. To my own mind, speaking as a plain Englishman, no misfortune that had ever befallen this nation approaches in magnitude or great misfortune in losing America. It will be amended some day: on that day—still I fear, in the distant future—when there shall be set up for all time to come a great confederation of all English-speaking nations, when England and Scotland, the United States, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, and the Isles, will form one nation, as England and Scotland, or Illinois and California, form one nation. This confederation once formed, it seems as if it would matter nothing at all what was done outside. I wonder if that dream came to any one of the sober citizens who heard that proclamation, and went to church on Thanksgiving-day to offer the sacrifice of praise and gratitude for shame and defeat? It is very well known that Johnson would hear of nothing but war and revenge. "I am willing to love all mankind except an American," he cried in 1778. "Rascals! robbers! pirates! I would burn and destroy them!" Quoth Miss Seward, who was present, "Sir, this is an instance that we are always most violent against those whom we have injured."—Harper's Magazine.

CHARLES N. FELTON, U. S. Senator from California.

The Senatorial contest that has just come to an end in California, was a remarkable one in several respects. The term of Senator Stanford expired on the 4th of March, and some time since he was re-elected; the death of Senator Hearst created another vacancy. There was a large Republican majority and several aspirants for the place. There was no caucus candidate and a deadlock was feared. The leading candidates were Mr. de Young, proprietor of the San Francisco Chronicle, and Morris M. Estee, who was supposed to represent the Stanford and Spreckels interest. After eight ballots Mr. de Young withdrew in favor of Mr. Felton who was duly elected. Rumors of bribery were rife and there were allegations that the office was for sale to the highest bidder. When these rumors first appeared, Mr. Felton wrote to the Attorney General asking for an investigation. This official replied that he had examined into the matter and that it appeared that neither Mr. Felton nor any other candidate had done anything improper.

The new Senator, Charles N. Felton, is a native of Erie County, N. Y., and is 60 years old. He was one of the "Argonauts" in '49 and made a fortune in a very short time. He has been Assistant United States Treasurer and has served two terms in Congress. His long experience in finance has made him a determined opponent of Free Silver. He is a man of great ability, and he goes to the Senate as a representative not of any man or any corporation but of the State of California.

LITERARY NOTES.

The announcement is made by a newspaper in which the President's son is interested—Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper—this week, that Mr. Blaine is not a candidate for the Presidency. Leslie's has pictures of the celebrated ostrich-farm in California; of President Harrison's tour; of a recent full-dress Children's Carnival in New York; of the great cattle sale of Senator McPherson; of Secretary Foster's visit to New York, and a magnificent frontispiece showing the capture of a runaway in Central Park. Get it of your newsdealer.

"Their Ancestors" is the title of a bright and breezy parlor farce, especially adapted for amateur actors, which Katherine Loring Van Cott will contribute to the forth-coming number of Harper's Bazar.

Henry James will contribute to Harper's Weekly for April 29th a short story entitled "Brooksmith." The same number of the Weekly will contain an article on William M. Chase and his paintings of Central Park, illustrated with reproductions of the paintings themselves. A full-page illustration of the Cave of the Winds, Niagara Falls, from a drawing by W. T. Smedley, is also promised for that number.

The Paris Salon for 1891 will be opened May 1st. The number of Harper's Bazar which appears on the same day will contain superbly engraved reproductions of four of the most noteworthy of the new paintings placed in the Salon for exhibition on that day for the first time. This is another illustration of the enterprise which characterizes the management of that periodical.

James Lane Allen's new volume, Flute and Violin, and Other Kentucky Tales and Romances, will be ready for publication early in May by Harper & Brothers. Mr. Allen is a native of Kentucky, having been born on a small farm in the neighborhood of Lexington several years before the war. His great-grandfather was one of the early pioneers of the State, and his family is related to that of Vice-President R. M. Johnson, and also that of Cassius M. Clay. His boyhood was spent upon the farm, with but few companions, and with limited educational advantages. Through his mother's influence he was led to an early appreciation and love of the best literature, and upon approaching manhood he entered Kentucky University, where, after seven years of study, he graduated at the head of his class. For several years after graduation he was engaged in teaching, but the pursuit of literature being more congenial to his tastes, he finally decided to abandon the school-room and devote his whole attention to that calling. Three years were spent in New York, during which he contributed essays and stories to most of the leading periodicals of the metropolis. Returning to Kentucky he devoted some time to the preparation of a series of descriptive sketches relating to subjects connected with his native State. His present home is in Cincinnati. Although he regards his forthcoming volume as the first-fruits of his studies in the art of writing short stories, readers of these stories will find them full of vitality, and by no means deficient in the marks which characterize mature and skillful workmanship.

The Chinese government has signified to the State Department, that Senator Blaine of New Hampshire will not be received as American Minister. His speeches upon the question of Chinese immigration, which have been read by the Celestial empire, produced an unfavorable impression upon the government.

We should say the best way to avoid the dangers incident to fires in such lofty structures is to discontinue building them.

A WISE and salutary request has been sent by the Board of Health of Brooklyn to the street railway companies, that they delay running open cars until the advent of settled warm weather. Boards of Health in other places will do well to emulate the example set them. Street railway companies have regard for their own profits and convenience only. They would run open cars all winter if the public would ride on them.

AT THE meeting of the Gloucester Aldermen last week, they disposed of the numerous applications for liquor licenses, by having each Alderman write the names of twenty five applicants preferred by him, on slips of paper, which were collected and counted, and the twenty-five persons receiving the most votes were given the coveted prize, this number being all the licenses the city can be inflicted with.

THE BLOCK system of caring for highways, inaugurated in Massachusetts by the city of Newton, is a plan having some very commendable features. It is analogous to the section system which has been for a long time in vogue with railroads. An individual is given a certain section or block to care for, and he is held responsible for its condition. A degree of rivalry is naturally engendered, which is decidedly beneficial to the city in several ways. The plan is attracting considerable notice and newspaper comment.

PEABODY CAN again breathe the free air of no license for another year. Some of the storekeepers think their trade will be affected by the closing of the saloons, but most of them hold to the opinion that more money will be spent in the purchase of necessities of life and legitimate luxuries, and fewer bad bills will be found on the books at the end of the year. One thing is certain—we shall be freed from the annoyance of staggering, swearing and fighting drunkards in the public thoroughfares, and the Poor Department will have less call to relieve the sufferings of families purpurized by rum, and these alone will compensate for all the losses that can be arrayed on the other side.

THE LAST issue of the Georgetown Advocate contains an object lesson upon the subject of peddlers. The case cited is one of a shoe peddler who ran short of his regular goods, and visited a local store and purchased a number of pairs which he sold in the neighborhood for $2.50 per pair. The regular price at the store was but $2.00, and yet purchasers no doubt thought they were getting a bargain.

The story reminds us of one related recently by one of our dealers regarding an instalment peddler who called on him to arrange for goods to fill his orders. The instalment man soon returned with a customer who selected an article worth $7, which he purchased for $15, paying $6 down. The instalment man paid the storekeeper $5, which was the trade price, pocketed $1 and the promise of the purchaser to pay $9 more or return the goods. It is needless to say the storekeeper requested the man to keep away from his place in future.

People seldom gain anything by purchasing of peddlers, and generally they experience impositions similar to those cited, only they do not realize the frauds.

THE HOUSE of Representatives passed to be engrossed, the iniquitous bill to prevent endowment companies from doing business in the commonwealth, on Wednesday. This is the measure we took occasion to mention two weeks ago. It was engrossed without amendment. The fact is, the Massachusetts legislature sits too often and too long for the good of the public. If these men were deprived of all pay, instead of being permitted to vote themselves such increases of salaries as they think the public will stand without open rebellion, a much larger number could be found who would favor bi-ennial sessions, and thereby the laws would be relieved of a large share of tinkering and patchwork with which they are now disgraced.

The law in question was instigated by the "old line life" companies, which have always viewed with a jealous eye, anything of the nature of fraternal or co-operative insurance, because such organizations prove too plainly how cheaply the business can be done, and inferentially, how much of the policy holders' premiums go into the pockets of officers and stockholders, particularly the former.

The fraternal endowment companies are the poor man's friend and benefactor, regardless of the claims so often put forward that somebody will be swindled and lose his money. Every man knows when he takes a policy in such a company that he takes a chance in losing. Nobody ever made any money yet without working for it, who did not take a chance, and indeed the qualifying clauses hardly needed; for how often it has happened in times past that large establishments have become bankrupt, and failed to pay for the labor performed by employees. And as to the fraud and swindle every man who is swindled is a co-swindler of himself. If he is taken into a scheme he himself is aiding and abetting the scheme the moment he enters, for the whole thing is on the mutual co-operative plan. As was very pertinently suggested by our cotemporary, the Merrimac Budget, it might be well for somebody to turn their attention to the "old line life" insurance companies, for, as paper adds, that a business man in Merrimac has just sunk $100 in an "old line" life insurance policy in a single year.

ESSEX COUNTY.

The town of Rowley was visited last Saturday morning by the fire fiend, and the grocery store of Lawrence E. Collins, in Charles N. Pickard's building. The building and contents were totally destroyed. There was small insurance on the property.

The Emerson club of Salem held its annual business meeting and election of officers at the Universalist chapel Tuesday evening. The following officers were unanimously chosen: President, J. W. Newhall; first vice president, Nellie Daniels; second vice president, Edward H. Sargent; treasurer, Fred A. Ward; secretary, Miss Flora Sibley. A lunch was also served.

Bertha Everett who was found dead in Parker House last Friday night was on her way to Haverhill where she was to live with a married sister. Her father purchased a through ticket for her and accompanied her as far as Tyrone; then overhearing two gentlemen say they were going to Boston, made their acquaintance and left his daughter in their charge. Foul play is suspected by her friends in Philadelphia.

Hawthorne's Birthplace.

A party is negotiating for the purchase of the birthplace of Nathaniel Hawthorne, on Herbert street, Salem. It is his intention to take it down and reconstruct it at the Columbian exhibition at Chicago, but the owner has such extravagant ideas of its value, it is doubtful if Salem will lose the landmark.

All Peabody people know Supt. Jeffrey of the Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Company (who maintain at Salem one of their largest forwarding depots), and will read with interest some data as to the extent of this great Company's business. The Company's coal lands comprise one third of the entire known anthracite deposits of the world, and are valued at above sixty millions dollars. In the year ending Nov. 30th, 1890, the total number of tons mined by the Company was nearly seven millions, of which nearly 800,000 tons were mined in October alone. Their product includes every variety of coal, from the hardest white ash, similar to Lehigh, to the very free burning Brookside Coal, the deepest red ash mined. The Company, under the able management of President McLeod and General Manager Henderson, is continually devising new methods of improving this vast output and placing it with the consumer at the lowest possible figure, and with active cooperation of Mr. Thos. M. Richards, their General Coal Agent, who has been with them about all his life, is achieving an unprecedented success. The Eastern department is in charge of Mr. Edward Sherwin, to whose untiring efforts the present successful condition of the New England business is largely due.

NOTICE.

DOGS MUST BE LICENSED BEFORE MAY FIRST.

Extracts from the Laws of the Commonwealth.

Every owner or keeper of a Dog of three months old or over, shall annually on or before the thirtieth day of April, cause it to be registered, numbered, described and licensed for one year from the first day of the ensuing May, in the office of the clerk of the city or town wherein said dog is kept,
and shall cause it to wear around its neck a collar distinctly marked with its owner's name and its registered number.

An owner of a dog may at any time have it licensed until the first day of the ensuing May; and a person becoming the owner or keeper of a dog after the first day of May, not duly licensed, shall cause it to be registered, numbered, described and licensed as provided in the preceding section.

The fee for every license shall be two dollars for a male dog and five dollars for a female dog, unless a certificate of some competent person who performed the operation is filed with the clerk of the city or town, that said female dog has been subjected to the operation of spaying and is thereby deprived of the power to perpetuate her species, in which case the fee shall be two dollars.

Whoever keeps a dog contrary to the provisions of this chapter, shall forfeit fifteen dollars, five dollars of which shall be paid to the complainant, and ten dollars to the treasurer of the county in which the dog is kept.

Every owner or keeper of dogs kept for breeding purposes, may receive annually a special license authorizing him to keep such dogs upon the premises described in such license. When the number of dogs so kept does not exceed five, the fee for such license shall be twenty-five dollars; when the number of dogs so kept exceeds five, the fee shall be fifty dollars, and no fee shall be required for the dogs of such owner or keeper, under the age of six months.

Any owner or keeper of a dog not duly licensed, who becomes three months old after the thirtieth day of April in any year shall whenever it is three months old cause it to be registered, numbered, described and licensed until the first day of the ensuing May, as provided in section eighty of chapter one hundred and two of the Public Statutes, and shall cause it to wear around its neck a collar distinctly marked with its owner's name and its registered number.

Peculiar

Peculiar in combination, proportion, and preparation of ingredients, Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses the curative value of the best known vegetable remedies of the kingdom. Peculiar in its strength and economy, Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine of which can truly be said, "One Hundred Doses One Dollar." Peculiar in its medicinal merits, Hood's Sarsaparilla accomplishes cures hitherto unknown, and has won for itself the title of "The greatest blood purifier ever discovered." Peculiar in its "good name at home,"—there is more of Hood's Sarsaparilla sold in Lowell than of all other blood purifiers. Peculiar in its phenomenal record of sales abroad no other preparation ever attained so rapidly nor held so steadfastly the confidence of all classes of people. Peculiar in the brain-work which it represents, Hood's Sarsaparilla combines all the knowledge which modern research has developed, with many years practical experience in preparing medicines. Be sure to get only and injured himself quite severely. It was at first thought he had broken his

A company of seven jubilee singers from Flsk University, gave a fine concert in the South Church, Thursday evening. Mr. Pardee accompanied them and spoke upon the work of the American Missionary Association. Mr.
Talley, one of the singers, made an eloquent plea for a theological seminary. Miss Snow gave a touching account of her life. They sang not only the jubilee songs which possessed such magic power when sung by the first jubilee singers twenty years ago, but many new songs which they have learned during the present year, as they have mingled among their people.

The interest of the audience did not for a moment flag.

The entertaining drama, "Placer Gold," was presented last evening under the auspices of the Murray Association. It was a grand success both from an artistic and financial standpoint. The following is the cast of characters: Nathan Bardwell, a farmer, F. F. Dodge; Quincy Bardwell, Ned Bardwell, his sons, L. H.

Southwick, Charles W. Merrill; James Munroe, chum to Ned; Joseph Murphy, Bardwell's hired man, John A. Teague;
Squire Crosby, a miserly farmer, L. L.
Nichols; Mike O'Connor, Crosby's hired man, Eddie S. Nichols; Charles Mayhew, Richard Blynn, gold-mine swindlers, A. Newhall, H. A. Harrington; Sheriff; Maria Bardwell, Nathan Bardwell's wife, Miss Ella F. Quint;
Belle Bardwell, the orphan, Miss M.
B. Blaney; Nellie Crosby, Crosby's daughter, Miss G. M. Dodge; Matilda, Crosby's hired girl, afterwards wife to O'Connor, Miss May L. Teague; Gipsy, the waif, living at Squire Crosby's, Miss Susie E. Farham.

As one of the electric cars of the Naumkeag Street Railway Company was bowling through Lowell street at a reckless speed yesterday morning, it collided with the milk wagon of B. W.
Earle. The drawbar entered between the spokes of one of the wheels of the wagon, upsetting the vehicle, and derailling the car. Cans of milk rolled about the street, and the lacteal fluid mingled with the dust, and was quickly licked up. The driver and horse were uninjured. The team was crossing the track at the time of the accident and the car came up behind, and it is claimed, the gong was not sounded, so that the driver had no warning of the approach of danger. When a few lives have been sacrificed by the high speed of electric cars, which are run through the streets frequently, at the rate of twenty miles an hour, somebody will wake up to the necessity of obeying the injunctions of the Selectmen and town By-Laws. It may be a convenience to passengers to be transported at break-neck speed, but the lives of the public are jeopardized by the practice.

The horse stolen from the barn of Henry N. Batchelder, in South Peabody last week, was recovered on Saturday night, in Somerville, by state Officers Shaw and Batchelder. Word had been received by them, that a certain fruit vender had a new horse which answered the description of the stolen equine, and immediately the officers were on the alert to find the fruit man, but he had gone into Boston, and it was late before he could be traced.
When the possessor of the animal was found, it was learned that the man who stole the horse had offered him for sale at a number of places along the route, but his price was so low, nobody dared to buy him. He finally met the vender of fruits, to whom he offered the horse for $125 but came down rapidly in his price to $40. The suspicions of the purchaser were aroused, but he decided to take the horse, giving the young man $1.50 and a promise to pay the balance, as soon as he collected some money that was due him. The thief then made his way to Salem, and learning that the police were on his track, sent a postal to the purchaser, telling him that the horse had been stolen from Mr. Batchelder, and recommending him to return the animal to the owner, who would pay all charges, and ask no questions. The purchaser however kept the horse until called for,
and drove him to Boston every day.

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL.

"A Night's Frolic" is still on the boards at the Park Theatre.

Sol Smith Russell closes his engagement to-night at the Tremont Theatre.
Next week Mr. E. S. Willard will play,
Mon., Tues., Wed., "John Needham's Double." Thurs., Fri., Sat. Matinee and Evening, "The Middleman." Seats are now on sale.

Robert Downing makes his last appearance at the Grand Opera House this evening. Next week, Kate Claxton and Chas. A. Stevenson will appear in "Cruel London."

The Boston Museum will present
"New Lamps for Old," for the last time to-night, and will set upon the stage next week the romantic spectacular drama, "Hands Across the Sea."

Thursday was the 150th night night of the "Soudan" at the Boston Theatre, and a beautiful souvenir in the form of a sketch book, filled with pencil drawings by several different artists, showing the characters, scenery and incidents of the play, as well as vignette and thumb-nail sketches of the English and Soudanese localities in which the action of the play takes place, was given to every lady patron. The success of the play is unprecedented in the history of the dramatic art.

Monday, a farewell performance for two years, of "The Merry Monarch," commences at the Globe Theatre. It will be presented by the complete original cast, including Francis Wilson,
Charles Plunkett, Gilbert Clayton, Willet
Seaman, Hubbard Smith, Laura Moore, Nettie Lyford, Cecile Elissing, Belle Hartz and Marie Jensen.

Sadie Martinot is in London looking about for a suitable play.

Three years ago Stuart Robson paid $25,000 for the sole ownership of "The Henrietta." The day after its production in London an English manager cabled Mr. Robson an offer of ten thousand pounds for one-half interest in all English rights. Declined with thanks.

Gus Williams and John T. Kelly will part company at the end of the season.

Miss Minnie Tittel, a very clever and pretty little actress, who hails from the Pacific coast, has scored a very brilliant success in "A Trip to Chinatown."

The dress worn by Rosina Vokes in "The Tinted Venus," was designed for her by Oscar Wilde and James McNeill Whistler. The play was adapted by W.
C. K. Wilde, a brother of Oscar of that ilk.

John A. Lane and Ben G. Rogers, lately of Booth's company, will support Modjeska next season.

Viola Allen and Henry Miller will be seen in "The Merchant" at the Madison Square Theatre, New York, this summer.

Clara Morris will open her next season at the Fourteenth Street Theatre in New York.

Lillian Russell will go to London this fall to hear "La Cigale," at the Lyric Theatre.

J. K. Emmet's residence near Albany is offered for sale. It is known as "Fritz-Villa."

The property on Sixth Avenue, corner of Twenty-third Street, on which stood Booth's Theatre, has been sold for a round million of dollars. Since the theatre was demolished nearly every tradesman who leased a store in the new building has failed.

Marion Manola has gone back to her Jack in London. She sailed last Saturday.

DANA'S IS GUARANTEED TO CURE.

The eminent English actor, Mr. E. S.
Willard, will begin a brief engagement at the Tremont Theatre next week, May 4th.
Mr. Willard, by common and universal consent of all the critics of New York, and most enthusiastically so by the ablest of the journalistic guild, is an actor of the most eminent culture and refinement of art. He possesses a virility and self-restraint, a fervor evinced by quiet methods which few upon the stage possess.
While yet a young man, he has already reached a place in the dramatic art whose height is touched by few, and is to be justly envied by all of his profession.
Managers Abbey & Schoeffel, in conjunction with Manager A. M. Palmer, take great pleasure in introducing Mr. Willard to this public, being confident that his rare good qualities and his impressive methods will be especially suited to Boston tastes. It may be added that recently, on his visit to Chicago, there was a most remarkable unanimity of praise bestowed upon Mr. Willard by the critics, not a journal excepted.

He will be seen in Boston first (Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evenings, May 4, 5, 6) in his marvelous dual role in Joseph Hatton's new drama, "John Needham's Double," pronounced a superb piece of realistic acting. The latter half the week (Thursday, Friday, Saturday evenings and Saturday matinee, May 7, 8, 9), Mr. Willard will appear in his grand and affecting assumption in "The Middleman." For his second week the same strong play, "The Middleman," is underlined, and will be sure to win appreciation equal to Mr. Willard's other offerings. All the plays will be superbly set, and an engagement of great prosperity is confidently expected, and will be dece v d.

The shareholders of the National Bank of Mexico held their annual meeting Tuesday. The reports showed a very profitable year. The paid-in capital is $8,000,000, on which the net profits were $2,036,919. A dividend of 14 per cent. was declared, and the reserve fund increased by $653,000. The founders' shares received $128,000.

The board of directors received as compensation $85,000. The bank earned over 25 per cent. on its working capital.

Fishing In The Alleghanies.

Good trout-fishing need not be expected this summer in the Blue Ridge and Alleghany mountains, for the recent heavy rains have played sad havoc with the finny tribe. The rainfall in the South has been without precedent, and the mountain streams have filled the rivers, and either scattered the trout, or killed them by their being left on the lowlands and swamps by the receding waters. The same fate has befallen that game fish the black bass. Every river south of Baltimore and Washington has been overflowing its banks continuously for the past two months. Long-continued spring freshets are disastrous to the fish. On the other hand, all kinds of game in the South have wintered nicely. Bob White is likely to be in great abundance next fall.

A WEIRD LOVER.

By DAVID KER.

CHAPTER I.
THE LONELY TOWER.

"God protect us!" muttered the mother.

"There he comes! that's he!"

"What? That tall man on the other side of the street? Well, he's splendidly handsome, if ever any man was, but [with a slight shudder] there's something in his face that frightens me, though I don't know why."

"Ah! do you feel like that too? Well, it's very odd, but every one that looks at him says the same. The first time I ever saw him I felt just as I used to feel when I was a child over the pictures of those dreadful enchanted men in the fairy tales who, when midnight came, turned into wolves or tigers or devils, and devoured every one within reach."

No one who knew them would have laid an over-vid imagination to the charge of the two worthy burghers who were gossiping thus in the main street of Marseilles; yet this man had strangely impressed them both, and the impression (for which there seemed to be no possible reason) was exactly the same in both cases.

Meanwhile the subject of their talk—a tall, fine looking man in the prime of life, wearing a handsome though rather theatrical Hungarian dress, which set off his noble figure to full advantage—went slowly along the opposite sidewalk, with his head bent down as if in deep thought, and seemingly unconscious of the admiring glances shot at him by many passing ladies.

Suddenly he raised his head as if he had come to some final decision on the subject that was occupying his thoughts. As he did so his eyes met those of a tiny girl who was being carried past him in the arms of a stout market woman. A moment before the child had been laughing gleefully and playing with the fringe of her mother's shawl, but as she encountered the piercing glance of those large, black, fiery eyes, she trembled and began to cry.

"God protect us!" muttered the mother, hastily signing the cross over the shuddering infant; "that man must surely have the evil eye!"

As the stranger passed on two men who were chatting at the door of a large stone house turned to look at him.

"If that fellow were only a poor man I'd hire him for a model this very day," said the taller of the two, a distinguished French artist, in a tone of irrepressible enthusiasm. "His face is worthy of Vandyke."

"Worthy of The Police Gazette, you mean," growled his companion, who was no other than the prefect of police himself. "Mark my words, friend Victor, that man will commit some horrible crime one day or other, if indeed he hasn't done it already!"

And who then was this man who seemed to inspire such a universal feeling of mingled horror and admiration? This was the very question which every one in Marseilles was asking, and which no one seemed able to answer. All that was as yet known of the stranger was that he had arrived from Paris a few weeks before, attended by half a dozen fierce looking fellows in the dress of Hungarian foresters; that he had gone straight to the largest hotel and taken a whole suite of rooms to himself at a cost worthy of Dumas' Count of Monte Cristo, in the name of "Prince Keretsenyi, Janosz castle, Southern Transylvania," and that at a public ball two days after his arrival he had signaled his entrance into local society by a feat that made him at once the talk of the whole town.

Among the guests at the ball was a certain dragoon captain, Louis Du Val by name, a noted bully and duelist, who was always on the lookout for a quarrel. He was standing amid a circle of his admirers when the Transylvanian prince entered. The sudden introduction of this superbly handsome stranger by such a renowned historical name as that of Keretsenyi sent a buzz of excitement through the whole room, but Capt. Du Val laughed scornfully, and observed in a tone evidently meant to reach the prince's ears that these Hungarian counts and princes often carried all their title deeds were sometimes to be found in the register of the nearest prison.

Scarcely were the insulting words uttered, when Keretsenyi stepped quickly up to the speaker, and dealt him a slap in the face with his open hand that echoed all around the room like a pistol shot.

Such a commencement could have but one result. The preliminaries of a meeting were soon adjusted, and next morning the redoubtable Capt. Du Val, one of the best swordsmen in the whole south of France, was borne home speechless and desperately wounded from the last duel that he was ever to fight.

"I knew from the very first how it would be," said Du Val's second, telling the story that evening to his friends at the club. "When my man stepped forward the Transylvanian gave him one look—such a look!—just the way that lion tamer last year used to look at his beasts. It made me tingle all over, I know that. Poor Du Val seemed to feel it too, for I saw his color change and his hand shake (fancy his hand shaking!), and then I knew that Keretsenyi had him. So he had, sure enough, for they had hardly been at it three minutes when Du Val, for the first time in his life I should think, left his guard open for an instant, and the next moment I saw him lying at my feet all over blood. He'll never fight again, poor fellow! for his right arm is crippled for life."

But this duel was fated to have more important results than the spoiling of Capt. Du Val's swordsmanship. Just out of the town lived an old Gascon gentleman, M. de la Roche, with a pedigree as long as his purse was short, whose one regret in life was the loss of the estates of which his family had been deprived by an unfortunate accident known to history as the French Revolution. His favorite nephew having been killed in a duel by Du Val the old man was naturally delighted to see the bully punished in his turn, and lost no time in calling upon Keretsenyi to congratulate him. The prince received him courteously, returned his visit, and finding his host's daughter Madeleine one of the prettiest girls that he had ever seen, fell in love with her, or at least appeared to do so, on the spot.

Nothing could be more flattering to a simple, inexperienced girl, utterly ignorant of the world and only just freed from the prison of a convent school, than this homage from a man who had the whole fashionable world of Marseilles at his feet; for in France—and in most other countries too, for that matter—any one who has the reputation of being very rich and very wicked, with the additional merit of having murdered a man either in the ceremonious form of a duel or in the simpler and more usual way, is certain to achieve an immense popularity; and Prince Keretsenyi received so much attention from the local beauties that had been a Turk or a Mormon he might have taken away with him wives enough to stock an entire harem.

It was true that in her inmost heart Madeleine felt an instinctive shrinking from this mysterious and terrible suitor, who, when they first met, had darted at her a look of fierce and hungry admiration which scared her with a sudden and ghastly memory of a frightful picture that she had once seen in her childhood, where a wolf, standing over a helpless child in the snow, was just about to bury its cruel fangs in the infant's throat. It was also true that she had had her own dreams of ideal bliss, and that her partner in those dreams were not the towering form and tiger like beauty of Keretsenyi, but the likeness of the bright haired boy who had been the chosen playmate of her childhood. But her father would not hear a word of Henri de Mortemart, and of course her father must know best.

This last consideration, combined with Keretsenyi's extraordinary personal beauty, the splendid presents which he was always making her, his renown as the conqueror of the most dreaded and formidable duelist in the whole district, and, above all, the weird, indefinable fascination which seemed to attach itself to everything that he did or said, was strong enough to stifle in Madeleine's heart the warning instinct which bade her beware of this ill omened union; and when once the prince had spoken out, old De la Roche—who would gladly have sold his own soul (to say nothing of his daughter) for a tithe of the sum which Keretsenyi offered to settle on his bride—took good care that there should be no undue delay in the celebration of the marriage.

Thus it came to pass that one evening in the early autumn of that year two gossips met on the broad white pavement of the Cannebiere, and one of them said to the other:

"Well, M. le Prince has certainly made a successful summer campaign among us; he has beaten the best man and married the prettiest woman in all Marseilles."

"And Henri de Mortemart?" asked his friend; "how does he like to see his 'soul's adored' in the arms of another man?"

"He likes it so little, poor fellow! that he has suddenly disappeared, and people are saying that he must have committed suicide. But what would you have? Even if Keretsenyi hadn't come in the way at all, Henri would never have got her. He was branded with the worst of all crimes—he was guilty of being poor!"

Poor Princess Madeleine had a long and weary journey to her new home amid the distant Carpathian mountains, in the wild border land between Transylvania and Wallachia, for her grim bridegroom, as if spurred by a mad impatience to see his ancient castle once more, hurried forward night and day without ever pausing to rest, seemingly expecting her to be as insensible to fatigue as he himself. Her strength was well nigh exhausted by the time they quitted the railway for a large traveling carriage, which was awaiting them at the station. But this was in turn left behind as the road grew rougher and steeper, and just as night was falling she found herself on horseback half way up the endless zigzags of a breakneck mountain path, while just in front of her, tall and shadowy as a phantom in the ghostly twilight, rode Keretsenyi on a mighty black horse, worthy of the specter huntsman of German legend.

Where the sun had gone down one pale, spectral gleam still lingered above the gloomy hills, covered to the very summit with shadowy pine forests, and against it rose, black and grim, the massive tower of an ancient castle. As Madeleine caught sight of it there shot through her heart such a chill as men are said to feel at the approach of the unknown foe by whose hand they must die, but the prince's large, dark eyes lighted up like those of a wolf scenting prey, and the voice in which he muttered, "At last!" was tremulous with a fierce and feverish exultation.

The lonely tower quickly vanished amid the deepening darkness of night,

ASSESSORS' NOTICE.

To the Inhabitants and other Persons liable to pay Taxes in the Town of Peabody.

The Assessors of the Town of Peabody hereby give notice to the inhabitants of said town, that all persons liable to pay taxes therein, that their office will be open on and after the first day of May until and including the first day of June, and all persons liable to be taxed in said town are hereby required to bring in at the said office true and perfect lists of all the polls (males twenty years old and upward), and schedules and estimates of the personal estates for which they are liable to pay taxes.

Copartnerships

having a place of business in Peabody, and also in some other city or town within the Commonwealth, are especially notified to bring in a statement in accordance with the 24th section of the 11th chapter of the Public Statutes. Shipping and business income are not taxable to a firm, but each resident partner must include these items in his individual return.

Mortgaged Real Estate.

"Any mortgage or mortgage of real estate may bring in to the assessors of the town or city where such real estate lies," within the time specified in this notice, "a statement, under oath, of the amount due on each separate lot or parcel of such real estate, and the name and residence of every holder of an interest therein as a mortgagee or mortgagor. When such property is situated in two or more lots, or when a recorded mortgage includes for one sum two or more estates or parts of an estate, an estimate of the amount of the mortgage interest in each estate or part of an estate shall be given in such statement." (Chap. 175 of the Acts of 1882.) When a statement in conformity with the law above quoted is brought in, the real estate therein returned will be assessed under sections 14, 15 and 16, of chapter 11 of the Public Statutes. But in cases where the mortgagor of the real estate has agreed in writing to pay all taxes assessed thereon, NO RETURN OR RETURN IS REQUIRED from either mortgagor or mortgagor, unless requested by the assessors in writing.

Persons holding estates in trust, whether for minors, or otherwise, are particularly requested to furnish the assessors with statements in relation to such estates. When trust estates, or estates of persons deceased, have been divided during the past year, or have changed hands from other causes, the trustee, executor or administrator, or other person interested, is required and warned to give notice of such change, and in default of such notice, will be held to pay the tax assessed, although such estate has been wholly distributed and paid over.

Any person bringing in a list of all his taxable personal property will be assessed upon the valuation thereof, and any one neglecting to furnish the assessors with such list within the time above specified will be deemed at a legal meeting of the Board of Assessors, agreeable to the law of the Commonwealth. All persons will take notice that statements of personal property must be in writing, and subscribed under oath before one of the Assessors, at their office, on or before the FIRST DAY OF JUNE, and that the personal property of all taxable persons must be estimated by the Board. NOTWITHSTANDING A VERBAL STATEMENT OR INFORMAL WRITTEN COMMUNICATION TO ANY ONE OR MORE OF THE ASSESSORS. (Pub. Stat., chap. 11, sec. 39 and 41.) When a person has failed to bring in a list or schedule of all his taxable property in conformity with this notice, no abatement of a tax so assessed upon such person for personal property can be granted, "unless such tax exceeds by more than fifty per cent. the amount which would have been assessed on the personal estate, if he had seasonably brought in said list; and if said tax exceeds by more than fifty per cent. the said amount, the abatement shall be only of the excess above the said fifty per cent." (Pub. Stat., Chap. 11, Sec. 73.)

Any person taxable in Peabody for personal property can obtain a BLANK SCHEDULE for making a list of such property, with directions for properly filling the same, by applying at the assessors' office.

Literary, Benevolent, Charitable and Scientific Corporations.

The attention of the officers of all Literary, Benevolent, Charitable and Scientific Corporations, located in Peabody, is particularly called to the requirements of Chapter 217 of the Acts of 1882, as the property of said corporations, both personal and real, will be subject to taxation unless the law is complied with. Blank forms for the purpose can be had at the office of the assessors.

TOWN OF PEABODY.

BOARD OF HEALTH REGULATIONS.

THE Board of Health appointed by the Town hereby make and publish as required by law, the following "Regulations for the Public Health and Safety."

The Board shall make such regulations as it judges necessary for the public health and safety. * * * Whoever violates any such regulation shall forfeit a sum not exceeding one hundred dollars.—(Extract from the Public Statutes Chap. 80, §18.)

REGULATION 1ST. It being the duty of the Board of Health of the Town of Peabody, to make such examination of the premises of persons residing in said town as they shall deem necessary for the public welfare, the Board hereby give notice and require that all premises within said limits shall be ready for inspection by the Board on and after May 20th, 1891.

REGULATION 2D. No house, office, filthy water, dead animals or refuse of any kind, shall be thrown upon the streets by any resident; and no butcher, fish monger or vendor of merchandise, shall leave any refuse upon the streets of this town.

REGULATION 3D. If, upon inspection, any rubbish, offal, decaying animal or vegetable matter, or filth of any kind be found in, under or about any building, within any yard or enclosure, upon any premises, or in the ponds or water courses of said Town of Peabody, or if any privy or drain be found so discharging as to prove a nuisance, and offensive or deleterious to the public health, the owner or occupant of such property or premises shall be notified by the Board to remove or abate such nuisance within twenty-four hours after said notice has been served.

REGULATION 4TH. If any owner or occupant of property as aforesaid, after having been duly notified, shall neglect to comply with the requirements of the above section, the Board of Health shall cause any and all nuisances to be removed or abated at the expense of the owner or occupants.

REGULATION 5TH. On and after June 1st 1891, swine shall not be kept within the following limits in this town except by permit from the Board of Health:—Commencing at the boundary stone east of Holly street and running on the Southern side of Margin street, seven hundred feet thence Northwesterly in a straight line to Liberty, five hundred feet North of Mr. Simon P. Buxton's residence; thence Westerly in a straight line to Andover street bridge; from the bridge Southwesterly in a straight line, to Swampscott avenue; thence through Swampscott to Strongwater brook; thence Easterly in a straight line to the Eastern end of Clement avenue and the Salem line; thence by the Salem line to Willow, Shillaber, Aborn, Main, Grove, Walnut, Mt. Vernon, Tremont and Highland streets to the boundary stone. No goats shall be kept within the limits of this Town, except in pastures, or in enclosures.

REGULATION 6TH. No public funeral shall be held over the remains of any person having died of SMALL POX, SCARLET FEVER, DIPHTHERIA, TYPHOID FEVER or MEMBRANOUS FEVER, without the written permit of the Board of Health, under such regulations as may prevent the spread of either of such diseases.

REGULATION 7TH. The remains of any person dying of either of said diseases shall be placed in a tight or sealed coffin, and shall not thereafter be exposed to view or disturbance for burial, and no undertaker or other person shall be permitted to take to any house, or use any bier or stand with draperies, which is to be used at any funerals.

REGULATION 8TH. No owner, driver or any other person having charge of any hackney carriage or other vehicle used as a public conveyance, shall convey in or upon said

carriage or other vehicle, any person sick or infected with the Small Pox, Scarlet Fever, Diphtheria, or other contagious disease, or the body of any person who has died of any contagious disease, without the written permit of the Board of Health, to be given under such regulations as may prevent the spread of such disease, and every vehicle which shall be so used shall be immediately disinfected under the supervision of the Board of Health, and before any other person shall be conveyed in or upon it. This regulation is intended to cover all cases where persons are conveyed from funerals at houses where any one has died of any contagious disease.

REGULATION 9TH. It shall be the duty of occupants of dwellings in which any person or persons may be sick with SMALL POX, DIPHTHERIA, SCARLET FEVER, TYPHOID FEVER or MEMBRANOUS CHOLERA, and Physicians attending such cases forthwith to notify the Board of Health of the fact.

REGULATION 10TH. The occupants of buildings or dwellings where Small Pox exists, shall be notified by the Board of Health, to prevent the removal of clothes, bedding and upholstery, or other articles, from the infected buildings, except the removal is made by permission, or under direction of the Board of Health.

REGULATION 11TH. The occupants of buildings or dwellings where Scarlet Fever and Diphtheria exist, shall withdraw all children attending school, from the same, and the teachers of said schools shall NOT allow their children thus withdrawn to re-enter the school until they shall present a certificate approved by the attending Physician vouching for the safety thereof.

REGULATION 12TH. Night soil carts shall not be allowed to pass through the streets in the thickly settled portions of the town between sunrise and sunset, from June 1st to Nov. 1st, without a special permit from the Board of Health.

REGULATION 13TH. Any person in the town of Peabody who knows or suspects any domestic animal has contagious disease, such as glanders in horses or cholera in swine, must report the same to the Board of Health. The penalty for neglect to do so is fine or imprisonment.

The above is in accordance with the provisions of Chapter 252 of the Acts of 1887.

The Board earnestly requests the co-operation of every individual, in securing the desirable sanitary condition, to promote which the foregoing regulations are framed.

In its May issue the Magazine of American History admirably maintains its high reputation. The editor's hand appears in the leading article, "A Great Public Character," in which the interesting career of William H. Seward is concisely traced. He was born in 1801, the year marked by the election of Jefferson to the Presidency, and he lived to witness the wonderful and swiftly passing events that have made this century notable in all history. His expressive portrait at about the age when he entered the United States senate, forms the frontispiece to the number, and the article is further illustrated with buildings and scenes of the exciting period when he was Secretary of State. It is a graphic story, told in Mrs. Lamb's most vigorous and felicitous style. The second paper, "An Early West Pointer," by Hon. Charles Aldrich, of Iowa, is also illustrated. Then comes a scholarly treatise, entitled "A Lost Chapter in American History," by Rev. Dr. George Patterson, F. R. S. C., of Glasgow, in which the early attempts of the Portuguese to colonize the northeastern coast of America are pointed out in the most comprehensive manner. "The First American Ship," a brief article by Professor G. Brown Goode, of the Smithsonian Institute; "Some California Documents," from Charles Howard Shinn, of San Francisco; and "General Varum on a Constitution of Government, in 1787," from General James M. Varum, of New York, are valuable contributions. The touching story of "President Lincoln and the Sleeping Sentinel," as recited by Mr. L. E. Chittenden, is intensely dramatic and interesting; "Judge Law of Indiana," a sketch by Frank A. Myers; and the charming sonnet, "The Fairy Isle of Mackinac," by the well known poet, Professor William C. Richards, LL.D., complete the principal features of a delightful number. The shorter contributions are numerous, embracing matter concerning the famous Chesapeake, and "The Burning of the Lexington"; also "The Livingstons of America." The Notes and other departments furnish curious and readable data. Price $5.00 a year. Published at 743 Broadway, N. Y.

Mrs. Bettie Eaton, sister of President Harrison, was fatally injured by a carriage accident at Cincinnati, last Sunday, while driving home from church.

The late Secretary of the Treasury, General Francis E. Spinner, has directed by his will, the erection of a syenite monument in the family burial lot at Mohawk, with a fac simile of his signature upon the face, in raised letters, and the date of his birth and death.

and on they went in ghostly gloom and silence, like a train of specters going down into the grave. Only by the tramping of horsehoofs before and behind her could Madeleine tell that she was not utterly alone, and there began to steal over her a sense of ghastly, freezing isolation, of having left human pity and human aid far behind her, of being cut off forever from the living world of men, and in the power of beings to whom light and life were abhorrent, and whose home was the realm of loneliness and of night.

All at once a huge shadowy building loomed up dimly in front of them by the faint light of the rising moon. It was more like a vast tomb than any habitation of living men, for no spark of light was seen within, nor could the slightest sound be heard.

Keretensyi halted and blew a blast on the horn that hung at his saddlebow, loud and harsh enough to wake the dead. And it appeared as if he had really done so, for as the ponderous gate swung slowly and sullenly back the gaunt, spectral retainer who stood, lamp in hand, within the black, tunnel like archway, his white, haggard face looking doubly ghastly by contrast with the black velvet dress that he wore, did indeed seem newly risen from the grave.

Silent and shuddering Madeleine passed the fatal threshold, and as she did so the dreary howl of a wolf from the encircling forest was answered by the hooting shriek of an owl from a ruined turret overhead. It was her welcome—a fit welcome indeed to such a home!

CHAPTER II.

WHAT MADELEINE SAW BEHIND THE CURTAIN.

As she saw what it had concealed she uttered a low, choking cry.

"If I could only escape—but there is no hope of that! Or if I had even one friend near me whom I could trust!—God send me some help quickly, before I die or go mad! Oh, father, father! was a handful of money worth wrecking my life for?"

It was a strange speech for a bride in the first week of her honeymoon; but to poor Princess Keretensyi that one week had seemed longer than a year.

And well it might. Could a single living soul be doomed to eternal imprisonment among the dead, that horrible exile would fitly represent the life (if such it could be called) to which Madeleine found herself fettered without help or hope of deliverance. The grim old feudal fortress, with its gloomy towers and crumbling battlements, its mildewed hangings, moth eaten tapestries and pictures moldering out of their frames, seemed like a vast tomb itself, and the gaunt, gliding, spectral retainers who fitted noiselessly through its huge, desolate rooms or along its ghostly passages had the withered, gray, lifeless aspect of dried up corpses. Their very movements had a slow, mechanical heaviness utterly unlike any motion of living men, and more appalling to poor Madeleine than even the death like appearance of their faces.

But to the ill fated girl the most terrifying characteristic of these human machines was their stony and unchanging silence. They never seemed to speak to each other; they never by any chance spoke to her, and when she gave an order or asked a question they either replied by signs or made no reply at all. Whether they were actually dumb or whether their stern master had forbidden them to hold any communication with her, she never, from first to last, heard one of them utter a single word.

Amid this mute train of specters one might have thought that even the companionship of her mysterious and terrible husband—who at least wore a human face and spoke with a human voice—would be a kind of relief to her. But the instinctive terror which had always underlain her girlish admiration of Keretensyi had now filled her mind so completely as to leave no space for any other feeling. She could not forget how, when they stood together before the altar, the consecrated tapers that burned on it suddenly went out (though not a breath of air was stirring), and how her old nurse had solemnly declared that a glance from the fiery eyes of the terrible bridegroom had made these weaker flames tremble and expire. Nor had she forgotten how Keretensyi, when excited by an argument with one of her father's military guests, had darted at his adversary a look beneath which Col. De Malst—a strong and courageous man in the prime of life—seemed to shrink and wither like paper shriveling in the fire.

What could he be, this man to whom she had bound herself forever? This man with the beauty of a god and the glance of a demon, accomplished as a hero of romance, yet savage as a wolf of the forest. That some fearful tragedy lay behind the impenetrable mystery that wrapped him like a pall she felt only too sure, and this suspicion was vaguely but terribly confirmed on the very day after their arrival at Janosz castle.

The two earlier meals having been taken in their own room, the evening repast was the princess' first introduction to the great dining hall, which, having been built to hold scores of armed men, looked indescribably dreary and desolate when tenanted only by their two selves; for the silent, spectral retainers, who came and went like shadows in their black, funereal dress, only intensified the crushing sense of loneliness instead of relieving it. The bride's eyes wandered with secret terror over the huge bare walls, the massive pillars festooned with torn and dusty banners, the vaulted roof with its mighty cross beams of solid oak, the pine torches that flamed and crackled in their iron stands overhead, and the vast antique fireplace, with its fantastic carvings, till her timid gaze rested at length upon another object more strange and startling than all.

Just behind her husband's tall oaken chair stood a life size wax figure (or what appeared to be such) holding a small silver lamp in its outstretched hand. It represented a young man of marvelous beauty picturesquely set off by the showy uniform of a Honved hussar; but the face, instead of wearing the fixed, unmeaning stare common to such figures, was writhed and distorted as if by a spasm of mortal agony, which looked so horribly real in the fitful glare of the torchlight that Madeleine fairly started. She was just about to ask some question respecting this weird ornament, when Keretensyi, catching her inquiring glance, replied to it with a smile more fierce and cruel and terrible than his blackest frown, which froze the half formed words on her lips.

So far as she herself was concerned, however, the first few weeks gave Madeleine no valid reason for her unconquerable terror of her husband. To her he was always attentive and affectionate, though his affection resembled rather the watchful care of a kind guardian than the passionate tenderness of a bridegroom in his honeymoon. He did his utmost in various ways to make the grim isolation of this strange life more endurable to her. Horses of that matchless Hungarian breed which he had hitherto known only through books of travel were always at her disposal, and her morning gallops over the hills by her husband's side, with the sun shining in a cloudless sky and the fragrance of the pine woods filling the whole air, were almost the only bright spots in her dreary existence.

Keretensyi, too, seemed to feel their influence as well as herself, and to shake off for a moment on such occasions the mysterious gloom which at all other times weighed him down like a nightmare. As his horse hoofs rattled along the steep rocky ledge paths and the mountain breeze whistled through his long hair he seemed almost happy, but the moment they re-entered the dark walls of the grim old castle the gloomy spell was upon him once more and upon his bride likewise.

When they were together in the evening Keretensyi would often tell her exciting stories of the strange people and wonderful sights that he had seen in his travels, which appeared to have extended over every part of the earth, and which he described with such startling power and vividness that Madeleine almost forgot her terror of him in the interest with which she listened. But then all at once he would stop short, as if something choked him, and she, looking up in amazement, would find him gazing at her with a sad, wistful look, full of pity and of yearning tenderness—such a look as Jephthah might have cast at his only child the moment before he slew her.

On one of these occasions, moved by a strange impulse of womanly compassion which she herself hardly understood, she took his hand in both her own and pressed it to her lips. The strong man started as if stung by a viper, clasped her passionately to him for one moment, and kissed her as if his whole soul went into the caress, and then thrust her fiercely away and rushed headlong from the room.

The morning after this strange outburst the prince suddenly announced to her that he must leave her that very day, on an errand which might detain him for several weeks, and before she had time to recover from her amazement at this unexpected news (for hitherto he had hardly let her out of his sight, and would never allow her to go beyond the castle gates alone) he was actually gone, and she stood watching his lessening figure as he spurred his black horse along a narrow, zigzag, broken path, which skirted the brink of a precipice so terrific that few men would have cared to pass it even at a walk.

But just then she caught a fragment of the talk of two passing peasants below her, who, like herself, had paused to watch the reckless course of the distant horseman.

"Uncle," said the younger of the two, who was a stranger in that neighborhood, "if you prince of thine always rides as madly as this, he hath done well to marry again so soon, lest the race of Keretensyi should end with him."

"He hath naught to fear on that score, nephew," answered the older man solemnly. "It was foretold to him long ago, by a tongue which cannot lie, that no living thing, man or beast, shall have power to touch his life, and that, when his hour comes, he shall go down alive into the grave!"

Madeleine was almost ashamed to find how immeasurably relieved she felt by Keretensyi's departure; but before many days were over she had good cause to wish him back again. In that lifeless atmosphere the exciting influence of his fierce feverish vitality was like the plunge of an avalanche into a still mountain lake; and now that he was gone the gloom and silence and utter loneliness of this abode of the dead were almost more than she could bear.

It was not long, too, before she discovered that the ghostlike attendants who peopled her solitude were keeping a stealthy but incessant watch upon all her movements, which was even harder to endure than the jealous vigilance of her terrible bridegroom had been. When she strolled through the neglected garden or the wide, bare courtyard, she would suddenly catch sight of a black robed, silent form dogging her steps like a haunting shadow. She could not walk the battlements without seeing a pale, lean, corpse-like face peering out at her from an adjoining loophole. No opposition, indeed, was made to the continuance of her morning rides, but whenever she ordered out her horse two of the mute phantoms that guarded her instantly mounted their horses to bear her company. It was plain that for any victim once caught in these fatal toils there was no escape but death; and she felt instinctively that death itself was already hovering over her, and that its stroke would not be long delayed.

And now came a passing spell of wet and stormy weather that lasted for several days, during which Madeleine, unable to venture out, employed her enforced leisure in exploring the interior of the castle, many parts of which were still quite new to her. She was all the more inclined to occupy herself in this way because here, and here alone, she was left unmolested by the ceaseless vigilance of the spies who dogged her every movement elsewhere.

In the course of one of these rambles she came upon a long, narrow, gloomy passage, which she followed without knowing why. The rooms that opened out of it bore such marks of neglect and decay as showed that they must have lain uninhabited for years; but midway along the corridor she met with an even more striking token of disuse and abandonment—the doorway of a room which had been actually built up, as if it were never to be occupied again.

This of itself would have been nothing very remarkable in such a place, but Madeleine was startled to perceive by the freshness of the work that this room must have been closed up within the last few years.

Of what dark and mysterious tragedy had these voiceless stones been the mute witnesses? Had her terrible husband, like other men of whom she had read, walled up one of his enemies alive in this dismal retreat to perish by the slow torture of thirst and famine, or had he?—But at that thought she flung out her hands wildly, as if thrusting away from her some horrible specter, and was just turning to go back when she happened to notice that one of the posts of this blocked up door had parted slightly from the surrounding woodwork, leaving a crack through which it was possible to see into the mysterious chamber.

Driven by an impulse beyond her control she crept up to it and peeped through.

There was not much to be seen within after all—only a bare, dusty, unfurnished room, at the farther end of which hung a black curtain. But a strange horror fell suddenly upon her as she gazed, and, springing back as if from the edge of a precipice, she turned and fled away.

Two days after Madeleine was wandering aimlessly along a tapestried gallery which she had not seen before, when her foot slipped and she fell with some force against the wall. To her surprise the wall seemed to yield with her, and she guessed that she must have accidentally touched the spring of some secret panel. She lifted the tapestry, pushed back an oaken panel which was standing ajar behind it, and found herself—with what feeling may be easily imagined—in the mysterious room with the black curtain.

For one moment she stood motionless, glancing round her with a secret horror which she could neither understand nor resist.

The door which had been walled up, when thus seen from the inside, appeared to be a massive framework of solid black oak, clamped and banded with iron; and the sight of it increased Madeleine's terror, as she thought how frightful that secret must be for which even such defenses as these were accounted insufficient.

The room was covered so thickly with dust that her first step into it had stirred up a cloud which almost choked her; but on the bare, unswep floor she saw a line of footprints leading up to the black curtain and another

Downfall of "Old Hutch."

On Wednesday, Benjamin P. Hutchinson who for many years has enjoyed the reputation of being the king of Chicago's grain operators, disappeared very suddenly and mysteriously. Unfortunate speculations caused his flight. His liabilities are estimated from $2,000,000 to $3,000,000, but his friends claim he can pay every dollar. He purchased a ticket for Florida, and it was at first thought he had gone there. Later, rumors of suicide became rife. His affairs since the first of the year have been in a state of entanglement, and of late he is said to have indulged his appetite for drink, and his mind has shown marked signs of falling. Mr. Hutchinson is a native of Essex County. He was born at Danvers, in 1828, and began life as a farmer boy, but he early evinced a distaste for that calling and engaged in shoe-making in Lynn. He became proprietor of an establishment, and won a good share of success until the panic of 1857 cast its blight on the industries of the country. He became bankrupt and emigrated to the West. He tried Milwaukee, but, in 1859, seeing that Chicago was a more promising centre, removed thither. He soon became a member of the Chicago Board of Trade, paying the admission fee of $5. Here he dove into the wheat and grain trade, and made a name as a careful speculator. He showed remarkable judgment in his forecasts of the markets, and by adroit management, accumulated a large fortune in four or five years. In 1863, he returned to Lynn and invited all his old creditors to dinner at one of the hotels, giving them an ample spread and depositing under each plate—so the story goes—the amount of his indebtedness and interest. He afterwards speculated largely in pork, with great success. He stood second only to Phil D. Armour as a pork-packer, but his especial forte is said to have been commissions. He amassed a large fortune, amounting to millions; but of late his mind seems not to have served him so faithfully, and he has been sliding down on the other side. He was found in Evansville, Ind., yesterday, by the police, and he has telegraphed that he will return to Chicago to-day.

Masons Abroad.

A large party of Masons, representing lodges of the fraternity from every State in the Union, will visit Europe next month. They have chartered three steamers and will sail by three distinct routes. The journey will take about eight weeks.

The Episcopal Bishopric.

Rev. Phillips Brooks, of Trinity Church, Boston, was elected on Thursday to fill the vacant Episcopal Bishopric. His appointment seems to give very general satisfaction.

French papers speak uncharitably of Baron Von Moltke since his death—describing him as a "cold blooded butcher," etc.

The birthday of General Grant was celebrated at Delmonico's last Monday night. Among those present were Joseph H. Choate who presided; William M. Evarts, who responded to the toast, "The day we celebrate;" Rear Admiral Braine, General Howard, W. J. Wallace, John W. Noble, General Wager Swayne, Calvin S. Brice, General G. M. Dodge, Stephen B. Elkins, General F. C. Barlow and T. C. Platt.

A beautiful souvenir menu, leather bound, with a portrait of General Grant on the cover, was presented to each guest. Accompanying the menu was a small leather case containing a bronze medal, on the obverse is a bas relief of General Grant's head and on the reverse side a bas relief of the tomb as it will be when completed. The corner stone of the Grant Monument at Riverside Park was laid on the same day with impressive ceremonies.

A two year old child swallowed a screw, in Boston this week and died shortly after in its mother's arms. It choked to death.

First impressions are lasting, but they are not lasting shoes.

CABINETS $4.00 PER DOZ.

Our price has always been $5.00 without deviation; and for two years we have done no club work. We shall probably never sell clubs again, their day having gone by, but there are many who do not care during these dull times to pay so much as $5.00 a dozen for pictures, but who still want the best. As we wish to reach this class, but do not believe in charging two prices for the same thing, we have decided to adopt the medium price of $4.00 for a short time. The quality of work will be the same as heretofore.

ELIZABETH A. BROWN. My Case is a Miracle!

PRAISE GOD, I AM WELL!!

LEWISTON, ME., OCT. 28, 1890.

DANA SARSAPARILLA CO.:—
Gentlemen,—For over ten years I have been a great sufferer with weakness peculiar to my sex. I would have for days at a time a terrible bearing-down feeling, accompanied by great exhaustion and severe pain in back and limbs. I would go to bed fatigued, and rise in the morning more exhausted than when I retired. Often after rising I would have a period of trembling, until at last my nerves were in a state of complete prostration. I would have little or no appetite. Almost constant headache, accompanied by strange sensations, etc. Such was my condition when I first heard of DANA'S SARSAPARILLA. Though I am but forty-three years of age, yet my hair is gray, and I look like a person near sixty years old.

While visiting my daughter, Mrs. Hardy, in Bangor, Me., she persuaded me to try a bottle of DANA'S SARSAPARILLA, and to please her I did so. That bottle helped me a little. The second one gave me a good appetite, and caused me to rest better nights. I continued to use it, and continued to improve, till I had taken eleven bottles. And, praise God, I am WELL! IT HAS CURED ME! I feel like a new person! I have increased in flesh from ninety-one pounds to a hundred and forty-six pounds, and enjoy life once more.

MY CASE IS A MIRACLE, and I will do all I can to tell others.

Yours with respect,
ELIZABETH A. BROWN.

Try a Bottle. "No Benefit, No Pay."
REMEMBER IT!

James A. McPoland has opened a barber shop in Allen's Block, on the second floor. Cassidy & Shea, barbers, are to remove back to the room in the basement of the Baldwin House that has been occupied as a bar room during the past year.

Several buildings were set on fire Monday, by sparks from a chimney in rear of T. J. Reilly's old shop on Walnut street. The Fire Department responded promptly to an alarm from box 18 and the spread of conflagration was thus averted.

Camp 87, Sons of Veterans, was inspected Tuesday evening by Maj. D. B. Purbeck of Salem. The Camp was found in excellent condition by the inspecting officer, scoring 98 out of a possible 99. The inspection was witnessed by Post 50, G. A. R.

Timothy Lane was before the court Thursday charged with an assault on Timothy O'Keefe on Foster street May 5. He was convicted and fined $3. Lane was out on probation for a third drunk and he was sent down for four months on that case and one month on the assault.

The school committee held their regular monthly meeting Tuesday evening and transacted the usual routine business. Mrs. M. O. Stevens was appointed to take the school census. Miss Mary McCarthy was appointed a permanent teacher in the lower primary grade of the Endicott school and it was voted to call the attention of all the teachers to the state law regarding special exercises in the schools appropriate to Memorial day.

A bull dog belonging to Frank Lummus was run over and killed by the Danvers horse car on Monday. The animal was kicked over by one of the horses, and the driver, paying no attention to the prostrate position of the dog, allowed the car to run over his neck and choke him to death.

When you go to Salem, take the Essex Electric cars and stop at the corner of North and Federal streets for a visit to J. H. Puchard's new greenhouses. He is a old florist but his establishment is bran new and filled with everything that can be desired in the line of seeds, bulbs and flowers.

Chas. E. Hoag made a complaint last Saturday to the selectmen against the chairman of the board for allowing his men to blockade the sidewalk on Walnut street, which leads to the Reporter office. The board passed a vote instructing the chief-of-police to enforce the town by-law relative to the obstruction of sidewalks.

The man who stole the horse from H. N. Batchelder's barn in South Peabody a few weeks ago, went to Gardner's harness shop and bought a $25 light harness, on Mr. Batchelder's name. He took the harness into a Foster street bar-room and lost it in shaking dice. The harness was afterward recovered by Mr. Gardner.

David Lynch and Michael Kennedy for an assault on Richard Baldwin, April 30, were fined $5 between them, Baldwin having acknowledged satisfaction; Lynch and Dennis McCarthy for engaging in a mutual affray Monday, were each fined $5; Lynch was also fined $5 for using profane language. One drunk was before the court.

On the fifth page we publish a new advertisement of E. & C. Woodman, Tauntonville, nurserymen, florists and seedmen. A glance at their card will suggest that you will do well to call and see their green houses. They do a large mail and express business. If you cannot call on them, send an order by mail and it will be promptly filled to your satisfaction.

With two lines of street rail ways to Salem, trade naturally drifts thither. The cars of the Essex road pass the door of J. R. L'Affricain, 32 Front street. He has the most attractive provision store in Salem. Meats, provisions and vegetables of every variety can be bought at his market at prices suited to the times. He is connected by telephone and will deliver goods anywhere in Peabody, free.

Some months ago we mentioned that Hon. Henry M. Cross of Newburyport would probably deliver the Memorial Day oration in town. Definite arrangements have now been made with that hero, to fill the engagement. He was an officer during the war, and served with credit, and his address will be listened to with much interest by all, especially the veterans, who prefer to hear from comrades, rather than from latter day heroes, who can only recount deeds from a history which the veterans helped, themselves to make.

The Report of the School Committee was issued this week it is comprehensive in detail and furnishes parents with information and suggestions that should receive their careful attention. It shows the whole number registered to be 2102, average membership 1837, average attendance, 1623. The total receipts for the support of schools last year were $30,130.17; expenditures $31,376.67. The amount expended for text books was $2224.55. There are fifty teachers in all the schools. The highest salary paid is $1500 and the lowest is $280.

On Thursday evening N. M. Quint's barge carried over to Lynn a company of friends of Mr. and Mrs. George C. Marsh, who entertained them at their new residence, No. 12 Ireson Avenue, where a very pleasant evening passed. As they were riding home through Foster street, one of their number improvised the following lines:
Rum's reign is o'er, rum's reign is o'er,
In our goodly town;
And oh! it fills my soul with joy
That men have put it down.
Keep it out, keep it out;
Always vote a No;
And this shall ever be our song,
Saloons, saloons must go.

MISS C. M. O'CONNOR,
296 ESSEX STREET, SALEM.

A horse attached to a wagon in which were Alfred Burleigh and John Needham of West Peabody, suddenly took fright and ran, near the old burying ground on Boston street, Saturday night. The vehicle was hurled with great force against a tree and both men were thrown out. Both were seriously stunned, Mr. Burleigh for a long time being unconscious, and both bled from some ugly gashes. The neighbors rendered willing assistance and after binding up their wounds a team was hitched up and the two men taken home. The ambulance responded to a call but its services were not needed.

At a meeting of the selectmen Saturday afternoon, the following business was transacted: George F. Messer was appointed measurer of upper leather; pool and billiard table licenses were granted to John H. Keith; the chairman was instructed to cause the building belonging to the heirs of William Bushby to be suitably fixed up so that it shall be in safe condition; sixth class licenses were granted to D. P. Grosvenor, George S. Curtis, Wm. T. Lee; junk licenses were granted to George Cook and Albert Cook; John J. Fitzgerald of Salem was rejected in his application for a license; Daniel P. McCarthy was granted a license to keep an intelligence office.

The annual visitation of the great chiefs of the great council of Massachusetts of the Improved Order of Red Men was made to Masconomo tribe Thursday evening, and a large number of the members turned out to receive them, the attendance being the largest that has been seen in the wigwam for some time. Among the great chiefs were: Great Sachem Provin, Great Prophet Downes, D. D. G. S. Macauley, Great Junior Sagamore Tyler, Great Chief of Records Gardner, and Past Sachem Sheeney of Agawam tribe. Interesting long talks were made and a pleasing musical entertainment followed. The company repaired to Town Hall where a tempting spread had been provided by McChrill & Co., caterers of Salem. This was followed by more long talks and all joined in smoking the fragrant calumet.

Chewing Gum Free.

The Jones & Primley Co., of Elkhart, Indiana, will send a sample package of their California Fruit Chewing Gum free to any one applying for it. This gum has been pronounced absolutely pure and wholesome by leading Western chemists and physicians. Write them a postal card and secure a free sample.

California Prices in 1849.

During the winter of 1849-50, the cost of living was extreme. As the season was a very wet one, the roads and trails were full of mud-holes, in which supply wagons were stuck and mules and oxen mired. Wages and animals were not added several times a day to extricate them from the mud, and in one instance at least four or five days were spent on the road from Stockton, fifty miles away. Flour reached a dollar a pound, rice the same, pork and bacon a dollar and sixty cents a pound, saleratus sixteen dollars a pound, and spermaceti candles a dollar each. An ounce of gold was the price of a pick or shovel, and almost anything needed, except fresh beef, commanded a proportionate price. That all miners did not get rich is accounted for in the statement that it took a fair claim to pay expenses. The short duration of a placer claim, the loss of time in finding another, and the too general restlessness, tell the story of many failures to realize a fortune by even those who were the most lucky. Too often it was due to extravagance, gambling, or the guzzling of brandy or whiskey at eight dollars a bottle. But, drunk or sober, one was obliged to pay two ounces for a pair of pantaloons, a hundred dollars for a pair of long-legged boots, and four dollars expressage for a letter.—May Century.

"Rocker" Mining in '49.

The most expensive instrument of the early miner was the rocker, which, though simple in construction, cost in the mines from fifty to a hundred dollars. In general appearance it was not unlike a baby's cradle as used by our grandmothers and as still seen on the frontier. It consisted of a flat bottom with two sides that flared outward, and an end board at the head, while the foot was open save a riffle about an inch and a half high at the bottom to catch the gold that might pass another riffle across the bottom near the middle. At the head of the cradle was a hopper about eighteen inches square, with a perforated sheet-iron bottom or wire screen. Under this was an apron, or board, sloping downward towards the head. Two substantial rockers under the whole completed the simple machine which gave to the world millions of dollars. The modus operandi may be described as follows: Two sticks of wood hewn on the upper side were imbedded at the river's brink, one four inches lower than the other, on which the rockers were to rest, thus securing a grade in the machine to facilitate the outward flow of the water and sand. Two miners usually worked together as partners. One shovelled the earth into the rocker while the other, seated on a boulder or block of wood, dipped the water from the river, and poured it upon the earth in the hopper with one hand, all the time rocking with the other. When the earth was thoroughly washed, he rose, lifted the hopper from its place, threw out the stones and gravel, replaced it, and thus the work went on. As the ground about the rocker became exhausted to the bed-rock, recourse was had to the bucket, and the earth was carried sometimes a few rods, making laborious work for the miner. To keep the rocker going another hand would be employed to carry earth, and each would carry two buckets at a time. Hard work of this kind suggested improvements in mining. At noon the gold and black sand collected above the riffles were taken up on a scraper and thrown into the pan, which was carried to the river and carefully washed to remove as far as possible all but the gold. The yield of the forenoon was carried to the camp, dried over a blaze, the dry sand blown out, and the gold weighed in scales or guessed at, and poured into the partnership purse and deposited under the bed or anywhere else out of sight.—May Century.

Gift to Phillips.

Mr. E. B. Covers of New York, a graduate of Phillips Academy in the class of 1857, has presented to the Academy one of E. Howard's best wall clocks, and by a fortunate coincidence it was placed in position in the great hall and presented on the one hundred and thirteenth anniversary of the opening of the school, April 30, 1778. On a white marble dial are placed the arabic hour figures, hour and minute hands, the minute dots, and a motto—all in rich bronze. The motto is one set up more than two hundred years ago on the great dial in the quadrangle of All Souls College, Oxford,—"Perennit et Immutantur." These words, emphasizing the flight and the value of time, are known to have impressed the imagination, and influenced the minds of such men as Cardinal Newman, Pusey, Keble and the martyr missionary, Bishop Latterison.

The young men in Phillips Academy, cannot but be influenced in a like manner by these words which signify that while the hours pass away never to be recalled, the use made of them is charged in every man's account and will stand forever. In the informal presentation, Principal Bancroft spoke of the motto which was written on the face of the clock which was formerly in the old brick Academy, "Youth is Serd-time of Life,"—a motto often alluded to by the pupils of Principal Adams's time, and mentioned by Oliver Wendell Holmes in his centennial poem, "The School Boy." Doubtless some of our older readers will recall that clock and its legend.

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL.

E. S. Willard, at the Tremont, failed to impress Boston this week with the degree of enthusiasm that he is said to have aroused in New York. He is a man of striking visage, good physique and rather commanding appearance, but he lacks that peculiar magnetism that is essential to winning the favor of Boston audiences. The play, "John Needham's Double," is an ill chosen character, being of the blood-curdling type, in which the high artistic touches of both writer and actor are obscured by the revolting sensation of the main plot. The parts impersonated by Willard were well rendered, and showed careful study and a fair appreciation. The play of "John Needham's Double" is a portrait of crime committed in cold-blooded villainy. Its melodramatic action deals with the shrewd, relentless plotting of the assassin, his cruel, bloody deed upon a guest, and the working of fate toward the punishment of the assassin. Mr. Willard interprets both the role of the murderer and the role of the murdered. The plot—a dramatization by Joseph Hatton of his own novel of the same name—is founded in the physical likeness of these two men, and their diametrically opposite character. Norbury is a kind, gentle, noble, open-hearted and unsuspecting man. Needham, of whom Norbury is the double, is generous to his friends, and yet despicable in his unsuspected scheming; is a cheat and forger, unmanly and sneaking. He is about to commit suicide, when exposure seems inevitable, when Norbury appears. Then Needham displays the brutal courage to commit a climax of evil, to destroy the life of his trusting acquaintance, to steal his identity and to sail for America, as Norbury intended to do, there to accept a legacy which awaited his victim.

The Grand Opera House closes the engagement to-night of "Cruel London," and Monday, will stage the laughable farce-comedy, "A Cold Day." Perkins D. Fisher will introduce his latest vocal success, "Rooty Toot," with chorus by the entire company. The charming song-brette, Carlotta, will introduce the London Gaiety Dance which has won her great success in New York. Other comedians and specials will appear in new and striking parts, among them, Richard Morosco, the well known German comedian. Matinees will be Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday.

"Hands Across the Sea" occupies the stage of the Boston Museum again. After the long run it has had here and in the numerous cities and towns of New England, comment is unnecessary. Everybody is familiar with the plot. It only remains for those whose fortune it has been to see the play on a suburban stage, to visit the Museum and witness the full effects of this combination of wit, pathos, tragedy, deep-dyed villainy and noble humanity. The cast is in the main the same as its original production, the principal changes being the substitution of Mr. Davenport for Mr. Mason as Jack Dudley; Mr. Barron replaces Mr. Pitt as Jean de Lussac, and Mr. Edward E. Rose succeeds to Mr. Davenport's old part of Robert Stillwood. The character of Dudley is more congenial to Mr. Davenport than that of Stillwood, and he plays it intelligently and in the main satisfactorily. Mr. Barron gives a finished sketch of the French gambler and criminal, and is an improvement on Mr. Pitt. Mr. Rose is not equal to the demands of his part and, while his appearance is sufficiently hang-dog in action, he is a very "namby-pamby" villain.

"The Soudan," which is still doing a good business at the Boston Theatre, will be brought out at McVicker's, Chicago, on July 4, where it will remain two months. With the same play Mr. Tompkins will begin the autumn season at the New York Academy of Music, and at both Chicago and New York, Louis James will play the part of Captain Temple. It has been erroneously stated that Mr. Tompkins bought this drama from the English owners. A royalty on each performance is paid them. The play was originally secured by Mr. A. M. Palmer of New York, who by agreement was to produce it within two years or forfeit $3,000. Mr. Palmer decided that it would be better to lose that sum than to risk the expense of bringing it out, and so sent the manuscript and models back to London and lost his $3,000. After that, negotiations with Mr. Tompkins began, and he then secured what has proved to be the most profitable play ever acted in Boston—most profitable for the time it has been running. It is said that nothing ever done at the Boston Theatre realized for the managers in 17 weeks what "The Soudan" did.—Boston Journal.

An Organ of Speech.—The Congressional Record

ANNA ELIZABETH DICKINSON.

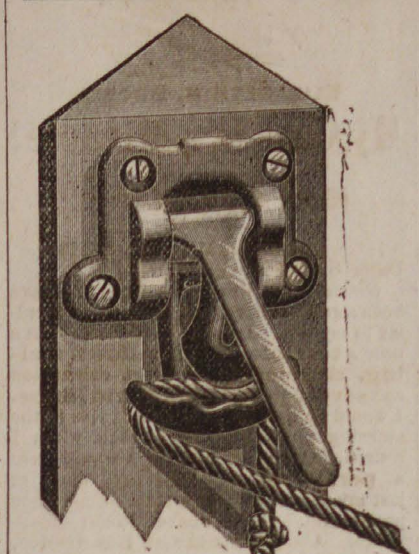

Anna Elizabeth Dickinson, who accuses her sister Susan of having put her in a lunatic asylum, although she says she is quite sane, was born in 1846, in Philadelphia, and lost her father when quite young. She and her sisters were left in poverty. The children were educated at the Friends School in her native town, where Anna soon showed herself to be a very gifted child. She had to give lessons to get along, and devoted all her earnings to the purchase of books, studying oratory from the books of the best masters, in her spare hours. She began to write articles in magazines when she was only 17 years old. Her first appearance in the lecture field was on the slavery question. She was immediately engaged by the Republican party, and during the civil war, stumped the country for the national cause. She spoke in 1863, in the coal regions of Pennsylvania, when all the male orators were afraid of speaking in that part of the country on account of the draft riots. In every Presidential campaign she has been engaged by the Republican party, throwing her whole soul into her work. Miss Dickinson has also written several plays in which she herself has taken parts, but we cannot say that she has been very successful as an actress. During the last few years she has been in weak health at her home, where her sister Susan seems to have taken good care of her. Lately Miss Susan got her sister removed to an asylum, thinking she needed better care than she could afford to give her. Miss Anna Dickinson made her escape and is now lecturing again. She lately delivered a most extraordinary lecture in New York, in which she accused Postmaster-General Wannamaker, Messrs. Clarkson, Allison and Quay of having aided her sister in declaring her insane, and promising revelations regarding her former political friends. It seems to be her intention to stomp the country against these men.

What a Mistake!

One half of all the people in this country have been or are now afflicted with catarrh or bronchitis. No doubt many of them have tried every blood purifier they have seen, with the erroneous idea that catarrh is a constitutional disease of the blood. Why, a greater mistake was never made! Stop for a moment and ask any reputable physician what common catarrh is, or bronchitis (which is a catarrh in the bronchial tubes), and what causes it, and the answer can be only this: "It is an irritation or inflammation of the mucous membrane of the nose and throat, caused by neglected colds, damp, piercing, irritable winds, foreign matter in the air, which is poisonous to some persons and not to others; just as the bites of certain insects is a poisoned torture to some and has no unpleasant effect upon others." The reason for this is found in the different structure of the outer skin and its counterpart which lines all the inner organs of our bodies. Some people have chapped hands and chilblains and others are never so afflicted because of the peculiar structure of the skin of different individuals. It is not blood purifiers you want, but good wholesome food, the plainer the better; then "keep your feet dry and warm, your head cool, and bowels open," and use an external application (Johnson's Anodyne Liniment is the best we know) to allay the inflammation, cleanse the surface, heal the sores, and your catarrh will disappear like magic; we do not say never to return, because you may cure a severe cold and in three months catch another equally as bad; so with catarrh and bronchial troubles, exposure may bring it on again. We learned more about treating catarrh from the wrapper around a bottle of Johnson's Anodyne Liniment than we ever knew. Certainly this good old medicine deserves to be called "A universal family remedy." It will pay you to send to I. S. Johnson & Co., Boston, Mass., for a pamphlet, free, just to learn how to use the liniment economically. A teaspoonful properly used will do more good than a half bottle as some people use it. This liniment is made from the formula of an old family physician.

SATURDAY, MAY 9, 1891.

WE PUBLISH today two selected poems. One by John Boyle O'Reilly, will be found quite interesting. The second is from Harper's Weekly.

IT WILL be seen by another column, that the public bar bill has passed the Senate. The hostility of the House, however, may defeat its final enactment.

WE CALL attention of those interested in agriculture to the specially edited Agricultural page. If we find the matter appreciated, a few columns will be published every week.

AN EXCHANGE says if there was anybody who thought Anna Elizabeth Dickinson was wrongly committed to an asylum, before hearing her lecture, the idea was dispelled afterward.

THE SENATE yesterday passed the bill giving cities and towns the authority to establish municipal lighting plants, and it will undoubtedly become a law before the present session closes. This measure will be hailed with delight by the friends of town plants but time alone will demonstrate the wisdom or folly of this step toward socialism.

WOBURN is threatened with serious interruption, if not total loss, of her tanning and currying industries in consequence of an order issued by the Supreme Court, to restrain Stephen Dow & Co. from discharging the sewage of their tannery into Horn Pond, because by so doing, Mystic Pond, from which Boston receives a part of her water supply is thereby polluted.

The injunction is causing much alarm for the future prosperity of the city, as the works are entirely closed in consequence, and should the injunction be made perpetual, that firm will look for a location in another town. The Woburn Journal, in an editorial last Friday, called on the Board of Trade, to take some active measures to assist the Dow firm in resisting the petition to make the injunction perpetual.

Woburn has comparatively recently adopted a city form of government, having for quite a number of years past, made rapid strides in growth of population, by reason of her large tanning and currying industries, and not many years ago, she was conferred the further boon of being made a main line station of the Boston & Lowell railroad, and to crush her main stay a single blow, as the order is likely to do, would be a serious detriment to her future prospects. Although naturally well fitted for a residential suburb, she is so far from Boston, and so many attractive towns intervene, that many years may elapse before the overflowing tide of population reaches her border. Boston must of course have pure water, but it is to be hoped that Woburn may find some satisfactory solution of the difficulty and retain her hitherto, growing and prosperous industry.

CERTAIN RECENT publications of base, cowardly and malevolent attacks upon officials of this town, whose long and faithful public service, oft-repeated elections to fill positions of public trust and responsibility are ample refutations or any aspersions that can be heaped upon their characters by the most adroit calumniators, have fallen under our observation. Although the publication which gave utterance to those columns of venom is so thoroughly disregarded by people of every shade of social standing and political and religious belief as to call for, not even passing notice; though this same publication has been filled with mixtures of malice and falsehood for many weary months, has savagely and wantonly attacked the private characters of honorable and respected private citizens in a desperate endeavor to gain for itself notoriety, or for the still more ignoble purpose of cajoling, frightening or bullying this or that individual into receiving its loathsome issues into the household, until one and all have come to regard the sheet as utterly unworthy of perusal or its utterances entitled to either-weight or credence; we deem it advisable to say a passing word as to the falsity of the charge and the disingenuousness of its innuendoes. As to boycotting, we are authorized to say that the selectmen or a majority of them have never "boycotted" any person or office. The quality of work done at the office referred to, rendered it unsuitable for town purposes, to say nothing of what self-respect would dictate.

SEVERAL TIMES we have suggested the necessity for a local Board of Trade to look after the business interests of the town and the present depressed condition of that industry which, in times past, has been the main support of our community, and given the town a wide reputation as one of the leather centres of the country, emphasizes the urgency of that necessity more forcibly than it can be expressed by tongue or pen. What more auspicious opportunity than the present, then, can we have for organizing the business men of Peabody for the purpose of demonstrating to outside capitalists the superior advantages our location offers for manufacturing industries. We have facilities that are seldom combined in a single township. We have all that would generally be considered essential to building up one of the most prosperous industrial centres of the Commonwealth if not of the whole country. All we lack is booming. Endowed in the past with a flourishing industry that raised us from a farming village to a thrifty and growing town, we have lapsed into conservatism and have rested contented with what appeared to be well enough. But like many another community that has waxed fat with prosperity, and thus become indifferent to the doing of the world around, the fateful crisis has come, and prosperity has been blighted and decayed. And now we stand in the great struggle of the world like a strong, healthy man, able and willing to do whatever may be found to do, but alas! with nothing to furnish the brawny arms with employment. Let us, therefore, bestir ourselves and by active, concerted methods, retrieve the lost vigor of our town by attracting new men and new industries within our border.

ACCORDING to the Beverly Times and Danvers Mirror, the Beverly and Danvers Storage Battery railway has failed to impress the traveling public with its importance as a revolutionizer of street railway locomotion. The road has been in operation for more than a year and a half, and several new forms of secondary batteries have been tried, but so far without even that degree of success necessary to satisfy the friends of the scheme, and the latest move, is to discharge all but three or four employees, and this in the face of approaching summer months, when travel should be at its height and all the rolling stock available should be in readiness for active service, is a tacit confession of failure. It is true the road as at present located, is not calculated to attract immense freights, but if the electrical system had been all that has been claimed, its alleged merit would undoubtedly have found recognition by the numerous capitalists who are looking for that sort of enterprise to invest in.

The towns of Danvers and Beverly have denied the Naumkeag Street Railway Company the right to put in an overhead electric system, upon the supposition, as has been stated, that the storage battery had or soon would, furnish a better and less obnoxious means of electrical propulsion, and now that the managers of the storage road have practically "thrown up the sponge," the town fathers in both of those municipalities will be relieved of one obstacle at least, to granting the necessary franchises to complete electrical conveyances upon the main lines of the Naumkeag system.

IN ANOTHER column will be found an article published in the Sunday Herald, from the pen of the Salem correspondent, upon the subject of annexation of Peabody to the city of Salem. The recent reference to the subject in these columns has attracted the attention of many people both in town and elsewhere, and the more the matter is considered the stronger becomes the conviction that Peabody should join the sisterhood of cities. As the Herald correspondent says, the town is too large to be managed by the unwieldy machinery of a town meeting. The interests of the town need more frequent and careful consideration than can be given by a half dozen town meetings. Exigencies are constantly arising that require immediate attention by a body having legal authority to act. The necessary powers cannot be conferred upon any board of officers existing under the town form of government, and to call repeatedly upon the body politic to assemble at the Town House and discuss what to many are dry and uninteresting subjects, becomes so monotonous that but few attend, and fewer participate either in the debates or votes; so that instead of a government by the majority, we are actually ruled and governed by the will of the minority.

We recommend our readers to peruse the article quoted from the Herald, trusting they will there find some wholesome food for reflection.

Dyspepsia

Makes the lives of many people miserable, causing distress after eating, sour stomach, sick headache, heartburn, loss of appetite, a faint, "all gone" feeling, bad taste, coated tongue, and irregularity of the bowels. Dyspepsia does not get well of itself. It requires careful attention, and a remedy like Hood's

Distress After Eating

Sarsaparilla, which acts gently, yet efficiently. It tones the stomach, regulates the digestion, creates a good appetite, banishes headache, and refreshes the mind.

Sick Headache

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. After eating I would have a faint or tired, all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. My trouble was aggravated by my business, painting. Last spring I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, which did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced."

Court of County Commissioners, April Term, A. D. 1891.

Upon the petition of B. W. RUSSELL and others, praying for a highway to be laid out and constructed, beginning at the easterly terminus of Walnut street in the town of Peabody and County aforesaid, and leading in an easterly direction to Grove street in Salem.

Notice having been duly given, to all persons and corporations interested therein, we, the County Commissioners for said County, having met, and viewed the premises, and heard the parties, who then and there desired to be heard, do adjudge that the public convenience, and necessity require that said highway should be laid out and constructed as prayed for in said petition, commencing at the easterly terminus of Walnut street in the town of Peabody in an easterly direction to Grove street near the tannery of James Dugan and on the northerly side thereof through land of Harmony Grove Cemetery Corporation and land of said Dugan.

In testimony whereof, we the said County Commissioners, have hereunto set our hands this 27th day of April, A. D. 1891.

LOCAL LINES.

James H. Griffin, milk dealer, was fined $50 for selling adulterated milk, in the District Court, yesterday. Inspector Terry saw his team on Charter street and pointing to a can, said, "I'll take a pint of milk out of that." Mr. Griffin claims that the milk in that particular can was purchased of another party.

Mrs. Ann W. Beckwith, who resides with her daughter, Mrs. T. E. Wilson, was 90 years old on Sunday. She was born in Addison, N. H., and was the eldest of twelve children, only one other, the youngest, being now alive. Mrs. Beckwith has always been remarkably active, and it was no great effort for her to walk a distance of two miles or more in making a call on a friend. She always preferred walking to riding. Lately she has had a severe attack of the grippe, and at one time her life was despaired of, but her many friends will be glad to learn that an improvement is noticed in her condition.

Mrs. D. Nimblet died Sunday evening of pneumonia after an illness lasting several weeks. The deceased was a leather whittener and had been in the employ of F. Osborn, Jr. & Co., for years. He served through the war in the army and did provost duty in No. Carolina for some time after the close of hostilities. Mr. Nimblet enlisted from Lowell, under Gen. Butler, and was with the General on his march through Baltimore and in all his later campaigns, including the siege of New Orleans. A member of the post says it is doubtful if there is another veteran in town who saw as much service as he. Mr. Nimblet was not connected with the Grand Army and the only organization to which he belonged was the Masconomo Tribe of the Improved Order of Red Men. He was 59 years of age, and leaves a widow one son and a daughter.

The seventy-seventh annual meeting of the Ladies Benevolent Society was held in the Unitarian chapel Wednesday afternoon, and the following officers were elected: Miss Addie A. Little president; Mrs. C. H. Goulding, Mrs. Mary A. Fox, Mrs. J. W. Hudson, vice presidents; Mrs. Frank C. Merrill, secretary; Miss Augusta F. Daniels, treasurer. Directors for District No. 1, Mrs. Joseph Jacobs, Mrs. D. P. Grosvenor, Mrs. Geo. F. Sanger, Mrs. F. C. Merrill, Miss Helen Allen, Miss Sabina E. Waite, Mrs. Kate Sanger, Mrs. Dr. H. K. Porter; District No. 2—Mrs. Richard E. Smith, Miss Martha M. Hutchison, Mrs. G. H. Poor, and Mrs. N. R. Emerson; District No. 3—Mrs. Franklin Osborn, Mrs. D. B. Lord, Miss Martha O. Barrett, Mrs. James Buxton; District No. 4—Mrs. H. Brown, Mrs. W. P. Clark, Mrs. Hannah A. Brown, Mrs. Alonzo Radin; ladies' assessment collectors—Misses M. A. Southwick, Percy Grosvenor, Lucy Farley, Lizzie Hall. The treasurer's report was as follows: Balance May 1, 1890, $95.56; received during the year to May 5, 1891, $1238.33, making a total of $1333.89. Expended during the year, $788.60, leaving a balance on hand of $545.29. Of this balance $500 is the legacy of Mrs. Serena Ayer, received August, 1890.

GENERAL NEWS.

A Campello young man recently met a handsome young woman, with whom he fell deeply in love. Being bashful he asked a friend if he would not propose for him, and, if successful, he would pay $100 for his friend's services. The friend succeeded in making the proposal, and the young man was accepted. The marriage took place recently, and the friend asked for his $100, but the young husband refused to pay. The claim has been placed in the hands of a lawyer for collection.—Hingham Journal.

The Arlington Mills Corporation is buying up more land in the vicinity of its factories and will erect more buildings. The Arlington must evidently be in a good state of progress. It has now grown to be the second in size in Lawrence.

Revere has had quite a local excitement this week over the nomination, by Governor Russell, of W. H. Bryant, a democrat, as justice of peace, with power to issue criminal process. A similar commission is already held by another individual. Quite a strong protest has been sent to the Governor by one of the Selectmen from whom the petition for appointment had been concealed. It is rumored that a fight will be precipitated when Bryant issues his first warrant, and the question of legality of his appointment tested.

NOTED AND QUOTED.

The United States army is ridiculously small, to be sure, but it never makes itself ludicrous as the English grenadiers are in the habit of doing. Our regulars never mutiny and refuse to drill or to black their boots, even if the orders seem excessive and tyrannical, as they seldom are. As between maintaining a large, ill-disciplined army in the English style and a small, unpretentious but effective force in the American style, we prefer the latter.—Springfield Republican.

The late Lawrence Barrett left to his family the equity in his Cohasset property and his insurance of $120,000. It is said that $30,000 is asked for the Cohasset residence, a price far below its cost. One of the obligations some time since assumed by Mrs. Barrett—that of paying off the debt upon the Cohasset Catholic church—will be met by that lady, although at the time of its assumption Mr. Barrett's prospects seemed far brighter than the result warranted.

A few years ago attention was called to the possible annexation of Peabody to Salem. There were then a few persons in Peabody who favored such a project, and a good many in Salem. The great majority of Peabody people ridiculed the idea, however. A great change has taken place in Peabody sentiment, and today some of the leading citizens look upon it as feasible, and even probable. It is pretty evident that some change must soon be made in the government of the town. It is the subject of a great amount of complaint. What would in the end most conduce peace and quietness and what will, no doubt, be eventually adopted, is to unite the village of Peabody with Salem, and leave the farming section as the town of Peabody. A line might be drawn from Fulton's Corner to the Reading railroad, or even to the old Boston road, which would make a very good division. Unless the town is divided it will soon need a city charter. Half a dozen town meetings a year scarcely suffice to do the business. Some of these are held in the evening, because many of the voters cannot afford to lose the day, and as a result the greater part of the town business is done by a minority, often a very small minority, of the voters.—Salem Cor. Boston Herald.

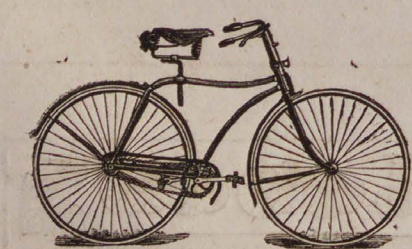

A desirable Location—I say, said the investor, you advertise your farm as a fine location for a dairy. It hasn't a single feature to recommend it for that purpose. Haint it? There is a tremendous chalk deposit just beyond that hill over there.

He knew what he wanted—News-paper clerk: Your advertisement reads: Wanted, a little girl to mind a baby. Don't you think it would sound better if it read like this: Wanted, a little girl to care for a baby? Advertiser—No. Mind is the correct word. You don't know that baby.

Shipping and business income are not taxable to a firm, but each resident partner must include these items in his individual return.

Mortgaged Real Estate.

"Any mortgagee, or assignee of a mortgage of real estate may bring in to the assessors of the town or city where such real estate lies," within the time specified in this notice, "a statement, under oath, of the amount of each separate lot or parcel of such real estate, and the name and residence of every holder of an interest therein as a mortgagee or mortgagor. When such property is situated in a city or town, or when a recorded mortgage includes for one sum two or more estates or parts of an estate, an estimate of the amount of the mortgagee's interest in each estate or part of an estate shall be given in such statement." (Chap. 175 of the Acts of 1882.) When a statement in conformity with the law above quoted is brought in, the real estate therein returned will be assessed under sections 14, 15 and 16, of chapter 11 of the Public Statutes. But in cases where the mortgagor of the real estate has agreed in writing to pay all taxes assessed thereon, no statement or return is required from either mortgagor or mortgagor, unless requested by the assessors in writing.

Estates in Trust.

Persons holding estates in trust, whether for minors or otherwise, are particularly requested to furnish the assessors with statements in relation to such estates. When trust estates, or estates of persons deceased, have been divided during the past year, or have changed hands from other causes, the trustee, executor or administrator, or other person interested, is required and warned to give notice of such change; and in default of such notice, will be held to pay the taxes assessed, although such estate has been wholly distributed and paid over.

Any person bringing in a list of all his taxable personal property will be assessed upon the valuation thereof, and any one neglecting to furnish the assessors with such list within the time above specified will be deemed to have consented to the valuation of his property, agreeably to the law of the Commonwealth. All persons will take notice that statements of personal property must be in writing, and submitted under oath before one of the Assessors, at their office, on or before the FIRST DAY OF JUNE, and that the personal property of all taxable persons must be estimated by the Board of Assessors. (Pub. Stat., chap. 11, sec. 39 and 41.) When a person has failed to bring in a list or schedule of all his taxable personal property in conformity with this notice, no abatement of his estate will be made upon appeal, for personal property can be granted, "unless such tax exceeds by more than fifty per cent. the amount which would have been assessed to that person on his estate, if he had seasonably brought in said list; and if said tax exceeds by more than fifty per cent. the said amount, the abatement shall be only of the excess above the said fifty per cent." (Pub. Stat., Chap. 11, Sec. 73.)

Any person taxable in Peabody for personal property can obtain a BLANK SCHEDULE for making a list of such property, with directions for properly filling the same, by applying at the assessors' office.

Literary, Benevolent, Charitable and Scientific Corporations.

The attention of the officers of all Literary, Benevolent, Charitable and Scientific Corporations, located in Peabody, is particularly called to the requirements of Chapter 217 of the Acts of 1882 as the property of said corporations, both personal and real, will be subject to taxation unless the law is complied with. Blank forms for the purpose can be had at the office of the assessors.

TOWN OF PEABODY.

BOARD OF HEALTH REGULATIONS.

The Board shall make such regulations as it judges necessary for the public health and safety. Whoever violates any such regulation shall forfeit a sum not exceeding one hundred dollars. (Extract from the Public Statutes Chap. 80, § 18.)

REGULATION 1ST. It being the duty of the Board of Health of the Town of Peabody, to make such examination of the premises of persons residing in said town as they shall deem necessary for the public welfare, the Board hereby give notice and require that all premises within said limits shall be ready for inspection by the Board on and after May 20th, 1891.

REGULATION 2D. No house, outhouse, filthy water, dead animals or refuse of any kind, shall be thrown upon the streets by any resident, and no butcher, fish monger or vendor of merchandise, shall leave any refuse upon the streets of this town.

REGULATION 3D. If, upon inspection, any rubbish, offal, decaying animal or vegetable matter, or filth of any kind be found in, under or about any building, within any yard or enclosure, upon any premises, or in the ponds or water courses of said Town of Peabody, or if any privy or drain be found so discharging as to prove a nuisance, and offensive or deleterious to the public health, the owner or occupant of such property or premises shall be notified by the Board to remove or abate such nuisance within twenty-four hours after said notice has been served.

REGULATION 4TH. If any owner or occupant of property as aforesaid, after having been duly notified, shall neglect to comply with the requirements of the above section, the Board of Health shall cause any and all nuisances to be removed or abated at the expense of the owner or occupants.

REGULATION 5TH. On and after June 1st 1891, swine shall not be kept within the following limits in this town, except by permit from the Board of Health:—Commencing at the boundary stone east of Holly street and running on the Southernly side of Margie street seven hundred feet; thence Northwesterly in a straight line to Liberty, five hundred feet Northwesterly of Mr. Simon P. Buxton's residence; thence Westerly in a straight line to Andover street bridge; from the bridge Southwesterly in a straight line to Swampscott avenue; through Swampscott to Strongwater brook; thence Easterly in a straight line to the Eastern end of Clement avenue and the Salem line; thence by the Salem line to Willow, Shillaber, Aborn, Main, Grove, Walnut, Mt. Vernon, Tremont and Highland streets to the boundary stone begun at. No goats shall be kept within the limits of this Town, except in pastures, or in enclosures.

REGULATION 6TH. No public funeral shall be held over the remains of any person having died of SMALL POX, SCARLET FEVER, DIPHTHERIA, TYPHOID FEVER or MEMBRANOUS CROUP, without the written permit of the Board of Health, under such regulations as may prevent the spread of either of such diseases.

REGULATION 7TH. The remains of any person dying of either of said diseases shall be placed in a tight or sealed coffin, and shall not thereafter be exposed to view or disturbance for burial, and no undertaker or other person shall be permitted to take to any house, or use any bier or stand with draperies, which is to be used at any funeral.

REGULATION 8TH. No owner, driver or any other person having charge of any hackney carriage or other vehicle used as a public conveyance, shall convey in or upon said

carriage or other vehicle, any person sick or infected with the Small Pox, Scarlet Fever, Diphtheria, or other contagious disease, or the body of any person who has died of any contagious disease, without the written permit of the Board of Health, to be given under such regulations as may prevent the spread of such disease, and every vehicle which shall be so used shall be immediately disinfected under the supervision of the Board of Health, and before any other person shall be conveyed in or upon it. This regulation is intended to cover all cases where persons are conveyed from funerals at houses where any one has died of any contagious disease.

REGULATION 9TH. It shall be the duty of occupants of dwellings in which any person or persons may be sick with SMALL POX, DIPHTHERIA, SCARLET FEVER, TYPHOID FEVER or MEMBRANOUS CROUP, and Physicians attending such cases forthwith to notify the Board of Health of the fact.

REGULATION 10TH. The occupants of buildings or dwellings where Small Pox exists, or has existed, shall prohibit and prevent the removal of clothes, bedding and upholstery, or other articles, from the infected buildings, except the removal is made by permission, or under direction of the Board of Health.

REGULATION 11TH. The occupants of buildings or dwellings where Small Pox and Diphtheria exist, shall withdraw all children attending school, from the same, and the teachers of said schools shall NOT allow their children thus withdrawn to re-enter the school until they shall present a certificate from the attending Physician vouching for the safety thereof.

REGULATION 12TH. Night soil carts shall not be allowed to pass through the streets in the thickly settled portions of the town between sunrise and sunset, from June 1st to Nov. 1st, without a special permit from the Board of Health.

REGULATION 13TH. Any person in the town of Peabody who knows or suspects any domestic animal has contagious disease, such as glanders in horses or cholera in swine, must report the same to the Board of Health. The penalty for neglect to do so is fine or imprisonment.

The above is in accordance with the provisions of Chapter 252 of the Acts of 1887.

The Board earnestly requests the co-operation of every individual, in securing the desirable sanitary condition, and promote which the foregoing regulations are framed. WM. S. OSBORNE, Chairman, Board GEO. M. FROST, M. D., THOS. J. RELIHAN, Clerk, } Health.

*Section 1, chap. 98 of the laws of 1884. When a household knows that a person within his family is sick of small pox, diphtheria, scarlet fever or any other disease dangerous to the public health, he shall immediately give notice thereof to the selectmen or board of health of the town in which he dwells, and upon the death, recovery or removal of such persons, the rooms occupied and the articles used by him shall be disinfected by such household in a manner approved by the board of health. Any person neglecting or refusing to comply with either of the above provisions shall forfeit a sum not exceeding one hundred dollars.

LITERARY NOTES.

Professor Totten, of Yale University, in an editorial contribution to Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper this week, predicts that the Millennium will arrive early in 1899. The visit of the Massachusetts Sixth Regiment to Baltimore; the coke strike in Pennsylvania; Von Moltke's death and scenes in his career; breaking ground for the Grant Monument; the laboratory of Edison, the electric magician, and the President's visit to the Pacific, are all subjects of profuse illustration. Leslie's is printed in English and German. Price ten cents. Get it of your newsdealer.

"The Three Fates" (Initial Chapters) F. Marion Crawford's new novel is the great feature of the May number of the Home-Maker. The story is of a young journalist, and the scenes are laid in New York. The studies are realistic, and the gradual development of character intensely interesting. It is all the better for being purely American and dealing with the practical life and questions of to-day.

It gives me pleasure to certify that Lieutenant Buswick of the Central Police District used Salvation Oil on a rheumatic arm. A few applications relieved him and wrought a permanent cure. Salvation Oil if called in will verify this statement. Serg't H. A. Ryan, Central Police Station Balto., Md.

Previous to her recent lecture, a great many people believed that Anna Dickinson was confined in an insane asylum without cause.

You have given me only a quarter, sir! complained the waiter. That's right, replied Snoops, cheerfully; I never do anything by halves.

Make the ladder of some dark green stuff, And let it down from the tower on which you stand. So as to mangle as much as possible with the ivy; I will bring a good horse hither, And bear you away by night.

Then a bright thought struck Madeleine. She tore a leaf from her pocket-book and scribbled on it in pencil:

"Lose no time, for the prince may return at any moment, and this day fortnight I am to die. I will begin to make the ladder to-night. Heaven bless you!"

Wrapping a silver florin in the paper she threw it to the pretended minstrel, who bowed again as if acknowledging the gift, and slinging his guitar over his shoulders vanished like a ghost into the fast falling darkness of night. In all this the servants, ignorant as they were of French, saw nothing the least suspicious. A passing minstrel had sung a good song and their mistress had paid him for it—that was all.

There was no sleep for poor Madeleine that night. The excitement of discovering that her dead lover was still alive and actually within reach of her would alone have sufficed to fever every drop of her blood; but even this was completely swallowed up by the tremendous and almost insupportable agitation of this unexpected chance of life just when death seemed certain.

Unable to sleep or even to remain still for a moment, the excited girl snatched eagerly at the timely occupation afforded to her by the necessity of preparing the materials for her rope ladder.

Among the countless cords and hangings of various colors that abounded on every side it was easy for her to supply herself with an ample stock of the "dark green stuff" recommended by De Mortemart, and she began her work at once.

This was by far the best thing that she could have done. The steady employment quieted her overstrained nerves, and her spirits rose with the thought that she was herself doing something to aid her own liberation. She wisely decided to give her ladder the simplest possible form, by knotting at intervals into the long rope that she was making small cross pieces of wood, to serve as rests for her hands and feet. With these she supplied herself from the spokes of an old fashioned bedstead in the next room to her own, and during the long hours of that sleepless night the work went rapidly on.

The next day it went on more rapidly still and was half finished by nightfall; but how could she find out what length it ought to be?

A thought struck her. Sitting on the summit of the Pit tower, over a piece of embroidery which she had lately commenced, she contrived to let one of her balls of silk roll as if by accident (for a keen eye was watching her from a neighboring turret) over the edge of the battlement. Running out its whole length as it fell, while she held the other end, it reached to within two or three feet of the ground, and thus she got the exact measure.

By noon the next day the work was done, and in the afternoon Princess Madeleine went for a ride over the hills, attended as usual by two of the jailers who called themselves her servants. She was three or four miles from the castle, and had just pulled up her horse after a smart canter, when a tattered old white bearded beggar hobbled up to her with a whining petition for alms. But as his eyes met hers they darted at her a keen, warning glance, and he whispered in the voice of Henri de Mortemart:

"Is the ladder finished?" Repressing by a violent effort the start that would have betrayed her, Madeleine answered "Yes," while throwing a small silver coin into his outstretched hand.

"Be ready then at nightfall on the third evening hence, when you shall hear my guitar in the thickets," said the seeming beggar, in a tone audible only to her, and with a clumsy gesture of thanks he turned and limped away down the path.

That night Madeleine, having listened long and warily for any sound of movement in the silent case, made up her rope ladder into a bundle, in order to carry it to the Pit tower. But to her indescribable dismay she found it so heavy that she could hardly raise it from the ground, much less carry it up the steep, high stair of the tower.

But the brave girl was not easily checked with life and freedom before her. She dragged the rope ladder after her along the passage and up the winding stair, reaching the top of the tower so utterly exhausted that she was forced to sit down and gasp for breath. But the moment her strength began to return she was at work again, knotting the end of her ladder to a broken iron stanchion which had once served to secure a flagstaff, and then she began to let it down, coil after coil, between two great masses of ivy, the deep shadow of which would even in the day time make it quite invisible from below.

With all her care, it made a rustling among the leaves which sounded terribly loud amid that tomb like silence. Had any one heard it? She listened, firmly resolved that if detected now she would fling herself headlong from the tower, rather than see her last hope of liberty melt away. But all was still, and with the slow, mechanical step of a sleep walker she descended the perilous stair.

But now that all was done, and nothing left for her but to wait, the slow torture became all but unendurable. The nearer the time of her deliverance came the more impossible it appeared. The rope ladder would be discovered; Henri would be delayed by some accident; Keretsenyi would return before the time, or would perhaps surprise them in the very act of escaping, and wreak upon them both the full fury of that hellish vengeance of which she had already seen so many fearful proofs. Would the last evening never come?

It came at last—chill, dreary, dark, with coming storm, and as the red glare of the angry sunset faded amid the gathering of clouds that blackened overhead, Madeleine, watching it from the summit of the fatal tower felt as if the light of her own life were going out along with it. Over earth and sky brooded a grim, unnatural silence, broken only by a hurrying hoof tramp far away among the hills, as if some belated traveler were in haste to reach his home ere the storm burst.

Hark! was that a faint sound of music from the black shadowy thickets below?

She held her breath to listen, and suddenly it came again, and this time her quick ear caught, too plainly to be mistaken, the notes of her favorite song. Her rescuer was there!

But just then, as she bent down to secure as best she could the trap door that opened from the stair on to the platform of the Pit tower before hazarding the fearful descent, the approaching hoof tramp, which had been growing louder and nearer with every moment, came ringing and clattering into the courtyard below, and then Keretsenyi's terrible voice was heard shouting to his servants in tones of thunder:

"Keep below, and whatever you may see or hear do not stir a foot, or you are all dead men!"

Now or never! Spurred to new action by the imminence of her peril Madeleine sprang to the edge of the battlement and prepared to descend. But hardly had she got one foot over the coping stone when the trap door, which she had closed behind her, was burst open with a tremendous crash and Keretsenyi, with his dark features all ablaze with fierce excitement and his eyes flaming like live coals, came bounding on to the platform.

"Traitors!" shouted he in a voice of thunder, as he stamped furiously upon the moldering pavement, "would you betray me too? But you shall not escape so easily. The hour is come, and this night one of us two must die!"

Those savage words were his last. Before the furious stamping of his mighty foot the crumbling stones gave way—a black and frightful chasm yawned suddenly beneath his very feet with a terrific crash—and he was gone!

No cry came up from the blackness of that awful gulf, but far down in its gloomy depths was heard a dull, muffled reverberation, like the sound of a heavy body being dashed from ledge to ledge of a seemingly bottomless abyss, and then all was still. The last of the ancient race of Keretsenyi had indeed gone down alive into the grave, and the ghastly prophecy was fulfilled.

What followed, Madeleine could never have told. The horror of this crowning tragedy was so great and overwhelming that it seemed to benumb every sense and thought, and the next thing of which she was clearly conscious was finding herself—she knew not how—outside the castle, and standing upon a small patch of open ground about a bow-shot from its gate, while Henri de Mortemart, supporting her with one hand, held a horse by the bridle with the other.

"Mount quickly behind me, for heaven's sake," said he through his clinched teeth, as he helped her up, "or we are lost!"

And away they went like an arrow from a bow, just as a bustle and a glancing to and fro of lights within the gloomy building told that its inmates had taken the alarm.

By daybreak they were many a mile away from the terrible castle, which was destroyed by fire only a few days later—a fit end, indeed, for that den of horror and death.

Madeline returned to her native land in safety, and as the jewels which she brought back with her sufficed to redeem the greater part of her father's lost estate the old gentleman was very well pleased with the whole affair, and always looked back upon it and upon his own cleverness in bringing it about with unmingled satisfaction. But although he never lost a chance of talking about "my late son-in-law, Prince Keretsenyi," he had the sense to make no opposition to his daughter, at the end of her first year of widowhood, became Mme. de Mortemart.

When the story of the "Bluebeard chamber" in Janos castle got abroad many people openly expressed their disbelief in it, declaring that Madeleine must have been out of her mind with terror at that time, or else that the supposed heads were nothing worse than wax models placed there by the crazy prince to humor his own strange monomania. But Madeleine herself firmly believed, and believes still, that these ghastly relics were genuine, and that it was only the courage and devotion of her second husband which saved her from figuring as "Sample No. 4" in the grim museum of her first.

THE END.

Senses Go to Sleep in Definite Order.

According to the best writers on the subject, it has been ascertained that in beginning to sleep the senses do not untidily fall into a state of slumber, but drop off one after the other. The sight ceases, in consequence of the protection of the eyelids, to receive impressions first, while all the other senses preserve their sensibility entire. The sense of taste is the next which loses its susceptibility to impressions, and then the sense of smelling.

The hearing is next in order, and last of all comes the sense of touch. Furthermore, the senses are thought to sleep with different degrees of profoundness. The sense of touch sleeps the most lightly and is the most easily awakened; the next easiest is the hearing; the next is the sight, and the taste and smelling awake the last.

Another remarkable circumstance deserves notice; certain muscles and parts of the body begin to sleep before others. Sleep commences at the extremities, beginning with the feet and legs, and creeping toward the center of nervous action. The necessity for keeping the feet warm and perfectly still as a preliminary of sleep is well known. From these explanations it will not appear surprising that, with one or more of the senses, and perhaps also one or more parts of the body, imperfectly asleep, there should be at the same time an imperfect kind of mental action, which produces the phenomenon of dreaming.—Chambers' Miscellany.

RIDING A WHALE AT SEA

A SEA OTTER HUNTER'S HARD TRIP OFF THE PACIFIC COAST.

A Very Lucrative Business Spoiled by the Perverseness of a Stupid Bull Headed, Humpbacked Whale—An Incredible Story of Hard Luck.

In passing up Front street a reporter's attention was attracted to a singular appearing man who stood in front of a hide and fur store examining a very handsome sea otter skin which hung in the window. His hair was long, and his face covered with a full growth of beard of a rich auburn hue, which hung down on his breast. His clothing was of strange make and material, and his tout ensemble was calculated to give one an idea that "the wild man of Borneo had just come to town." The reporter approached the window, and after pausing a moment said:

"That is a very handsome skin!"

"Yes," said the stranger, "it is very fine. There is nothing that produces better fur than the sea otter. I have shot many of them."

"Might I ask where?" said the reporter. "The sea otter is a rare animal now."

"I suppose they are about all killed off by this time on this coast," said the stranger. "It was ten years ago when I was shooting them on the coast of Washington territory, and they were not very numerous then, but in the course of two years I had killed over fifty, besides a good many fur seals, and had saved up over $5,000 in cash, when I was suddenly broke up in business and taken to a strange country by a very singular accident."

TRY DANA'S SARSAPARILLA!

Prof. Elihu Thompson, of the Thompson—Houston Company, in an address before a conclave of electricians recently, said that the motor of the future was not possessed by him, or any other company, at present. A pretty sweeping confession for a man in his position.

A man who has practiced medicine for 40 years, ought to know salt from sugar; read what he says:

TOLEDO, O., Jan. 10, 1887.

Messrs. F. J. Cheney & Co.—Gentlemen:—I have been in the general practice of medicine for most 40 years, and would say that in all my practice and experience have never seen a preparation that I could prescribe with as much confidence of success as I can Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by you. Have prescribed it a great many times and its effect is wonderful, and would say in conclusion that I have yet to find a case of Catarrh that it would not cure, if they would take it according to directions.

Yours truly,

Local Advertising.

No man has ever made a complete success in business without advertising. As to the multifarious methods none can compare with the newspaper. The largest advertisers in the world have learned this lesson after expending thousands of dollars in every known method. It is the smaller merchants who look upon quantity and size, rather than quality and style. They do not believe with Wanamaker that a local paper with 500 circulation is worth more than 10,000 handbills, to say nothing of the saving in price.

Local newspapers are the only reliable mediums for local advertisers, and it is surprising that this truth is not more generally realized by those who have the most to profit by it. A handbill or "flyer" carries no weight with the masses. They bear the stamp of cheapness, without a redeeming feature—a relic of antiquity, which has been discarded by the wisest advertisers. And yet the smaller country merchants, deny this truth. They willingly pay $10 for a few thousand handbills, but tremble when their local papers solicit a column "ad," at $2 per week. Do they ever realize that the success of their town depends largely upon aggressive local papers? A town that is able and does not harbor journalism is unfit to bid for new enterprises. Men of money are not all fools, and cannot be drawn to a large place that is backward in its support of home enterprise, and what else is the local paper?

If I could reach every country merchant I would gladly show him the reports of hundreds of active agents for one of the leading specialties in America. I would show the opinions expressed on paper of the relative value of circular and local newspaper advertising, and the almost unanimous opinion that the former has but little value. And yet this same specialty requires an annual edition of 100,000 catalogues at an expense of more than $6,000, to say nothing of primers, circulars and leaflets.

To make a national reputation for this specialty, the manufacturers will expend at least $40,000 to $50,000 yearly in advertising—largely through national mediums, such as Century, Scribner's, Harper's and other publications. To sell it, local agents will employ the local newspaper almost exclusively. Why? Because they have been found to yield the greatest returns for the money expended.

It is useless to say that the majority of local papers have limited circulation. The price is generally in keeping with numbers and influence. If not, then who is to blame? Is it the publisher, or the merchants who willingly take five dollar spaces in worthless schemes, but are careful that the village publisher don't "cheat" them with a "false statement" of circulation?

The local paper is an index to the prosperity and future of the town in which it published. The people can make it an unqualified success or not, just as they choose. I have a mild contempt for the man who expects it to preach law, order, morality and temperance, but is too negligently to come forward with his "ad," or subscription. G. H. POWELL.

STARTLING FACTS.

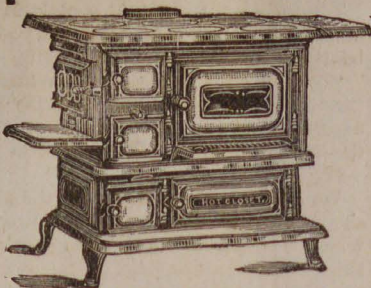

The American people are rapidly becoming a race of nervous wrecks, and the following suggests the best remedy: Alphonso Hempling, of Butler, Pa., swears that when his son was speechless from St. Vitus dance Dr. Miles' great Restorative Nerve cured him. Mrs. J. R. Miller, of Valparaiso, and J. D. Taylor, of Logansport, Ind., each gained 20 pounds from taking it. Mrs. H. A. Gardner, of Vistula, Ind., was cured of 40 to 50 convulsions a day, and much headache, dizziness, backache and nervous prostration by one bottle. Trial bottles and fine book of marvelous cures, free at Wm. T. Lee's who recommends and guarantees this unequalled remedy.

As to people saying a few idle words about us, we must not mind that, any more than the old church-steeple minds the rooks cawing about it.

Gents: For over ten years I was terribly afflicted with humor, pronounced by eminent physicians Tetter or Salt Rheum.

At times my head was so bad that I had no hair upon it. The entire scalp became a running sore, and the surface would crack open and bleed.

I used ointments, washes, etc., and took medicine prescribed by the best physicians in the city, but got no permanent relief.

I had sold hundreds of bottles of DANA'S SARSAPARILLA, but never thought of trying it myself, until I heard so many of my customers telling how much benefit they had derived from its use.

About a year and a half ago I commenced to take DANA'S, and in three months my head was WELL, AND THE CURE HAS PROVED PERMANENT.

Yours with respect,
H. E. BRADMAN.

Work of Lightning.

During the shower this morning, lightning struck the trolley wire of the Essex Electric line, on Buffum street, and the 630 cars were stalled. The car from Salem, which had a load of working people on board, was stalled at the turnout on Buffum street and was obliged to transfer her load to the 7 o'clock car when it came up. The down car was tied up on Balcomb street, in sight of the switch, and was dwn on the turnout by the horses of the 7 o'clock car. The damage was a pure accident, for which no one is to blame. It is liable to befall any road in a thunder shower.

Death of James O. Whitten, One of Peabody's Former Tradesmen.

James O. Whitten, formerly of this town, and for several years a prominent and highly esteemed business man of Cambridge, died Tuesday morning at 9 o'clock, at his home, No. 132 Magazine street, Cambridgeport. His death was unexpected, as he was in his usual good health up to Sunday, when he was taken down with an attack of La Grippe. He was born in Cavendish, Vt., and was 57 years of age. He settled in Cambridge in 1879, and established the Boston glue works in Allston, continuing the business successfully up to the time of his death. For a number of years he has been sole proprietor of a large livery stable on Green street, Cambridgeport, which was accounted the best in the city. He was also the president of the H. G. & H. W. Stevens Carriage Company, and was connected with several other business enterprises. He was a member of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, and also of the Cambridge Citizens' Trade Association. He was a prominent member of the New England Breeders' Association and owned Carrie T. with a record of 2:26 1-4. He was at one time part owner of the famous stallion Nelson. Mr. Whitten's death has occasioned heartfelt sorrow in Cambridge, where he had many friends who were greatly shocked at the news of his sudden demise. A widow and two married sons survive him. Before removing to Cambridge he conducted a flourishing and successful stove and plumbing business in this town which was started by him in company with Charles B. Haven at the stand now occupied by F. L. Sears.

An individual was rescued from a vat at Torr's tannery, one morning this week, by Robert G. Buxton. He was well dressed, in a shaggy black suit. The fellow is of New Foundland origin.

The Water Board has closed a contract with the Standard Thermometer Company for a Telemeter, for $400. The price agreed upon covers all expenses, including poles and wiring, to connect the instrument at the stand pipe with the pumping station. The successful working of the machine is guaranteed by the Thermometer Co.

P. F. Tierney sold sixteen lots on Shamrock street this week at an average of $100 each. The weather was damp and threatening and the sales were considered good under the circumstances.

John W. Holley & Co. have placed a new awning in front of their periodical store. It is supported on an iron frame fastened to the curbstone, and will furnish them with convenience for hanging up front.

The head electricians of the Edison equipment company visited Peabody this week and laid out the work for equipping the Naumkeag line from Central street to the Danvers line, at Pike & Whipple's.

If you intend to paper your rooms this spring, why not call on Merrill & Mackintire, 220 Essex street. They have an immense assortment of all grades and designs at prices below the range of competition.

At the gospel temperance meeting in Franklin Hall, to-morrow, at 6:45 P. M., Rev. G. A. Hall will repeat his sermon of last Sabbath, on "the necessity of choice," which was of special interest to young people.

The committee appointed at a town meeting to attend to the alterations and extension of the High School, held a meeting Thursday evening and voted to accept the plans prepared by W. D. Dennis and solicit bids for the work.

A large meeting of the British Americans was held at their hall Wednesday evening. Several out of town speakers were present, who talked upon the current political and social questions. Music also served to pass away the time.

5th Regiment, Mass. Veteran Association will hold its next annual reunion at Salem Willows, on Friday, June 26. This includes nine months and one hundred days men. Company C of this town was attached to the regiment during the Rebellion.

Immense forest fires have been raging in Clearfield and Elks counties, Pennsylvania, this week, by which over 50,000 cords of bark have been destroyed. The burned district is the locality from which nearly all the Pennsylvania bark used in Peabody comes.

Wm. Pickering, Jr. & Co. have put on a brand new double team exclusively for the accommodation of Peabody trade. The wagon carries over two tons and has a partition for separate orders. They are taking a great many orders in town through the agency of B. F. Stevens.

The Naumkeag Clothing Company of Salem are the only dealers in Essex county who manufacture their own clothing. The firm employ at their headquarters, 401 Washington street, Boston, between 30 and 40 cutters the year round and give employment to three thousand men and women.
The old Bodicott pear tree which was transplanted in 1628, presents a prolific and picturesque appearance. The tree is so far decayed that the inner portions are all gone, and the tree is split entirely two, but in spite of the dilapidated condition, the branches are covered with beautiful blooms.

A new and neatly painted sign has been placed on the corner of Allen's Block by A. H. Merrill, announcing his insurance business. He occupies the room vacated two years ago by the Telephone company, the entrance being through the wooden part of the building next to B. F. Stevens' store.

George H. Jacobs, the popular clothier, will open a store in East Pepperell, Mass., about the middle of next week. He already has two stores that are doing a large business, and with this new venture he will gain additional advantages in purchases which his customers will get the benefit of.

The S. S. S. Club and annex held their annual meeting and banquet at Miss Emma Winchester's residence on Central street, Thursday evening. The supper was served by McGrillis & Co., the Salem caterers, and was a fine spread. The party broke up at one o'clock. Music was indulged in during the evening.

A Willow street man went home drunk Saturday night and he frightened his wife so that she fled for her life to her mother's house, and locked the door behind her. Finding he could not get in the man commenced to stone the house. He smashed several squares of glass, broke a lamp in one of the rooms and just escaped striking his wife on the head with a stone. The police were finally sent for and the man was arrested and locked up. He was before the court Monday charged with drunkenness only.

MISS C. M. O'CONNOR,

236 Essex Street, Salem.

Leonard Farrington has a curiosity that would have been worthy of a place in a dime museum, had it lived. The freak is a four-legged chicken. The legs are all perfect, but the extra pair grew from the back. It lived but a few days, but appeared to enjoy life as well as the rest while it was around. He has it pickled.

On May 7, 1891, the contract for supplying the U. S. Army with baking powder was again awarded the Cleveland Baking Powder Co. The fact that the Government requisition calls for baking powder "equal in quality to Cleveland's" is a high tribute to the great merit of the powder. Cleveland's is the standard.

Mary S. Walker and Harriet S. Walker, both of Waltham, in consideration of $80,000 have given a quitclaim deed of the Danvers bleachery in this town to Grant Walker of Boston, Amy G. Iasigi of Stockbridge and Annie de Blonay of the republic of Switzerland. The deed was recorded Tuesday afternoon.

An elaborate and beautiful floral piece was sent by W. C. Munroe to the funeral of the late J. O. Whitten, Thursday. The device was in the form of a large tablet with a horseshoe of pansies in the centre, and a fringe of foliage; the field was of roses, pinks and other choice flowers. It was arranged by E. D. Hill.

The Selectmen at their session last Saturday afternoon appointed W. Fred Wiggins in place of George W. Jones as a member of the night police. Junk dealers' licenses were granted Daniel Rahilly and Michael V. McCarthy. B. F. Stevens was granted an intelligence office license, Peter Valente a quietaller's license and George E. Meacom a sixth class liquor license. The water board was given authority to string wires for a telemeter on any of the poles from the pumping station to Buxton's hill. Chairman Goulding was authorized to represent the town at the hearing to be given by the county commissioners, on the matter of the new Harmony grove road, June 10.

THE FARM AND GARDEN.

Use a steel rake now in the garden, kill small weeds, and save much subsequent hoeing.

The cheapest concentrated food is cotton-seed. For making beef or butter two bushels equal one bushel of corn.

A dairyman of long experience says that the highest profit goes with the heaviest feeding up to the point of safety.

Early Ohio and Hebron potatoes require very rich land in order to obtain satisfactory results. They will then bear very close planting.

Clover makes excellent silage when it is put up properly, but it requires careful handling and heavy weighting, or it is liable to spoil.

Sows which have farrowed should not be fed at once upon rich, heating or stimulating food; such, given in large quantities, are likely to do them much harm.

In damp or wet weather mow the lawn frequently and encourage the formation of a thick turf. In dry weather do not mow so often or so close, as the grass roots need more shelter then.

To carry the pigs through profitably, grass or clover must be depended upon as the principal food, using other materials, such as bran or chops, only as accessories when the pasture is short.

With a flock of sheep, a dairy or a lot of thrifty hogs to fall back upon, a farmer may endure storms, drouths and early frosts with more composure than he who had no live stock to supplement his cultivated crops.

Nuxvomica is a simple and excellent tonic for hens, serving to correct bowel diseases, colics and other disorders. It is easy to administer, as it is only necessary to put two drops to each quart of drinking water.

Shear sheep when the weather is warm and it seems likely to remain settled. If delayed too long the wool often begins to shed off; if clipped too soon, and then exposed to cold rains, the sheep are likely to take cold.

Butter dairymen can profitably buy calves of the best beef breeds and utilize their skim milk in feeding them. This would seem to be a better practice in dairying than to sell the entire product away from the farm, including the calves for "bob" veal.

Pay some attention to flowers about the house this spring, if you never have before. You need not go to much expense, and yet procure good results. Marigolds, for instance, are easily grown, and they flower from first to last, giving a profusion of bloom until freezing weather.

A pig that is stunted during the early days or weeks of its life should never have a place in the breeding herd. If used in the herd it may be expected that the offspring will inherit some of the unthriftiness caused in the parent by stunting.

In their desire to have the hay well cured, many farmers make the mistake of overdrying it or sunburning it in hot weather. It will be found that hay which has become too dry will not heat nor sweat in the stacks, as good hay should; it will not have the odor of good hay, and will not serve so well for feeding.

Education and progress are the watchwords of our agriculture. The man who watches the moon to plant, and believes in a method "because his father did so," does not stand much chance beside the one who practices "high farming," using modern implements.

In laying out the garden, run the rows north and south, if possible, and thus give the sun a chance to shine upon both sides of them. Have the rows close enough together so that by the middle of July the growth will completely hide the ground and keep it from drying out so rapidly.

We notice that the annual recommendation of the juneherry has cropped out in some of our exchanges. The writer has some thrifty bushes, which produce every year a quantity of this fruit. The berries are very handsome and attractive in appearance—and there the matter ends. They are insipid, and should not be given a place in the fruit garden if anything else—currants, gooseberries, blackberries, raspberries, etc.—can be procured. A single bush, however, might be tolerated as an ornamental plant.

During recent years large numbers of Percheron horses, mostly stallions, have been brought to this country, and through the Central Western States they are rapidly becoming the favorites of the farmers, and are displacing the heavier and more sluggish Clydesdales. Crossed upon the ordinary mares of this region, they prove more satisfactory than any other breed. As a farm horse the Percheron has the valuable qualities of quick and spirited movement, going fast with heavy loads; on the road or at the plow they are very rapid walkers.

More attention should be given to making the buttermilk a profitable factor of the dairy business. Wherever it can be had in sufficient quantities, and fresh, it is in good demand as a summer beverage. Physicians advocate its use, and as a therapeutic agent it is given to invalids when nothing else is allowed. It is also a powerful nerve tonic. For people inclined to dyspepsia it is better than sweet milk, because one of the difficulties of milk—its slowness of digestion—is removed at once, the buttermilk having already gone through one process of digestion. Near towns of any size a good buttermilk trade could easily be established, and as a "by-product" its sale would undoubtedly yield a better net profit than the sale of sweet milk.

In Australia three acres of pasture land to each head of sheep is the common allotment, and labor there is as high as in any country in the world; yet wool growing seems to be a very profitable industry there, and if it is so under such conditions it certainly should be profitable with us.

The old theory of hog raisers was that the greater the amount of flesh that could be concentrated in one carcass the greater would be the profit in producing it. Now we have pretty positive knowledge that we can grow four hogs so as to make a total of 1,000 pounds for less money than we could grow two to make the same weight.

The combination of "points" in a hog that are most likely to produce a good feeder—one that will carry his development with him and fatten at any age—is about as follows: Medium size, short legs, fine or medium bone, broad, straight back, medium length, good girl and smooth head. The day of the long legged and long nosed hog is passed.

The creamery system is to be recommended because it so largely reduces the drudgery of woman's work on the farm. Churning and managing the cream and butter are hard work, and demand a good deal of time when done properly. Creameries should be as plentiful as school houses, and private dairies confined to sparsely settled regions.

When this country shall become as densely populated as Belgium is now, a possibility that some statisticians say lies not very far in the future, we shall be compelled to adopt agricultural methods that will enable a man to rear his family and provide for them upon 10 acres of land, or less, instead of using 40 or 50 as we now ordinarily do.

Every farm should have its flock of poultry, but as a rule this flock should be small, and it should consist solely of the best breeds of fowls. There are comparatively few people who can handle with profit a flock of 100 fowls, and the major portion of the profits in this business is obtained by such as confine themselves to flocks of from 25 to 50.

Kerosene is a good cure for scabby legs in fowls, but it should never be applied unless diluted, as it is very irritating. One part of kerosene to four parts of lard makes an excellent ointment. Kerosene is also invaluable for use among perches, nests, etc., for destroying vermin. It may be applied by sprinkling about with a whisk broom.

The roller is a good implement to have on the farm, but it must be used with discretion. Land should be very dry if it is to be rolled heavily, and it is best to plant it very soon thereafter, for a heavy rain may cause the fine, closely compacted surface to run together. When in such condition ground will dry very slowly, and so you may be much delayed in planting.

This is the season of the year when we must remember that tillage is manure. It enables the atmosphere to penetrate deeply into the soil, carrying warmth and moisture with it, and giving opportunity for the air to exert important chemical effects by which plant food is developed from inert organic matter. Hence the importance of frequent and thorough cultivation.

In a well-built and properly managed creamery, with intelligent patrons behind it, better butter can be produced at less expense than in the private dairy, and it will bring a higher price in the market. It is better because made by experts, with all the improved apparatus. It is made with less expense, because one or two men will do the work that requires half a hundred in home dairies.

Unless fowls have a free range in the summer, it should not be neglected to provide them with an ample dust bath. Coal ashes are excellent for this purpose, but should be sifted quite fine. Wood ashes will not do unless kept in a dry place as they are too caustic. In damp weather the potash of the ashes will attract moisture and cause sores on the skin.

In France the wheat yield is kept up to an average of nearly 40 bushels per acre, while many yields of 50 bushels and more are procured. It is done by thorough cultivation and the use of fertilizers, bone-dust being largely employed.

If the farm will allow not now produce the crops that were once easily grown upon it, begin at once to apply the remedy. Restrict your acreage, cultivating half the land, or even less, and concentrate all your manure upon that portion. Soon the crops will be larger than you have been procuring from the whole, less expense will be incurred, and the portion that is unused will improve by the rest given it.

That there is room for improvement in our dairy stock and methods may be seen from a recent report of the Agricultural Department upon this subject. This states that one and one-half million milk cows of the State of New York probably produce an average of less than 130 pounds of butter per year, and this is in face of the fact that whole herds have been brought up to an average of 300 pounds. This leaves too wide a margin between what is and what might be.

There is in progress in this country a marked readjustment of the lines of agricultural immigration. The settlement of the farms in the West went ahead of the building of the towns. Now the failure of crops in Western Kansas, and other causes, are turning the homeseekers toward new fields. Many are going South, where the recent growth of the towns has much exceeded that of the country, while some even are turning back to the deserted and once despised hills of farms on New England.

The College farm at Fort Collins, Colorado, has become notable for some of the great yields of grain that have been made there. The land was a few years ago only a swamp, where nothing grew but rushes, cat-tails and weeds. It has been ditched and underdrained, and has become highly productive. Many farms contain similar pieces of land which are neglected and allowed to remain wild year after year, when, if once cleared up, they would prove to make the most profitable fields, soon repaying their extra cost.

A FATAL MISTAKE. Physicians make no more fatal mistake than when they inform patients that nervous heart troubles come from the stomach and are of little consequence. Dr. Franklin Miles, the noted Indiana specialist, has proven the contrary in his new book on "Heart Disease" which may be had free at Wm. T. Lee's who guarantees and recommends Dr. Miles' unequalled New Heart Cure, which has the largest sale of any heart remedy in the world. It cures nervous and organic heart disease, short breath, fluttering, pain or tenderness in the side, arm or shoulder, irregular pulse, fainting, smothering, drowsy, etc. His Restorative Nerve cures headache, fits, etc.

America's Greatest Composer. The name of Prof. John K. Paine has not been seen for a long time upon the concert programs of this city. No one of his orchestral works has been played at the Symphony concerts in Music Hall since the departure of Mr. Gericke. And yet there is no doubt that today Professor Paine stands easily at the head of American composers. There are many young composers of talent in this country, there is one at least in this city, who has positive marks of musical genius, but no one in the United States has as yet attained the self-control, the discriminating taste, the purity of thought and logic of development shown in the ripe works of this highly endowed man. The neglect and indifference of those high in authority, and the carelessness of concert-goers, as regards the compositions of Professor Paine, are a commentary upon the real condition of music in this city, and it seems as though its cultivation is fictitious, a thing of fashion, an ever changing mode.—Boston Home Journal.

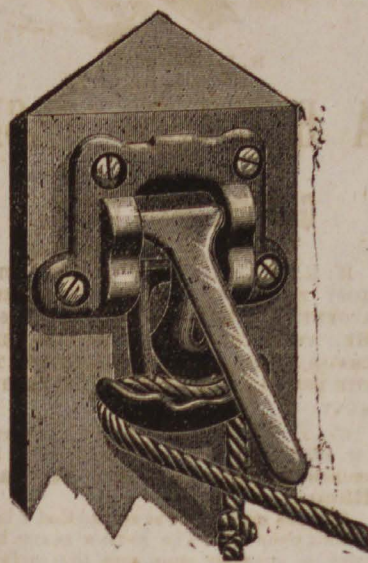

The Van Bulow Museum. The friends of the great pianist presented to him on his sixtieth birthday the sum of 10,000 marks, which are to be devoted as follows: 2,500 to a facsimile reproduction of Handel's manuscript of the "Messiah;" the rest to form a collection of musical instruments for the museum of Art and Industry, especially of instruments when about the year 1700 the manufacture of instruments in Hamburg was flourishing to such an extent that they equalled the productions of the most eminent Italian masters. The object of the collection is not antiquarian; it is to assemble instruments which illustrate the musical practice of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, which still survive the modern use.—Musical Record.

SATURDAY, MAY 16, 1891.

THE REPORT of the special legislative committee on the Congressional redistricting is not likely to give general satisfaction to this town, if the lines of the Fifth District are established as recommended in the report. It looks as if the committee either had a grudge against some of the towns to be included, or were terribly deficient in knowledge of the geography of the state. It is said, however, that the committee have endeavored to make the distribution as unpartisan as possible. This may account for the disjointed appearance of the proposed district.

We shall regret to lose our present representative, Gen. Cogswell, which must result from being separated from our neighboring city of Salem.

The following is the proposed composition of the new Fifth District: Peabody, North Andover, Methuen, Lynnfield, Andover and Lawrence in this county, and Lowell, Woburn, Dracut, North Reading, Reading, Tewksbury and Wilmington in Middlesex.

SEVERAL TIMES we have referred to the necessity for a Board of Trade to look after the business interests of this town, and it seems to us that such an organization is the one thing needed to accomplish the desired object of inducing capitalists to locate among us some new industries that will give Peabody a revival of that hum and thrift enjoyed in former years.

What has Peabody to offer the manufacturer that is not possessed by other towns?

She has almost everything that can be desired. She has all the advantages usually possessed by much larger communities, without the concomitant disadvantages. Steam and street railroad facilities are as good or better than those possessed by a very large percentage of the manufacturing centres of Massachusetts or any other state. The water supply is ample and in every way satisfactory. Mails are frequent, and communications with all parts of the outside world particularly good. Freight and light express service are all that can be desired. Insurance rates compare favorably with those of other manufacturing cities and towns. Land is available at moderate prices, both for factory and dwelling purposes. Banking accommodations are ample. Drainage for manufacturing purposes is good. We have no difficulties in the way of lighting at moderate rates, either by gas or electricity. Rents are low, and taxes are not excessive.

All of these accommodations are naturally ranked among the essentials of a manufacturing city or town.

Let us consider first the railroad facilities, those being of paramount importance to all manufacturers.

Peabody is located upon the Boston & Maine Railroad, 16 miles from Boston. Over the Western Division, five passenger trains are run daily each way. Over the Eastern Division, via Salem and Lynn, we have a passenger service of fifteen trains to Boston, and thirteen trains from Boston daily, including a train at 11.20 o'clock at night, affording passage for those who desire to attend theatres, lectures or meetings in the city, as well as belated travellers returning from a distance. A perusal of the railroad time table on the third page will show how complete are communications with Lowell, Lawrence and the points to the northward in New Hampshire, Vermont and the Canadas, as also the superior service to Salem, where direct connections can be made with all the stations to the eastward, including Portsmouth, Portland, Bangor and cities of the Provinces, and we may here state that equally good connections are made by way of the Western Division, or Salem and Lawrence Railroad with the cities and towns North, East and West. Freight service over so many railroads connecting as these do with the great interlocking system of freight lines that cover the North American continent, can be seen at a glance, must be of the best quality, and as to the rates, Peabody stands upon an equal footing with Boston. All freight is shipped to and from Peabody, North, East and West upon precisely the same schedule as to and from Boston.

For street railway service, Peabody is accommodated by three companies, the Essex Electric, Naumkeag and the Lynn & Boston, the two latter being immense systems directly connecting this town not only with Salem, Lynn, Danvers, Beverly, Wenham and Marblehead, but by their various connections, uniting us with towns and cities even beyond Boston.

Our water supply is a subject, too, that deserves special mention. The water used is taken from Spring and Brown's ponds, a supply that is inexhaustible, and of a degree of purity rarely equalled. It is especially adapted to manufacturing purposes and has no deleterious effects upon steam boilers, being free from alkalies, as chemical analysis has clearly demonstrated. About thirty miles of street mains give circulation to the water, which has a head of 180 feet, or an average service pressure of about 70 pounds, and two hundred hydrants afford excellent protection from fire; supplemented by the Gamewell Automatic Fire Alarm system, which has twenty-two boxes located in various parts of the town, and a Fire Department that is second to none in the State, of similar organization. Our Fire Department has always been a subject of local pride, and no pains or expense have been spared to maintain the department and keep abreast the times in improvements of equipment. Men are kept at the Central Station day and night, in readiness to answer alarms, and long service and repeated experiences have demonstrated their promptness and efficiency.

As a place of residence Peabody also offers many attractions. Our principal village is compact, without being crowded. Streets are well kept and of easy grade. Sanitary conditions are good and the death rate low. To seekers of pleasure our situation affords ample facilities for gratification, in her easy connection with Salem and Boston. To the lover of literature exceptional advantages are offered. The Peabody Library, founded in 1857 by the great philanthropist for whom the town was named, with its auxiliary, the Eben Dale Sutton Reference Library, is a perfect mine of literature and comprises every variety of works that can be desired by general readers, students of art or science or those having occasional need to consult rare volumes for special purposes. The total number of books catalogued for circulation on the first of February of the current year was 29,471, while on the shelves of the reference library are thousands of volumes, many of which are not to be found even in the reference libraries of the largest cities. Travellers from all parts of the world have been pleased to come to this repository for the treasures of literature and art, and impressions carried away have formed the most interesting recollections. The expressions of strangers always manifest surprise at the completeness and perfection of the collections. The free lectures, too, which form a part of the scheme of beneficence, are a source of pleasure and instruction to all classes of citizens.

Two well-governed National Banks, centrally located, furnish the town with complete financial facilities for business purposes, and an old and reliable Savings Bank and a flourishing Co-operative Bank afford easy means of investment for all.

Retail stores thrive in goodly numbers, while in our neighboring city of Salem can be found emporiums of retail trade that are not excelled outside the metropolitan centres. With all of these advantages, we believe the town must impress favorably anyone looking for a location, who will take the trouble to visit us.

ESSEX COUNTY.

Mayor Fogg of Lynn has requested the city solicitor and city clerk to proceed against the owners of property abutting on Washington street extension, for betterment. The Mayor says 50 per cent of the city's outlay can be recovered provided it does not exceed a certain proportion of the value of the adjoining property.

A volunteer fire company has been formed in Lynnfield Centre and the following officers elected: Foreman, F. J. D. Barnum; First Assistant Foreman, B. T. Brown; Second Assistant Foreman, G. F. Griffin; Secretary and Treasurer, James H. Meade; Steward, H. Coates. They have been presented a lot of land facing the Common, in the centre of the town, by Judge S. G. Nash, as a site for the engine house, and the company was named S. G. Nash Engine Company No. 1. The engine and hose carriage have been given by Messrs. Barnum Brothers.

The Lynn Hospital has received the sum of $1000 and the Associated Charities $500 from the estate of the late Julia Ireson.

Henry Plympton formerly Clerk of the Board of Health Lynn, pleaded not guilty to two counts of embezzlement, at the Superior Court in Newburyport last Monday.

George A. Andrews pleaded not guilty to the indictment charging him with burning his store in Essex.

day afternoon, of pneumonia, after an illness of but few hours. He had been prominently connected with town affairs, for many years. He celebrated his golden wedding a few months ago. His wife and two married daughters survive him. His age was 73 years. Col. Chase inspected Company H. 8th Regiment at Salem on Monday.

According to the census returns, Danvers insane asylum, which was established 1873, treated 4843 patients during the period between 1881 and 1889, an increase of 3303 over the decade that preceded. This institution leads the asylums of the state, Worcester Lunatic Hospital ranking second, where 3355 patients were treated during the period named.

The Salem Brass Band will run a bazar and entertainment at Armory Hall, Washington street, June 2-8. There will be dancing each evening. The fair will wind up with a grand ball Monday evening.

Dr. George B. Loring has returned to Salem.

John Millett, of Beverly, was attacked with dizziness, and fell from the step of a street car on Bridge street, near Conant, on Sunday afternoon. His head struck the sidewalk, and he received a bad scalp wound.

Arthur Chandler, in getting upon the forward platform of a Naumkeag car at the corner of St. Peter and Essex streets, Saturday night, received a severe blow in the face from the brake handle. Mr. Chandler was badly bruised. He lives in Hamilton.

Lillian S. Perkins, of Essex, has attached the estate of Lyndon J. Story, a Boston merchant residing in Essex, for $10,000 in action of contract stated to be a suit for breach of promise of marriage.

A letter was received at Gloucester on Monday from Capt. Bushee of the schooner Mist, at Dyrefjord, Iceland, April 12, containing the first news from the Gloucester fishing fleet on that coast. The passage is reported a tedious one of 25 days, and large quantities of heavy ice were met with. The weather at the time of writing was stormy, and the land was covered with snow. The winter had been pleasant and there had been no suffering among the Icelanders. Fish were scarce, and the outlook unfavorable. A large number of French and English fishermen had arrived for the codfishing. Schooner Gatherer, of Gloucester, which has been taking cod on the coast of Norway last season, remaining there the past winter, had arrived at Iceland, and would fish for halibut.

The commissioners to determine the value of the trust school at Lawrence have been selected, and consist of Winthrop P. Dow of Exeter, N. H., Mr. Wiggins of Lowell and D. G. Walton of Wakefield. Lawrence and the county commissioners agreed upon Mr. Dow, the county commissioners chose Mr. Walton, and Lawrence Mr. Wiggins. The commissioners will sit as soon as the bill authorizing the transfer passes the legislature.

It is rumored in Salem that the Sisters of Notre Dame who have had charge of the parochial school at the Immaculate Conception church in the city for many years, are to be supplanted by another order, which teaches both boys and girls.

Probate Court.

Wills of the following persons were proved on Monday before Judge Harmon: John Dane of Lawrence; Hannah Downing of Methuen; William Sharrock of Lawrence. There were 3 administrations granted. Inventories of the following estates were filed: John W. Bell of Beverly, $10,980; Martha J. Curtis, Andover, $2463.09; John Dwyer of Salem, in trust for Walter Dwyer, $59,314.41; same in trust for Ellen T. Dwyer, $22,017.49; Mary Dwyer in trust for John W. Dwyer, $23,633.87; John Dwyer in trust for John W. Dwyer, $62,780.26; John G. Brown of Beverly, $5915; Eben Kimball of Ipswich, $15,239.23; Nicholas Naylor, No. Andover, $2872.10; J. NOTED AND QUOTED.

It will be interesting to observe the ultimate effect of the act of Parliament which virtually prohibits the sale of ether for drinking purposes in Ireland. A special committee of Parliament have reported that the sale has been already stopped at grocers' shops and that the sales of druggists have been much curtailed. An inspector who has made a special investigation in South Derry, county Tyrone, where the ether habit is most prevalent, asserts that a change for the better is noticeable, although Rev. Dr. Carter, rector of Corktown, is doubtful as to the permanent success of the restrictive legislation. The use of ether for drinking purposes seems very odd. A teaspoonful is sufficient to intoxicate, and even when adulterated, as it usually is when sold for drink, the quantity necessary for intoxication is very small compared with alcoholic stimulants. The effect of either is substantially like that of whiskey, but, being far more rapid in its action and not very disagreeable in its after effects, one can enjoy several genuine "drunks" in one day at a slight expense.—Springfield Republican.

If the Farmer's Alliance adopts President Polk's recommendation to turn loose 35,000 alliance lecturers upon the public, it is a question who will suffer the most, the public or the farmers. The public will not be obliged to listen to the lecturers, but the farmers will have to pay their salary and expenses, and for 35,000 itinerant talkers, that will take off a good slice of the profits of the wheat crop.—Springfield Union.

A curious juxtaposition of vessels was noticed in San Francisco the other day. At Howard wharf was an inglorious hay barge, the George Washington, and near by the magnificent American ship, the Valley Forge. Alongside the George Washington was a companion vessel, the Fourth of July, discharging her load of meadow produce.

The government's efforts to tax oleomargarine into disuse have not proved very successful. Revenue from stamp sales has steadily increased since the law went into effect, and during the 10 months ended with April more stamps were sold than for any previous 12 months. Evidently the product has a legitimate place in the market and is not at all dependent upon masking as butter to win a way. But the state should continue to insist that it be sold for what it really is.—Springfield Republican.

MORTGAGEE'S SALE.

By P. F. Tierney, Auctioneer, 252
Essex Street, Salem.

By virtue of a power of sale contained in a mortgage deed given by Henry Bodge to Cornelius H. Buckley, dated September twenty-third, A. D. 1889, and recorded in Essex Registry of Deeds, South District, in Book 1260, leaf 128, for breach of the condition contained in said mortgage, and for the purpose of foreclosing the same, will be sold at public auction, on the premises heretofore described, on Wednesday, the tenth day of June, A. D. 1891, at 12 o'clock, noon, the premises by said mortgage deed conveyed,
viz:—The lot of land, situate in Peabody, in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, which is bounded, beginning at a point on Walton street, and thence running southwesterly by land now or formerly of John G.
Walcott, parallel with and distant fifty-six and one-half feet from the northwesterly side of the underpinning of the new dwelling house on the premises, twenty rods; thence southeasterly by land now or late of said Walcott, eighty rods; thence northeasterly by land now or late of said Walcott, parallel with and about fifty-six and one-half feet distant from the southeasterly side of the underpinning of said house, twenty rods, to said Lowell street; thence northwesterly by Lowell street, eight rods, to the point begun at. Being the same premises described in the deed recorded in said Registry, in Book 1185, leaf 22.

P. F. Tierney has been appointed agent for Salem and vicinity for the American Employer's Liability Company of New Jersey. The company has recently commenced business in Massachusetts and has a capital of $200,000. Manufacturers will be pleased to learn that the monopoly of the English company has at last been broken and some better terms may be expected.

Andrew Torr met with a painful accident Wednesday. He was tending a staking or softening machine in the shop in the rear of the old Torr tannery, when one of the blades caught in a hole in the skin and he was pulled forward so that another blade struck his forehead, cutting an ugly gash and otherwise disfiguring his face. A surgeon was called and several stitches were taken in the wound.

The Essex and Naumkeag Street Railway companies are having some difficulty over a frog placed by the former company at the crossing of their rails in Block House Square, near Salem Alms House, and which was pulled up by some unknown party.
The Naumkeag cars had some difficulty in crossing the frogs, and it is naturally presumed that this was the cause of removal. New frogs will be located in place of the old one removed and a law suit may result.

The contract for laying the water main extensions has been awarded to D. B. Lord. The price is 78 cents per foot and $4.50 per cubic yard for ledge work. The contract calls for pipe 6 inches in diameter—Phipps' patent.
The same kind of pipe has been laid in town before. The price agreed upon is two cents per foot more than was paid last year, as the extra cartage will make about that difference, owing to the remoteness of location from the Square. The appropriation for the extension to the Alms House will not cover the expenses. The distance stated in town meeting was 3200 feet but it has been found by actual measurement to be 3890 feet.

Edward H. Myrick who formerly resided in South Peabody was indicted by the Grand Jury this week for perjury. He pleaded nolo contendere.
The case grew out of a civil suit brought against his father by a farm hand, tried in the Superior Court last fall, in which the young man was a witness. At that trial a receipt was introduced in evidence which young Myrick testified he saw signed by the plaintiff. Mr.
Niles attorney for the plaintiff claimed the receipt was forged and requested the court to have it impounded that it might be used in evidence in a criminal prosecution. Although the jury in the civil case brought in a verdict against Myrick, (the father), some of them have stated that they had no suspicion of perjury or forgery.

At a meeting of the school committee Wednesday evening it was decided to examine candidates for the High school, in June, in the several schools of the town. The various subjects will be taken up on different days, but all examinations upon a given topic will be simultaneous and conducted under charge of members of the committee.
The results will be announced before the close of schools for the summer.
It was also voted to instruct janitors to use the utmost diligence in the matter of ventilation, and to use disinfectants freely about the school buildings. The health of the pupils has been remarkably good for a long time, and no registered pupil has died for three years.
Much praise is due the committee, and particularly the chairman, for the care that has been taken to prevent disease.

The annual meeting of the Peabody Veteran Fireman's Association was held at the Central fire station, Wednesday evening, and the following officers were elected: Abraham C.
Osborne, president; Bennett B.
Humphrey, vice president, and recording secretary; John B. Reith, financial secretary; James Buxton, treasurer; Andrew Dodge, Daniel B.
Lord, Charles G. Folsom, W. W.
Reed, Geo. M. Wason, directors;
Charles H. Hooper, foreman; Frank E. Berry, first assistant; Andrew Dodge, second assistant; George O.
Morse, steward. The treasurer reported a balance on hand of $205.29. Five new members were voted in, making the total membership 105. Secretary Wilkinson declined a re-election. He gave a report of the last meeting of the New England league at which he withdrew the invitation of the Peabody association to have the next muster held in this town. Under the present arrangements all the expense of the muster has to be paid by the association in whose town the muster is held.
It is possible that the conditions will be changed before the place is decided upon.

Four weeks ago a son named Jonathan, and aged 8 years was stricken with the disease and died in a few days.
During the week, the mother birth to a daughter, and the care of the boy devolved upon the father, who also was obliged to care for three others at the same time, but stood bravely to his task until the death of little Jonathan, when he was stricken with the disease, and the day following Arthur, a 5 year old son came down with the same and died on the following Tuesday. He was followed on Wednesday by his sister Mary, aged 16 years. Another daughter who had been working in Swampscott went home to care for the afflicted and she, too, fell a victim to the contagion. The entire family are now prostrated with the exception of the mother and new born babe. The Lynnfield authorities have furnished a man to look after the farm, about $100 in cash have been raised for pecuniary relief, and kind neighbors have lent helping hands so that the distress has been relieved as much as possible under the circumstances.

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL.

The "Soudan," after a second successful run of several weeks, closes at the Boston Theatre to-night, with a farewell testimonial to Mr. Henry Neville, tendered him by his Boston friends. Monday afternoon the charming domestic comedy drama, "The Wolves of New York," will be put upon the stage.

To-night is Francis Wilson's farewell performance at the Globe Theatre. He will appear in "The Merry Monarch."
This engagement completes his stage labors in this country for quite a long period, as he is preparing to sail for Europe. Monday, "Work and Wages," will occupy the stage.

The great success, "Old Jed Prouty," will be produced for the last time this season, at the Hollis Street Theatre tonight. Next week, for one week only, Augustin Daly's Company will appear in "The Last Word."

The Operatic Festival at Music Hall, which was to have been given to-day, has been indefinitely postponed.

"A Cold Day" will draw to a close tonight at the Grand Opera House, having met with a warm reception. Salvini, as Don Caesar De Bazan, will entertain the frequenters of that charming theatre next week.

"Hands Across the Sea" is having a great run at the Boston Museum.

At the Park, "A Night's Frolic" is still the attraction.

Mr. and Mrs. Ivan Caryll (Geraldine Ulmar) are on the Continent. It is Mrs.
Caryll's intention to remain off the stage for a year, when she will make her reappearance in a new opera to be composed by her husband.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has the following dates: Cincinnati, 11;
Louisville, 12-16; Buffalo Festival.
Mr. Templeton Strong, who now is in Europe, will locate in Boston in the autumn.

SIR HENRY PARKES.
Father of the New Commonwealth of Australia.

A new English-speaking Commonwealth is about being formed; all the Australian colonies will in a very short time become united under the name of "The Commonwealth of Australia." A Conference has been sitting at Melbourne; all the different colonies sent delegates; they all agreed on a constitution, the draft of which will now be submitted to each Legislature of each colony, and afterwards to the British Parliament for ratification. The Queen will then have to give her sanction, upon which the new Australian Commonwealth will be instituted. The constitution follows closely the one we have given ourselves. The Governors of the States will be elected, although the Queen will appoint a Governor-General. Each State will have its own Parliament and its own Ministry. There will also be a Federal Parliament, composed of an Upper and a Lower House; there will also be a Federal Ministry.

Sir Henry Parkes, who is really the moving force behind the Confederation movement, is Prime Minister of New South Wales, and was born in England, in 1815, but immigrated in 1839 to Sydney. In 1854 he was elected to the Legislative Council of New South Wales. He is still sitting for the same constituency. Since that time he has always been Prime Minister or Leader of the Opposition. For many years he has advocated Confederation, and now in his old age he sees his work crowned with success, and has the honor of being the founder of a new, great, English speaking nation.

A Reversed Judgment.

By ROBERT C. V. MEYERS.

(Copyright by American Press Association.)
CHAPTER I.

"They are bound to have you for our next governor," she said.

Although the judge was busy in thought he could not help it that his mind, separate and apart from the work in hand, dwelt upon the likelihood of his succeeding in the ambition of his life. Friends had written him, his thought had told him that he had but to accept and the nomination would be his. The governorship was not that an honor of which any man might be proud?

The light from the argand burner spread a halo around his brow. Rows of book cases hemmed him in; the engraved faces of Channing, Burke and Daniel Webster looked down upon him from the walls.

Apart from the portraiture of such worthies, directly opposite his writing table was a life size crayon of a lady with bare neck, her fine eyes seemingly concentrated upon the banded form of the judge as his pen moved over the paper, several pages of which, covered with his legally bad handwriting, lay scattered before him. The logs flared in the fireplace and cast a glow upon the crayon picture till the eyes seemed almost like those of a living person.

It was a long table at which the judge sat, and one end of it was flanked by a number of newspapers. A lady in a low chair was at this end of the table, her white jeweled fingers turning the huge evening sheet she had been scanning before clipping a paragraph from it as she had clipped similar paragraphs from several other papers there. It was easy to see that she was the original of the crayon portrait, her face some years older, indeed, than the pictured one, scarcely so ideal as that, with more control of the under lip. This was the judge's wife.

She had been out to dinner, and without changing her gown had come into the study and taken her usual place at her end of the long table. Here she sat evening after evening, calling herself his Nemesis, his Pallas, his Eloise, his Laura, while he wrote at his papers or read from the calf bound volumes that made the atmosphere pungently musty.

At one moment while she looked over the paper she held, a sparkling ornament that clasped the rich lace at her throat became unclasped, and she let the paper rattle into her lap while she made the gold hasp secure. Then she ran her hand up to the solitaires in her ears with a feminine automatic gesture, and taking up a pair of scissors began cutting an item from the paper.

"They are bound to have you for our next governor," she said as she snipped the paper. "Here is the seventh mention in today's papers; my scrap book will soon be full of your praises. This one says you are a shining example of justice and logic—in other words, that you have the honor of never having had one of your decisions reversed by the higher court. What will they say by election time?"

She picked up some other scraps she had extracted from the leviathans of the printing press.

"Listen to this: 'His honor's private life is irreproachable'—No, that is not what I meant. 'Even his most bitter opponent could find little in the actions of his many years of public life to shadow the page whereon is written a laudable ambition.' That sounds rather peculiar; but then the writer may be young. Again, 'Here is an example of integrity allied to ambition whose methods are sans peur et sans reproche.' Goodness! how hot that fire is!" She pushed her chair a little farther from the hearth. "Heigho! That dinner was a very stupid affair, and the 'buds' and young men at the reception insupportable. Estelle was the prettiest girl there, Gen. Wayne said he was sorry you were too busy to come—so am I—and that he hoped you would write to-night and tell him that you will accept the nomination—not later than to-night. He begins with the politicians to-morrow."

The judge smiled, his lips moving as though they carried a word in the expression of which on his paper she had interrupted him; but he did not look up nor did his pen stop. Not until he had come to the end of the long page and laid it with its predecessors before him did he speak, and then it was while he reached for another sheet of legal cap. "I hope you had a pleasant dinner," he said, as though he had heard not a word his wife had spoken. She was used to this and did not resent it. "Is that your decision in the Dunlap case?" she asked, referring to his papers.

"Yes," he said.

"A peculiarly flagrant case," she commented. "Your decision ought to tell greatly—all the business world will watch you in that. On that decision hinges much of your chances or rather your praise or blame in your new capacity as a gubernatorial nominee." Without waiting for a reply she went on, as a light girlish laugh floated into the room: "I am glad we never had a son; you never know what a boy may turn out to be. The best care will not always make the best man; look at clergymen's sons. Though as for that, in nine cases out of ten, a clergyman pays little attention to his children, relegating all that to the often incapable wife, who is hampered by church work and trying to escape the scrutiny of the women of the congregation." Again the light laugh came in. "John Elwyn came home from the reception with us. Gen. Wayne was telling me that John's father will make another half million out of those coal fields of his. Has that English syndicate really made overtures toward buying him out?"

The judge laid down his pen; ever since John Elwyn's name had been mentioned the pen had not made a stroke. "I don't altogether like young Elwyn," he said deliberately.

"What is there against him?" asked his wife, as though she had never before heard the objection; was she not a careful mother, determined to have her way against a whim of the father?

"In the first place," said the judge, "he is an idler; he promenades the streets, goes to horse races, and so on," the "so on" remaining unexplained.

"There is no necessity for him to work," pursued the wife; "he would be taking the bread from some poorer man if he were to work."

"Every young fellow who is worth his salt will have something useful to occupy his time," argued the judge. "I have too much to do with the results of idleness to admire it."

"And you compare the son of a millionaire to the criminal classes you have to do with professionally—idle pickpockets, drunkards and the like? Possibly your strictures apply to women as well, seeing that you have to do with the results of idleness in women as well as in men."

"Every one should have some employment, some avocation."

She took him up at that word.

"I am glad you say avocation instead of vocation. For what vocation has Estelle? And as to her avocations, what are they but those which you infer lead poorer girls away from the right? She is fond of gayety, dress; she likes admiration; she—"

But the judge frowned.

"I wish you would not class our daughter with the women I see in the dock," he said.

"Then why should you class John Elwyn with the men you see in the dock?" demanded his wife. "John has his horses, his coach, his steam yacht!"

"His London tailor, his several clubs, his insufferable valet."

"Exactly. But then all this is in accord with his life, from his cradle down. His father worked hard that this sort of thing might be brought about."

"Did he? His father worked hard, but scarcely that he might have an idle son."

"Why do you work?" smilingly asked his wife. "Is it all for yourself alone? Do you not always think of idle Estelle when you have a success? Have you not thought of her when you thought of the governorship, and that even higher honors to you would be pleasant for her? I hope to see you in the cabinet yet."

The judge's countenance cleared, and he said lightly:

"My dear, who can argue with a woman? Don't I know what all this means? Some evening this study door will open and Estelle will come in with half frightened eyes and throw her arms around you. You will say 'Is Mr. Elwyn gone?' and her only answer will be to kiss you—your mind, for I shall not be thought of just then, or thought of a little shyly; and will I understand? Yes, I think so, and—well! well! I suppose I may be a little hard on young Elwyn—maybe every father questions the life and proclivities of the young fellows who cut after the daughters. But, going back to first principles, I don't like idleness. The arrogance of idleness is something appalling. Young Elwyn in time will show Estelle how superior he is to her father, because he did not come from the country a poor boy while her father did."

His wife did not like this reverting to the first principles of his own life, though she said that a self made man was an American honor.

"Not in the eyes of young men whose fathers make fortunes for them," retorted the judge.

The lady was still less pleased.

"Judge," she said, "you are evidently ruled by what you have written to-night—your decision in the Dunlap affair"—the case of a bookkeeper accused of hypotheating a large sum of his employer's money. "That man was not an idler; he is said to have been indefatigable in business, and yet he became a thief. Your experience with the criminal class makes you doubtful of every other class. I call that a perversion of mind. The next thing you will be having grave suspicions of me."

The judge made a smiling rejoinder such as a husband may venture with his wife, and turned again to his writing.

The blazing logs crackled, the wife gazed into the flare, her face lighted with an inward as well as an outward radiance. Had she not for several months been desirous of just such a result as she hoped would soon come about? She would yet, she was convinced, see her only child the wife of the heir to millions, a woman at the height of social matters, an authority and the envy of other women. She could appreciate it to the fullest, for she had long, long ago, against the sage advice and the warning of friends, married a struggling lawyer in whom she saw what he had since with her assistance developed. She gave herself some of the credit of her husband's success in life. She had made him a study from the beginning, gauging his weak points as she gauged his strong, tutoring those and guarding those, till he understood himself and saw what she had ever tactfully, kindly and appreciatively impressed upon him—his duty to himself, her and their child.

This duty was to make of himself all that it was possible to make, to scale dizzy heights; and one of these heights was about to be attained when his name

ASSESSORS' NOTICE.

To the Inhabitants and other Persons liable to pay Taxes in the Town of Peabody.

The Assessors of the Town of Peabody hereby give notice to the inhabitants of said town, and all other persons liable to pay taxes therein, that their office will be open on and after the first day of May, and continuing the first day of June, and all persons liable to be taxed in said town are hereby required to bring in at the said office true and perfect lists of all the polls (males twenty years old, and over), and schedules and estimates of the personal estates for which they are liable to pay taxes.

Copartnerships

Persons holding estates in trust, whether minors or otherwise, are particularly requested to furnish the assessors with statements in relation to such estates. When trust estates, or estates of minors, have been divided during the past year, or have changed hands from other causes, the trustee, executor or administrator, or other person interested, is required to furnish a true and correct statement in writing to pay all taxes assessed thereon. NO STATEMENT OR RETURN IS REQUIRED FROM EITHER MORTGAGOR OR MORTGAGEE, unless requested by the assessors in writing.

Mortgaged Real Estate.

"Any mortgagor or mortgagee of real estate may bring in to the assessors of the town or city where such real estate lies," within the time specified in this notice, a statement, under oath, of the amount due on each separate lot or parcel of such real estate, and the name and residence of every holder of an interest therein as a mortgagor or mortgagee, and when such property is situated in two or more places, or when a recorded mortgage includes for one sum two or more estates or parts of an estate, an estimate of the amount of the mortgagee's interest in each estate or part of an estate shall be given in such statement." (Chap. 175 of the Acts of 1882.) When a statement in conformity with the law above quoted is brought in, the real estate therein returned will be assessed under sections 14, 15 and 16, of chapter 11 of the Public Statutes. But in cases where the mortgagee of the real estate has agreed in writing to pay all taxes assessed thereon, NO STATEMENT OR RETURN IS REQUIRED FROM EITHER MORTGAGOR OR MORTGAGEE, unless requested by the assessors in writing.

Estates in Trust.

Persons holding estates in trust, whether minors or otherwise, are particularly requested to furnish the assessors with statements in relation to such estates. When trust estates, or estates of minors, have been divided during the past year, or have changed hands from other causes, the trustee, executor or administrator, or other person interested, is required to furnish a true and correct statement in writing to pay all taxes assessed thereon. NO STATEMENT OR RETURN IS REQUIRED FROM EITHER MORTGAGOR OR MORTGAGEE, unless requested by the assessors in writing.

Any person bringing in a list of all his taxable personal property will be assessed upon the valuation thereof, and any one neglecting to furnish the assessors with such list within the time above specified will be deemed at a legal meeting of the Board of Assessors, agreeable to the law of the Commonwealth. All persons will take notice that statements of personal property must be in writing, and subscribed under oath before one of the Assessors, at their office, on or before the FIRST DAY OF JUNE, and that the personal property of all taxable persons must be estimated by the Board, NOTWITHSTANDING A VERBAL STATEMENT OR INFORMAL WRITTEN COMMUNICATION TO ANY ONE OR MORE OF THE ASSESSORS. (Pub. Stat., Chap. 11, Sec. 39 and 41.) When a person has failed to bring in a list or schedule of all his taxable personal property to this notice, no statement of a tax so assessed upon such person for personal property can be granted, "unless such tax exceeds by more than fifty per cent. the amount which would have been assessed to that person on personal estate, if he had seasonably brought in said list; and if said tax exceeds by more than fifty per cent. the said amount, the abatement shall be only of the excess above the said fifty per cent." (Pub. Stat., Chap. 11, Sec. 73.)

Any person taxable in Peabody for personal property can obtain a BLANK SCHEDULE for filling out such property, with direction for properly filling the same, by applying at the assessors' office.

Literary, Benevolent, Charitable and Scientific Corporations.

The attention of the officers of all Literary, Benevolent, Charitable and Scientific Corporations, located in Peabody, is particularly called to the requirements of Chapter 217 of the Acts of 1882 as the property of said corporations, both personal and real, will be subject to taxation unless the law is complied with. Blank forms for the purpose can be had at the office of the assessors.

TOWN OF PEABODY.

BOARD OF HEALTH REGULATIONS.

THE Board of Health appointed by the Town hereby make and publish as required by law, "the following "Regulations for the Public Health and Safety."

The Board shall make such regulations as it judges necessary for the public health and safety. * * * * * Whoever violates any such regulation shall forfeit a sum not exceeding one hundred dollars.—(Extract from the Public Statutes Chap. 80, §18.

REGULATION 1ST. It being the duty of the Board of Health of the Town of Peabody, to make such examination of the premises of persons residing in said town as they shall deem necessary for the public welfare, the Board hereby give notice and require that all premises within said limits shall be ready for inspection by the Board on and after May 20th, 1891.

REGULATION 2D. No house, outhouse, filthy water, dead animals or refuse of any kind shall be thrown upon the streets by any resident; and no butcher, fish monger or vender of merchandise, shall leave any refuse upon the streets of this town.

REGULATION 3D. If, upon inspection, any rubbish, offal, decaying animal or vegetable matter, or filth of any kind be found in, under or about any building, within any yard or enclosure, upon any premises, or in the ponds or water courses of said Town of Peabody, or if any privy or drain be found so discharging as to prove a nuisance, and offensive or deleterious to the public health, the owner or occupant of such property shall be notified by the Board to remove or abate such nuisance within twenty-four hours after said notice has been served.

REGULATION 4TH. If any owner or occupant of property as aforesaid, after having been duly notified, shall neglect to comply with the requirements of the above section, the Board of Health shall cause any and all nuisances to be removed or abated at the expense of the owner or occupants.

REGULATION 5TH. On and after June 1st 1891, swine shall not be kept within the following limits in this town except by permit from the Board of Health.—Commencing at the boundary stone east of Holly street, and running on the Southern side of Margin street seven hundred feet; thence Northwesterly in a straight line to Liberty, five hundred feet Northwesterly of Mr. Simon P. Buxton's residence; thence Westerly in a straight line to Andover street bridge; thence Northwesterly in a straight line, to Swampscott avenue; through Swampscott avenue to Strongwater brook; thence Easterly in a straight line to the Eastern end of Clement avenue and the Salem line; thence by the Salem line to Willow, Shillaber, Aborn, Main, Grove, Walnut, Mt. Vernon, Tremont and Highland streets to the boundary stone begun at. No goats shall be kept within the limits of this Town, except in pastures, or in enclosures.

REGULATION 6TH. No public funeral shall be held over the remains of any person having died of SMALL POX, SCARLET FEVER, DIPHTHERIA, TYPHOID FEVER or MEMBRANOUS CROPE, without the written permit of the Board of Health, under such regulations as may prevent the spread of either of such diseases.

REGULATION 7TH. The remains of any person dying of either of said diseases shall be placed in a tight or sealed coffin, and shall thereafter be exposed to view or disturbed, except for burial, and no undertaker or other person shall be permitted to take to any house, or use any bier or stand with draperies, which is to be used at any other funeral.

REGULATION 8TH. No owner, driver or any other person having charge of any hackney carriage or other vehicle used as a public conveyance, shall convey in or upon said

carriage or other vehicle, any person sick or infected with the Small Pox, Scarlet Fever, Diphtheria, or other contagious disease, or the body of any person who has died of any contagious disease, without the written permit of the Board of Health, to be given under such regulations as may prevent the spread of such disease, and every vehicle which shall be so used shall be immediately disinfected under the supervision of the Board of Health, and before any other person shall be conveyed in or upon it. This regulation is intended to cover all cases where persons are conveyed from funerals at houses where any one has died of any contagious disease.

REGULATION 9TH. It shall be the duty of occupants of dwellings in which any person or persons may be sick with SMALL POX*, DIPHTHERIA, SCARLET FEVER, TYPHOID FEVER or MEMBRANOUS CROPE, and Physicians attending such cases forthwith to notify the Board of Health of the fact.

REGULATION 10TH. The occupants of buildings, or dwellings where Small Pox exists, or has existed, shall prohibit and prevent the removal of clothes, bedding and upholstery, or other articles, from the infected buildings, except the removal is made by permission, or under direction of the Board of Health.

REGULATION 11TH. The occupants of buildings or dwellings where Scarlet Fever and Diphtheria exist shall withdraw all children attending school, from the same, and the teachers of said schools shall, NOTWITHSTANDING, withdraw the children to re-enter the school until they shall present a certificate from the attending Physician vouching for the safety thereof.

REGULATION 12TH. Night soil carts shall not be allowed to pass through the streets in the thickly settled portions of the town between sunrise and sunset, from June 1st to Nov. 1st, without a special permit from the Board of Health.

REGULATION 13TH. Any person in the town of Peabody who knows or suspects any domestic animal has contagious disease, such as glanders in horses or cholera in swine, must report the same to the Board of Health. The penalty for neglect to do so is fine or imprisonment.

The above is in accordance with the provisions of Chapter 252 of the Acts of 1887.

The Board earnestly requests the co-operation of every individual, in securing the desirable sanitary condition, to promote which the foregoing regulations are framed.

Preserve the North Woods.

The effort sportsmen are making to pass a bill through the Legislature prohibiting the building of any railroad through the Adirondack region should have the earnest support of all citizens of New York. This is by no means a matter that concerns sportsmen only;

it interests every man in this State.

We want the North Woods set apart as a public park, and protected as such.

Once allow an invasion to be made in the Adirondacks, and the place will rapidly become infested with all manner of schemes of the summer-resort fiend. To-day the Adirondacks are practically the only spot comparatively near us where we can go for a bit of pure air and gentle sport. More than this, the sanitary condition of the North Woods district is very great.

The building of a railroad through this section means the extinction of its glories. There is already one railroad in existence there, and it has proved quite equal to the demands upon it.

One grand lesson has been given soulless schemer by the crushing out of the faithless Forest Commissioners; cannot another equally good be administered the projectors of land and railroad schemes in this breathing-spot of New York.—Harper's Weekly.

Good morning Laker said one member of the Chicago literary society to another. Good morning, Wright, replied Laker. How is Mrs. R. this morning?

Mr. Ballou, novelist, wrote that his last novel had reached a sale of one hundred and twenty thousand. A week later he telegraphed in breathless haste, Take out the first three words;

but, alas! the paper had gone to press.

was associated in all honorable merit and deserving with the highest office of the state.

Surely he owed his wife much, and she knew that he so reasoned. But she had never liked to hear him speak of his earlier days, when he had wandered, a poor country lad, away from "the soft eye music of slow waving boughs" into the cataclysm of warring men, each determined to supplant his brother, not, like young Whittington having the acclaim of bells, but earnestly hopeful of making his way, and so the lady looked into the flare and thought.

The fire crackled and flashed up to the pictured eyes that looked down upon the judge; from outside came the subdued rattle of a city night; a boy passed by the house shrilly whistling. The judge wrote.

In the strokes of his pen, word by word, letter by letter, he reasoned against a life gone wrong, a mind that had dug beneath the ordinary in guilt, while an equal effort in an opposite direction might have won the admiration of healthful reasoning. But had it been premeditation? Had it not been a moment of temptation? And who is beyond temptation, though of divinity a man be not tempted beyond what he is able to resist?

The case was one of peculiar interest to the judge; his decision would be critically examined. Just now, with the governorship in the perspective, even more than his enemies would grasp at any flaw, the merest technicality, to prove the feasibility of higher honors for him. If he were lenient he might be accused of weakness; if he were severe as the flagrant crime might make the ordinary man who espoused the cause of an outraged business community, it might be argued that a judge should be a principle, never an individual.

So he must be careful, exact, having before him nothing but the cold facts of the case; be an impartial, soulless arbiter of the evidence deduced in the trial.

From the room beyond came the acute tones of a piano. A little prelude was played, and then a clear, girlish voice broke into song. It was a tender little ballad which the daughter of the house sang to the man who sought to win her.

In the study the mother of the daughter of the house, her gaze upon the flare of the fire, thought of the success to be achieved by the daughter, as she had ever thought of the success to be achieved by the father of that daughter.

In the study the judge penned his decision condemnatory of a man not so many years older than the lover of the daughter, with mean advantages, great temptations and an activity to be deprecated, as was the passivity of the other man.

The song floated into the study, plaintive and aching, unsatisfied as all music is.

Did the judge hear it as he wrote his decision? Did his wife hear it as she dreamed her ambitions dreams?

CHAPTER II.

"Do you want to marry me?" Dunlap! That was the accused man's name. The name was ordinary, there are many Dunlaps in many cities. Yet for all that, from the beginning of the case, the name had developed a certain train of reminiscences in the mind of the judge.

He had spoken to-night to his wife of the time when he had come, a poor boy, from the country. Had the name so often heard in court for a week past, so often written in the papers under his hand, called forth that allusion to his boyhood? Which of us can tell what it is that leads our minds back to long unremembered days, to incidents for years relegated to oblivion? Is it that strain of a tune from the strident hand organ on the pavement, the dip of a bird's wing in the spring blue, the caught up word from a passer by—what is it?

When he was a boy in the country, orphaned, neglected, there was a little girl he had played with—Salome. When he was 16, with a thought of the city, and looked down at his gnarled hands, that little girl had encouraged him. When he said he must leave old associations and go out into the battle of striving millions, that little girl had a smile on her lips, but a tear in her eye—for she had been his companion so long, he had governed her thoughts so long, that she could not realize life without him. But he kissed her, and went to town to feel himself a tossed about atom no one noticed, and dreamed of her and missed her, and wished for her companionship. When he found employment and had a miserable room for a home, he one day went to that home, and there was Salome. After all, he was not so glad to see her.

"Grandmother's dead," she said, in a sort of triumph, "and there's nobody to keep me away. I've come to stay."

But this could not be, and so he told her, and she hung her head.

The woman of the house was appealed to, and Salome went out to service, her half days of weekly outing always taking her where she could see her sole friend. When he was 18 he was pounding parchment in an attorney's office.

"Be a lawyer," she said, and he blushed with vanity.

"Maybe you'll be a judge," she said, dilating, and he laughed at her.

"The president," cried she in glee.

But he did read law, and began to find that Salome was beneath him. She may have understood, for she left the kitchen for the factory, and took to reading inflammatory literature. Yet her associations were not as his—how could they be? She knew flaunting girls, her every day co-workers; he saw well dressed serious men every day of his life. She knew few rules of syntax, while he was daily studying the faults of his tongue. He felt his superiority, but argued that it would be cruel to show her that he did.

He tried not to see so much of her, and it puzzled him that this irritated him, the more so that she made no effort to see him.

One day he met her when he had not seen her for weeks, and was resolving to look her up. There was a young, floridly dressed man with her.

She was cool and quiet, and how pretty she looked to the eyes that had missed her these weeks! The lawyer's clerk knew that he had made her realize their relative positions. She introduced the stranger, calling him with an accent, "Mister Dunlap." He who was to be a judge experienced another pang and considerable contempt for Mr. Dunlap. He was angry with her too, and after a few words left the couple, conscious that the gaudily attired fellow laughed at the shabby professional struggler. After a few days of vague restlessness he told himself

An Important Decision against the New York and New England Railroad.

An important decision has recently been made by Judge Cooley involving the obligations of railroad companies under the Interstate commerce law. The New York and New England road formerly exchanged freight bound to or from New York city, with the New York and Northern road, under a special agreement as to rates and regulations. Recently the former company have taken an interest in New England Terminal company, and now all freights of the New York and New England is transferred by the Housatonic line by water and the agreements made by the Northern company has been ignored and the New York and New England refuse to accord the Northern road any facilities for interchange of traffic as formerly agreed. This Judge Cooley declares to be the law, holding that the fact that the discriminating company has an interest in the Housatonic is no excuse and does not alter the legal status.

Disastrous forest fires have been raging in Pennsylvania and Michigan this week, laying waste immense tracts of territory in the bark and lumber districts. Hundreds of thousands of feet of lumber have been consumed and vast quantities of bark reduced to ashes. The cause of the fire is due to the long drouth that has dried up all manner of forest productions and made them easy prey to the sparks that constantly fly from passing railroad trains. A message received from Superintendent Strong of the Oil City Fuel Company, from Pine Grove Township says that 13 oil wells have been burned and four gas wells of the Fuel Supply Company and nine oil wells of the North Penn Oil Company. Minor forest fires are reported from various points in this section. The Fuel Company has received messages from Elk and Clearfield counties announcing serious forest fires, which have spread alarmingly. A horrible disaster befell a train load of workmen on the Sinnamahoning railroad in Pennsylvania on Monday about 75 men had been out to fight the flames under charge of the Division Superintendent and on starting to return, found themselves hemmed in on all sides by the fire. It was finally determined to speed up the train and dash past the burning wood. The engineer and firemen bandaged the exposed parts of their heads and arms with damp cloths and the crew lay flat upon their faces and the run was attempted. The heat was intolerable and the smoke stifling but on they sped until opposite the hottest part of the fire, where an immense pile of logs were burning, when the rails spread and the train was hurled over and over toward the fire. Those who were able, rushed back to the track for safety, but seeing some of their comrades in danger returned and rendered them assistance, being terribly burned in the undertaking. Seven men were burned to death on the spot, and 30 others were badly burned and some have since died. Superintendent Badger was among those burned to death. Telephone and telegraph communication was badly disarranged for several days. Reports from other states have brought tidings of forest fires that would have been considered extensive but for the gigantic proportions of those in Pennsylvania.

We shall probably never sell clubs again, their day having gone by, but there are many who do not care during these dull times to pay so much as $5.00 a dozen for pictures, but who still want the best. As we wish to reach this class, but do not believe in charging two prices for the same thing, we have decided to adopt the medium price of $4.00 for a short time. The quality of work will be the same as heretofore.

PHOEBE A. GILCHRIST.

A Woman who Suffered TELLS HOW SHE FOUND RELIEF.

HALLDALE, ME., Oct. 2, 1890.

DANA SARSAPARILLA CO.:—
Gentlemen:—I have been troubled with Muscular Rheumatism ever since I was thirteen years old. I am now forty-seven.
And for years I was subject to the most terrible attacks of headache, that would almost drive me distracted.

About every week I would have to call a physician, I would have such awful distress in my stomach, caused by Indigestion. My agony was so intense I often thought I should die. I was unable to sleep nights.
Would have to sit up hours and hours;
and it was but natural that I should feel all dragged out. Life was a burden to me. Such was my condition when I began to take DANA'S SARSAPA-RILLA. I have taken but three bottles as yet, and had but one attack of the old distress in my stomach after I commenced taking it. It has cured my headache, taken the tired feeling all out of me;
and I can go to bed and sleep all night.
It has helped my Rheumatism a great deal, and I have no doubt will cure it.
Yours respectfully,
PHOEBE A. GILCHRIST.

Don't be a bigot! We offer you relief, or charge you nothing.

GUARANTEED TO CURE.

The Annual Meeting of the Law and Order League.

The Law and Order League held its annual meeting in the Selectmen's room, town hall, on Thursday evening.
Dr. C. C. Pike, the president made a short address, in which he congratulated the league on the results of the last year's work. He expressed a belief that the work of the future would not fall short of what had been done during the past twelve months. The report of the secretary, William Donnell, showed that liquor dealers and druggists had been notified during the year to abstain from selling to 180 individuals whose names had appeared upon the records of the court for drunkenness, and that notices had been served by a dozen or more wives of habitual drunkards, forbidding further sales to their husbands. The report of the treasurer, Isaac A. Downe, showed a balance on hand of $52.21 and no bills outstanding against the league. There is practically $100 available as some subscriptions are not yet collected.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year:
Samuel Trask, president; B. N. Moore and George F. Barnes, vice presidents;
Wm. Donnell, secretary; Isaac A.
Downe, treasurer; Charles C. Pike,
Samuel Trask, George F. Barnes,
Thomas E. Green, B. B. Humphrey,
Richard F. Smith, B. F. Stevens, C.
J. Mackintosh, Alonzo J. Hubbard, H.
Harrington, executive committee. The present membership of the league is 90.
Some discussion of the general and growing practice of fruit and confectionary dealers keeping open shop on the Lord's day followed, and the members pretty generally agreed that vigorous measures should be adopted to put a stop to the custom. The league will ask the Selectmen to attend to the matter and see that the Statutes are enforced. A committee was appointed to wait upon the Board, call attention to the facts and ask that orders be issued to enforce observance of the Sunday laws. If the action of the Board is not satisfactory to the league, the enforcement will be taken up by that body, and notices issued to the storekeepers.

The Volunteer Club will hold a grand social assembly in Town Hall, Friday evening next. This will probably be the last of the season.

New rheostats are being placed on the cars of the Essex Electric road by the Franklin Electric company. They are working very nicely.

A boy named Swanton was bitten this week by a Newfoundland dog. The canine was arrested and suffered the death penalty for his vice.

The May meeting of the club will be held on Monday, the 25th, at the Tabernacle Chapel, Salem, at 5.30 P. M.
Supper at 6 o'clock.

The Rev. Wm. Ell of Grafton, D. D., of Boston, will address the club upon the subject: "How the Foundation Stones of American History were Laid." In connection with the lecture there will be stereoscopic illustrations of the homes of the Pilgrim Fathers in England and Holland. Mr. Henry I.
Le-tavour, of Beverly, will entertain the club with musical numbers, accompanied by Mr. George A. Shepard, of Salem.

A Historical Volume 1775-1891.

We have just received No. 4, Vol. 1 of the Salem Press Historical and Genealogical Record, edited by Mr.
Eben Putnam. In this number is an exceedingly full account of the late celebration at Danvers of the 116th anniversary of the Battle of Lexington.
Most of the addresses are given in full.
In 1775 Peabody contributed as many men as Danvers, and Peabody people will be particularly interested in the address of Mr. D. Webster King.
Mr. Henry Brooks contributes an interesting account of traveling in olden times and the early marriage intentions of the town of Salem are continued.
The magazine can be obtained at the bookstands or of the publishers (Salem Press) for 50 cents.

third finger.

Alexander B. Clark's elegant new steam yacht will take out a party from Peabody and Salem tomorrow for a brief sailing.

The insolvency of the Davis Shoe Company strikes Peabody more or less, but creditors in this town are said to be not very numerous.

Residents of Andover street are kicking on account of the quality of poles erected by the Naumkeag company on that street.

The bill giving cities and towns power to establish electric light plants passed the House of Representatives Tuesday, by a vote of 153 to 30.

The law blanks which the Salem Press are now issuing are giving great satisfaction, on account of the quality of stock, price and form.

A large audience greeted Rev. Mr.
Hall at the gospel temperance meeting in Franklin Hall, last Sunday night.
Next Sunday the meeting will be in the interest of the World's W. C. T. U., at 5.45 P. M.

As the Amesbury freight was going through Salem depot last Monday, with cars for a New York Street Railway and the Essex Electric, the tops of the former came in contact with an overhead structure and they were demolished. The Essex car which was directly behind escaped injury.

J. W. Peabody's milk team ran away Monday forenoon. The wagon was overturned on the Square. The horse was captured before any more damage was done.

A party of boxers left town last Saturday afternoon in a barge to give exhibitions of sparring in Lowell. It is rumored that they have since been skirmishing for lost funds.

Charles Annable was driving on Boston street a few days ago, when a nut came off the axle. He jumped and seized the horse by the head thereby averting a serious accident.

Levi, Charles B. Warner, Camp No.
87, Sons of Veterans, will attend the Universalist church to-morrow forenoon. Members are requested to meet at G. A. R. Hall at 9.30 o'clock.

A petition is in circulation and receiving numerous signatures, asking that the lines of the present Congressional District be left as they are. There is a very general dissatisfaction with the proposed change.

An alarm was sounded from box 7 about 4.30 Tuesday morning in consequence of a slight blaze at the bakehouse. The breaking of a kerosene lamp caused the fire, but it was extinguished before the department arrived.

Special services will be held at the Universalist Church to-morrow. Rev.
A. F. Welch, the pastor, will occupy the pulpit. The Grand Army, Woman's Relief Corps and the Sons of Veterans have accepted an invitation to attend. The church will be appropriately decorated.

A grand ocean excursion of the Steamer Watertown, will be made on Sunday, June 14, leaving Beverly at 9 o'clock and Salem at 10 o'clock A. M., under the auspices of the Father Mathew C. T. A. The boat will pass the Islands along the coast and also give a view of Magnolia and Norman's Woe, preceding to the Isle of Shoals. A full brass band will furnish music.

A local grocery man met with a slight accident yesterday morning.
He was crossing the sidewalk with two jugs in one hand, and a bundle in the other, when, as he was about to deposit his burden his foot slipped out from under him and he was precipitated to the sidewalk. The collision with the pavement was too much for the jugs and they suffered a compound fracture. The viscid contents was spilled upon the walk, much to the chagrin of the dealer in the West Indies.

Messrs. Abbott & Reynolds of Salem Mass., are to try another sale of good horses at public auction. Their first sale was not the success they expected, yet, they feel if they stick to it that eventually they are bound to sell horses at fair prices in Salem. They cannot lose any more money at the next sale than they did at their first sale and if the purchasers get the benefit of it, they will come again.

There are seventy horses, weighing from 950 to 1650 lbs. each, fifteen of which are second-hand. The horses are young, sound, well broken, good colors and dispositions, and fully developed. They must prove as represented or purchasers are requested to return them and get their money. The sale will begin promptly at 10.30 o'clock next Wednesday, rain or shine with J. E. Conant & Co., of Lowell, as Auctioneers. There are horses of all qualities for all uses.

Fred C. Blake, who drives for B. F.
Hutchinson, met with a painful accident Thursday. As he was driving on Boston street, his horse slipped upon the pavement and fell, and he was pulled off the wagon, landing on his right hand. His hand was badly cuttured and will be likely to give him considerable trouble. The horse also sustained quite a severe shock.

say that in all my practice and experience have never seen a preparation that I could prescribe with as much confidence of success as I can Hall's Catarrh Cure, that I have yet to find a case of Catarrh that it would not cure, if they would take it according to directions.

MISS C. M. O'CONNOR,

296 ESSEX STREET, SALEM.

Bids for the High School alterations will close Monday.

Isaac Munroe is confined to the house by sickness.

Representative Appleton voted to do away with tables in liquor saloons.

We do not find the name of Representative Appleton among those who voted for the salary grab.

Peter Sim is constructing a terrace on the front of his estate at the corner of Gardner and Liberty streets.

Mrs. Mary Dixon, who resides on Fulton street, broke her ankle Thursday evening by falling down stairs.

We are pleased to learn that Sidney
C. Bancroft, Esq., is able to go about, after his long confinement to his house.

Miss Jennie Munroe met with a painful accident on Wednesday afternoon as she was driving in a light buggy through Front street, Salem.
The horse slipped and fell, and as she was driving a tight rein, she was pulled over the dasher, striking upon the pavement. As the horse was getting up he accidentally stepped so that his shoe struck her forehead cutting a deep gash and it was found necessary to take several stitches in the wound.
No further injuries were received aside from a severe shaking up and the shock to her nervous system. The vehicle was not injured at all.

An open electric car of the Essex company met with a slight mishap by running off the rail Wednesday evening as it was passing over the Tremont street switch. A large gathering of men and boys soon appeared upon the scene and helped to put it on again with rails and telephone poles. President Upton chanced to be on the car, and when she was righted, rewarded the efforts of the crowd of helpers, by passing around the cigars.
Somebody asked if—"That was not good for the beer." To which Mr.
Upton replied they could get all the beer they wanted by going to Salem.
But he did not offer anybody an order on any of Salem's bars.

Blossom Time.

Spring came with tiny laces thrusting,
And earth was clad in peeping green;
In russet bark, the twigs encircling,
Tenderest blossom points were seen:
A robin courier proclaimed good cheer:
Summer will soon arrive for I am here.
And now from cherry boughs in flower
The fragrant breeze arousing shakes
With every honied drifting flakes;
Of feather snow in breathing flakes;
And apple trees in bloom like ricks of white
Are veiled with smoky, anemisthine light.
Ah, little soul, on thy first Spring
Unclinging merry, puzzled eyes,
Would that a father's thought could bring Prophecy counsel more than wise
To guide thee as a father's love would yearn,
Thou hast so much to suffer and to learn!
I cannot live thy life for thee,
My precepts would be dull and trite,
Barren as last year's leaves to me
Beneath the apple blossoms white;
But in thy new horizon's vaster range
Our hearts close knit shall feel no chilling change.

THE FARM AND GARDEN.

The Minerca fowls lay the largest eggs of any breed. This item will be of importance when we are sufficiently advanced to sell eggs by weight—the only proper method.

A poor soil well worked will ordinarily produce better crops than a good soil poorly worked; but for wholly satisfactory results there should be both good land and good work.

Constitutional vigor and healthy digestion are of prime importance in a dairy cow, as her profitability depends largely upon her ability to convert great quantities of coarse food into good milk.

If you wish to have fine tomatoes and plenty of them, cut back all the leading shoots from three to six inches, and remove all sprouts from the base of the plants. There will be an important gain in earliness, productiveness and size of plants.

During the first year the feeding of the heifer should be such as would tend toward development of frame rather than to the laying on of flesh. Grass and roots and bulky forage will be of more value than grain or other rich concentrated foods.

Good land is not the only thing required for the production and good cultivation. If the plant food is so locked up that the plants can not avail themselves of it, it is of little use. Cultivation renders the plant food available.

In planting gooseberries for commercial purposes, it will be well to confine the choice to the Houghton and Downing. The industry is an important variety which has been largely advertised as especially exempt from mildew, but experience with it thus far does not bear out the claim.

Give the horses water before feeding. In France some worthless horses were killed for dissection on purpose to determine the effect of giving water immediately after eating, and some of the grain was found undigested in the intestines 20 feet beyond the stomach, and it had caused inflammation of the mucous membrane.

Selling grain and hay from the farm in bulk reduces the profit two ways. It is expensive to handle and haul, and it takes away elements of fertility that should be returned to the soil. Feed hogs, sheep and cattle, and so market your products in the easiest way—on the hoof, and keep up the land while you are cropping it.

Hay caps are coming steadily into more general use, and farmers who have once tried them will not go without this help. Good caps made of ducking may be bought at from $40 to $50 per hundred. They should be soaked in a solution of sulphate of copper, to prevent being injured by mildew.

In the successful creamery we will always find neatness, order and business methods. The creamery system furnishes school houses where the mass of farmers are getting points on the care of the care of milk and the production of butter, and to their teachings should be credited even much of the advance that has recently been made in private dairying.

In regard to the value of the winter mulching of wheat with straw corn-stalks or other substances, the Iowa Experiment Station aptly says: "There is no better mulch than a dense growth of wheat blades, which can be procured by sowing moderately early, on good ground, and giving one or two cultivations with a light harrow as soon as up."

Potash fertilizers are especially valuable for all fruit trees and plants, and for this purpose few things are equal to unleached wood ashes. Where these cannot be procured at reasonable rates and in the desired quantities, the available manure may be supplemented by muriate of potash or kainit. Bearing orchards deserve liberal treatment in this respect, and will well repay it.

The proper management of stock includes, and indeed has its beginning, in the selection and handling of the breeding stock. With proper animals at the start, the foundation is well laid for subsequent profit. In feeding, the aim must neither be stint nor to over-feed, but to feed out the products of the farm in such way as may procure the largest gain with the lowest relative cost.

A recent experiment station bulletin says that the chemical analysis of unripe bean stalks indicates that it will pay well to grow the largest varieties of pole beans on hills of corn for fodder or silage. In this connection we would say that the English practice is ahead of our own, as beans (both seed and stalk) have long been known and appreciated for their valuable feeding qualities. Sheep will take readily to bean vines and thrive on them.

Do not be afraid that your orchard nor small fruit garden will give you no profit, in case this should chance to be a good fruit year, as the indications now are that it will. If the price is lower the demand will be increased, as it will put fruit within reach of all. Thin the fruit on the tree, guard against insects, handle and pack with unusual care, placing only the best fruit on the market, and at the end of the season you will have no cause for complaint.

The subject of dairy cleanliness is a more comprehensive one, and goes way back to the nature of the food and drink taken into the stomach of the cows. No matter how careful in all subsequent processes, if you allow the cow to pasture at the manure pile and to drink from baryard pools, you will not make pure, clean butter. Purity of food and water are strictly essential, and so is the bodily cleanliness of the cows. See to it that they have plenty of clean, fresh bedding.

A faultless grass must begin to grow early in spring, must endure drought well, must not suffer from rust or other fungus diseases, must be productive and grow continuously until late in the fall, must be palatable and nutritious, especially rich in albuminoids, it must produce seeds plentifully, so that it will not soon run out, and it must be able to stand successfully the most unfavorable winters. Red-top, tall meadow out grass, Kentucky blue grass and white clover come nearly to fulfilling these requirements.

You may "breed up" your poultry as well as any of the other stock upon the farm, and probably with quite as profitable proportionate results. The Leghorns possess so much vitality and vigor of constitution that they transmit their qualities with wonderful certainty. Get a good young cockerel of this breed and let him run with your mixed flock, and you may soon have some fine, early maturing pullets, and eventually a flock of hens with largely increased egg-producing powers.

There is no doubt that American cotton seed oil is largely exported to the olive producing regions of Europe, relabelled, and then sent back to us and consumed here as pure olive oil. It is strange that we can let our prejudice against this product so interfere with our own interests, as it has been amply demonstrated that cotton seed oil of equal purity with the olive oil could be well used in every place where the latter is now employed.

Bulky food, such as straw, corn fodder and coarse hay, is not always of value solely on account of the nutrition that it contains, but sometimes because it affords a complete change of diet, and because it distends the stomach and aids digestion. If a liberal supply of grain is given there is no danger in feeding coarse foods to any kind of stock, and thus by utilizing the straw and fodder a great saving of hay may be effected. Coarse foods should especially have a place in the economical feeding of cattle and sheep.

The small farm has the advantage over a large one in many ways. It is more easily overlooked and controlled, there is less occasion for overwork, and less worry. Better cultivation can be given and a larger product obtained from less land, and with less labor and expense. The trouble with the majority of farmers is that they have too much land instead of too little, and they work over it all, in a fashion, because they think it must all be made to produce something, and consequently none of it is thoroughly cultivated or made to do its best.

Failure to procure a "catch" in sowing clover seed is frequently a source of loss, and of considerable annoyance, as it requires a new arrangement of the season's plans. A farmer who claims never to have failed in this particular during the past 15 years gives the following reasons for his uniform success: First, the land is never reduced in fertility to a point below which it is able to grow an abundant crop of clover. Second, if there are thin spots they are top-dressed with good manure before sowing, so as to procure evenness of the stand. Third, good, fresh seed is used. To procure even distribution, either a broadcast seeder or a wheelbarrow seeder is used.

An exhaustive experiment in the feeding of steers for beef has been carefully conducted at the Michigan Station, and the following are the more important conclusions arrived at: Age is the controlling circumstance that decides the rate of gain. The ration necessary to sustain the gain increases with age in about the same proportion as the weight of the animal, but the gain remains absolutely about the same. "Baby beef" is not inconsistent with high quality. The youngest steer slaughtered, a Devon, was reared by a man who tested it to be the best beef. Great development in size is not a necessary condition to profitable feeding, nor to quality. The "type" of an animal has much to do with its ability to use food to good advantage in the production of meat. Those nearest the "dairy type" made less gain to the food consumed.

In order to estimate the loss to manure from exposure to the weather and from improper handling, the New York Station took one-half cord of fresh manure from a cow stable, and one-half of old compost, of which muck was the leading ingredient. Each was weighed and sampled them for analysis, and then piled them separately in close conical heaps. A year later these were reweighed, sampled and analyzed. The manure had lost in that time 65 per cent. of its weight, and the compost 30 per cent. The analyses show a loss from weathering in every particular, except in the phosphoric acid contained. At the market price of the fertilizing ingredients the loss amounted to $1.25 for the half cord of manure, and 59 cents for the half cord of compost.

A good kerosene emulsion of sufficient strength to kill parasitic insects can be used safely upon sheep without removing or injuring the fleece; but an emulsion of poor quality should never be used, as it would probably cause the sheep to lose much of its wool. A proper emulsion is made by dissolving one-half pound of common hard soap in a gallon of water by boiling. While boiling hot remove from the fire and add at once two gallons of kerosene, and agitate the whole briskly for a few moments, when a creamy, frothy mass will be formed, that can be diluted to any extent with water without oil rising to the surface. The emulsifying may be best done with a small force pump by pumping the material violently back into the vessel that contains it. In small quantities an ordinary egg-beater may be used to emulsify the soap and kerosene. The emulsion should be tested before using by diluting a small quantity with water in a dish. If the kerosene rises to the top the whole should be put in a vessel and heated to boiling, and again emulsified. This boiling had best be done out of doors, where there would be no danger from fire if the kerosene should ignite.

A NATIONAL EVENT.

The holding of the World's Fair in a city scarcely fifty years old will be a remarkable event, but whether it will really benefit this nation as much as the discovery of the Restorative Nerve by Dr. Franklin Miles is doubtful. This is just what the American people need to cure their excessive nervousness, dyspepsia, headache, dizziness, sleeplessness, neuralgia, nervous debility, dullness, confusion of mind, etc. It acts like a charm. Trial bottles and fine book on "Nervous and Heart Diseases," with unequalled testimonials, free at Wm. T. Lee's. It is warranted to contain no opium, morphine or dangerous drugs.

It is stated that a Scranton, Pa., man has sold his wife and furniture to a boarder for $250. It must have been a poor lot of goods, taken together.

Mr. Sonice—Ah, how do you do, Miss Green? She—Very well, thank you; but my name is Brown. Mr. S.—Oh, I beg pardon. So it is—but you'll excuse me, I'm sure—I am color blind.

The wife (3 a. m.) When you married me, did you not promise to love, cherish, and protect me? The husband (sleepily)—Yes. The wife—Well, then, get up, light the gas, and kill that mosquito.

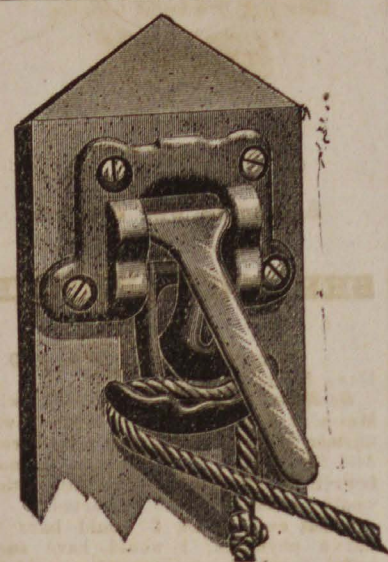

Here's a musical salesman advertised for, why don't you apply, Ned? I? Why, I'm not musical.—Perhaps your not; but I notice you can blow your own horn, you're familiar with bars, your remarks are full of slurs, you're always giving notes and all the rest.

Damsel (looking for compliments) No, Lieutenant; I'm not coming to the hop to-morrow night, for Captain Judson tells me that there is to be a pretty girl there from Baltimore, and there will be no chance for poor me. Gallant but experienced officer—Oh! do come. I don't like pretty girls.

Black eye, nose out of plumb, clothes torn! Been in a fight, haven't you, my son? My son—N-N-No, sir. Pops—What's that you're saying? Why you must have been in a fight. Now, tell the truth. My son—Well, pops, there was a fight, but I wasn't in it.

"Get another dozen lamp chimneys."
"What! are they all gone?"
"Yes."

"I'm going to try a sort I've been reading about, if I have to send to Pittsburgh for 'em. Macbeth & Co.'s 'pearl-top.' They say their chimneys don't break."

"Another humbug, probably."
"Don't Muggins keep 'em?"

"I'm going to see. Give me a postal card. I'll have that chimney, anyhow."
Muggins got 'em for him, and did a thriving chimney business for several weeks, till everybody got 'em; and somehow his trade has increased all round ever since.

THE NEW draft of the bill against bond and assessment companies reported and adopted by the Senate on Wednesday is more sweeping than the House bill as passed by the latter body, and if passed in concurrence by the House, may call forth the sentiment "deliver me from my friends." There is a strong feeling by the laboring classes that more danger is to be apprehended from the legislature than from the companies.

A SLIGHT flavor of the Farmer's Alliance movement is cropping out in the Massachusetts legislature. The bill requiring hotels, restaurants and boarding houses to display a sign "oleomargarine used here" is one of its most fanatical demonstrations. The oleomargarine crusades of the past few years have already resulted in much harm to the poorer classes, without any substantial gain to the grangers. The sale of that commodity has increased steadily notwithstanding the intolerant legislation that has been directed against it. If any good was to result from such legislation, it would be perfectly justifiable but so far facts have failed to demonstrate the wisdom or utility of the policy.

THE PEOPLE of Medford are not entirely satisfied with being made martyrs in the extermination of the Gypsy Moth. The summary measures adopted by the State Commission, to prevent the spread of the pest, bears heavily on people of infested localities, but there is no doubt of an urgent necessity for arbitrary exercise of official powers, and those who condemn the acts of the Commission would be as likely to see it as anybody else, if they could only view the work from a different standpoint.

This is not an age of martyrs and it is not surprising that those who have to bear the burdens of war are restive under the yoke. But time is a healing balm that will assuage all their sufferings, provided that the moth is exterminated.

IT IS now pretty certain that Secretary Proctor will resign in July and there is scarcely any doubt that the portfolio will be tendered to Gen. Alger, unless he expresses a decided determination not to accept.

The situation is somewhat embarrassing for Gen. Alger. The secretaryship is a potent and highly desirable position, but to a man with Presidential aspirations the path is full of difficulties. If the General accepts, he thus enrolls himself as a benchman and supporter of the Harrison dynasty, and ends his hopes of contesting for the chief magistracy in 1892, and yet, by declining to accept the honor tendered he incurs the risk of losing both prizes.

The General and his friends will need to task their wits to their uttermost in the mean time, to ensure making the right move in this important juncture.

THE BILL authorizing cities and towns to establish electric light plants has been passed by the House of Representatives with a slight amendment. The debate was quite spirited on both sides, although the vote on engrossment was 153 in the affirmative to 30 in the negative. A number of conditions have been tacked on to the bill that will greatly retard the general adoption by the cities and towns of the Commonwealth that have heretofore favored municipal ownership. But guarded as the bill is, by numerous provisions for the protection of minorities, the whole scheme is strikingly unwise, as time will undoubtedly prove. It is almost impossible to predict the result of a vote of this town upon the question of establishing a plant under the proposed statute, which will require a two-thirds majority.

Opinions vary greatly on the question. Friends of the scheme on the one hand, fear a failure, while some of its strongest opponents predict its adoption. One gentleman who has been prominently identified in the electric light movement, said he thought with a vote under 800, the scheme would be defeated, but if the vote exceeded that number he felt confident it would prevail. In any event, it is improbable that a plant could be established before the first of next year and perhaps not before spring.

The question has been raised whether the passage of the law gives validity to the contract executed by the Electric Light Committee with the Edison company, and there seems to be quite a general popular belief that such will be the case, but this opinion is not shared to any great extent among the legal fraternity. The position taken being that the contract was void in its inception and could only be given validity by a ratification of the town, after the town acquired legal authority to make or ratify such a contract. If Peabody votes to install a plant, the question will become important, as it is said a number of companies are ready to compete for the contract, and it is not unlikely more satisfactory terms could be made for the town. Various opinions prevailed at the time the matter was voted upon, as to the advisability of putting in the system recommended by the committee, and had that question come squarely before the people instead of being a secondary consideration to the general one of whether we should have a town plant or not, a better expression might have been obtained upon the desirability of the system which the Edison Company proposed to put in.

THE HOUSE bill for redistricting the Commonwealth for Congressional purposes is in order for next Thursday. The feeling in this town is very strong against the proposed changes. There seems to be no good reason why we should be compelled to submit to it. Senator Southwick and Representative Appleton have both made known the sentiment of the town, but to no purpose. It is claimed that the 10,000 inhabitants of Peabody are needed where they are placed in the new division to equalize the numerical proportions of the districts. The real reason for the whole scheme of redistricting is, however, a political job to lift a lot of aspiring legislators into Congress. But we shall not be surprised to see similar results to those realized when the State Senatorial Gerrymander was foisted upon the voters of the Commonwealth. In that case we knew of five legislators in this county whose whole energies were bent to bring about the result obtained, with the idea of being returned to the State Senate. But alas! not one of the hopeful five was able to count up his Republican majorities in the districts they had so carefully plotted out, when the fall election returns came in, and all were left at home to wonder how it happened. The ambitious members of the present legislature, whose sole aim and object in every move is self aggrandizement, will be sorry if perchance their count of political noses proves erroneous. They will all do better to heed the desires of the people, and let well enough alone. The districts are well enough for the interests of the general public as they are.

THE STREET RAILWAY QUESTION

LAST TUESDAY evening a hearing was given by the Aldermen of Salem on the petition of the Essex Electric Street Railway Company for facilities for extending their road to the Willows in accordance with the grant to them of the Board of last year. Permission to erect poles and string wires is now asked for, so that the cars may run through from Peabody to the Willows, by electricity, and this seemingly very reasonable request was strenuously opposed by the rival street railway. So far was this spirit of opposition carried that force was threatened if certain necessary steps were taken for crossing the Naumkeag track as authorized by the grant from the Board of Aldermen. We can but think that such an exhibition of hostility to fair and honorable competition in a business that so intimately concerns the public, must operate to create sympathy and support for the company thus opposed. The people of both Salem and Peabody are well aware that it is for their interest to encourage competition in public carriers. They need but recall the indifference with which they were treated before the monopoly was broken. They can easily remember that the service of the Naumkeag road previous to the coming of the Essex was based wholly upon profits to be earned, and not at all upon the wishes or convenience of the public. The whole community is alive to the fact that the initiation of a competing road alone could have reduced all fares to the Willows to five cents. Everybody in Peabody, at least, has a vivid remembrance of the unwelcome transfer at Horse Railroad Square from a comfortable seat to a standing place on the outside of an antiquated car, if one was fortunate enough to get so much in the general scramble. But now how changed is all this! In these days of competition and of catering for the carrying of the public, a car can be found waiting on our Square at almost any time, and courteous employees willing and anxious to accommodate passengers in every way. In the face of these facts and of the great results of fair competition, does the Naumkeag Company expect to create any public feeling that they alone have a right to run to the Willows? If so, the management must, as been charged, be that of strangers and squatters in our midst, for no man or body of men "native, to the manor born," or of any degree of local acquaintance, would make such a mistake. We believe that the Salem authorities will be quick to respond to the very general wish of the constituents as well as of our people, and equalize as far as possible the privileges of the two competing roads as not only being equitable to them, but unmistakably for the public welfare.

DANA'S ABSOLUTELY CURES DISEASE!
ESSEX COUNTY.

The annual meeting of the Essex Institute was held Monday evening and the following officers were elected: President, Henry Wheeland; Vice Presidents, Abner Goodell, Jr. Frederick W. Putnam, Daniel B. Hagar, Robert S. Rantoul; Secretary, Henry M. Brooks; Treasurer, William O. Chapman; Auditor, Geo. D. Phippen; Librarian, Charles S. Osgood; Council, William H. Gov., Thomas F. Hunt, David M. Little, Richard C. Manning, Edward S. Morse, S. Endicott Peabody, David Pingree, Edmund B. Wilson, Geo. M. Whipple, Alden P. White. George D. Phippen retired voluntarily from the treasurer'ship. The report of the secretary shows that during the past year twenty-three meetings have been held by the society, five directors' meetings, and one field meeting at Baker's Island. Rev. Dr. G. T. Flanders of New Bedford, Prof. J. W. Fewkes of Boston, Dr. William Thornton Parker, Rosewell B. Lawrence of Medford, John T. Prince of Newtonville, Sylvester Baxter of Boston, Col. Henry Stone of South Boston, Mrs. Kate T. Woods, Rev. E. O. Dyer of South Braintree, Prof. Ernest F. Fennellosa, W. A. Mowry and others have read papers on various scientific, historical and other subjects. There have been 681 additions to the cabinets, contributed by 130 different friends of the institution. Over 7,000 people have visited the first church, which stands in rear of Plummer Hall. There have been twelve new members admitted to the society during the year, making the present membership 325.

The large and valuable additions to the cabinets makes the necessity for more building accommodations apparent, and the secretary urges the necessity of especial accommodations for historical relics. The income of invested funds is insufficient for making the improvements needed, and it will be done, if at all, by aid of friends. The secretary urges that efforts be made to increase the membership. Owing to the cramped condition, many valuable Hawthorne, Pickering, Orne and other family papers are tied up and kept away from general use. The secretary also recommended holding an exhibit of loaned portraits, of people connected with Salem and its history. After the regular business, Prof. John H. Sears and Dr. George A. Bates gave some interesting stereoscopic views.

Mr. Fred P. Porter, a son of Fred Porter of Salem was drowned at El Cajon, California, recently. He was swimming in San Diego bay at the time and swimming too far sank from exhaustion. A companion made an effort to rescue him but was unable to do so as they were too far from the shore.

Alderman Donahue is making himself notorious by his attacks upon what he conceives to be the evils of Gloucester's city government. Sometime since he figured quite conspicuously in the hearings upon city solicitor Pew's professional fees or salary and this time he arraigns City Marshal Sylvester for attempting to conceal a crime committed by a subordinate. An order suspending the City Marshal was adopted by a vote of 5 to 3. It is claimed that police officer John C. Read committed larceny in the building of Joseph Parsons and afterwards confessed his guilt but the Marshal took no notice of the affair.

Charles King of Middleton, a French Canadian by birth, died recently at the residence of his son with whom he has lived for a number of years. His age is said to have been 110 years, and it is claimed he has 600 descendants.

Rosie Dube was arrested Wednesday noon on a charge of attempting to burn one of the Naumkeag Steam Cotton company's mills Tuesday night. Her attempt was only averted by a fortunate discovery by the night watchman. No. 1 mill was to have been burned, the fire starting in the weave room.

State House Notes.

The Senate has passed to be engrossed the House bill making appropriations for the Massachusetts State Firemen's Association, for the Carney Hospital and for certain other expenses authorized by law.

It has also passed the bill raising the compulsory school age to 15 years in cities and towns where opportunity is given for industrial education.

In the Senate a bill has been offered, and put over, to allow the Governor to remove any of his civil appointees at any time for cause.

The dairy commission bill has been engrossed by the Senate after an amendment striking out the section requiring every hotel, boarding house, eating house, restaurant or lunch counter using oleomargarine or butyrine or any other substance in semblance of pure butter, to have conspicuously posted and plainly to be seen from the dining tables the words, "oleomargarine used here," under penalty of $50.

The House, by a substantial majority, advanced a stage the municipal lighting bill, with minor amendments, on Tuesday.

On the same day the House spent all the afternoon on the public bar bill, which it ordered to a third reading, 119 to 74, after refusing to refer it to the next General Court.

The House has laid on the table the street railway franchise bill, to allow time for consultation between all parties with possibility of compromise.

The Senate has refused to substitute for an adverse report a bill allowing the Governor to remove members of State boards for cause.

The House has reconsidered the engrossment of the municipal lighting bill, adopted an amendment similar to that offered by Mr. Quincy on Tuesday, and again engrossed the bill. This amendment is designed to protect present locations.

The Senate rejected, yesterday, the bill to provide for the appointment and removal of members of the board of prison commissioners, and the warrent and other officers of the state prison.

The House yesterday afternoon rejected the $1000 salary bill by a vote of 78 to 85.

The bill to legalize the action of the town of Danvers in establishing an electric light plant, and to enable the town to make and sell electric light and power, was taken from the House table and passed to be engrossed. Mr. Sawyer of Danvers said that it was necessary for action to be taken at once, owing to the situation of the matter.

Mr. Bennett of Everett had taken from the calendar the bill to establish a commission to revise the corporation and taxation laws, and to secure uniformity of legislation with other states. This was done and the bill was ordered to a third reading. Mr. Mellen of Worcester will move to amend on the next stage, so that the commission shall include men who favor an increased tax on personal property, as well as those who would put the tax on all real estate.

In the Senate, Mr. Stopford of Essex hoped the House bill to provide for the removal of members of the board of prison commissioners and the warden and other officers of the state prison would be rejected, inasmuch as it placed the warden wholly under the control of the commissioners. It would be better to leave the law as it is. The bill was refused a third reading—6 to 10.

By a vote from 84 to 34 the House adopted the substitute bill allowing savings banks to pay interest monthly on deposits.

The Senate will meet at 11 A. M. Monday, so as to visit Holyoke in reference to the Williamsset bridge in the afternoon.

The House refused to reconsider its reference of the assessors' bill to the next Legislature, and postponed until Monday action on the motion to reconsider the same action on the doom age bill.

SCROFULA

Is that impurity of the blood which produces unsightly lumps or swellings in the neck; which causes running sores on the arms, legs, or feet; which develops ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, often causing blindness or deafness; which is the origin of pimples, cancerous growths, or "humors;" which, fastening upon the lungs, causes consumption and death. It is the most ancient of all diseases, and very few persons are entirely free from it.

How Can It Be CURED

By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the remarkable cures it has accomplished, has proven itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. If you suffer from scrofula, try Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"Every spring my wife and children have been troubled with scrofula, my little boy, three years old, being a terrible sufferer. Last spring he was one mass of sores from head to feet. We all took Hood's Sarsaparilla, and all have been cured of the scrofula. My little boy is entirely free from sores, and all four of my children look bright and healthy."

ESSEX SS.
Court of County Commissioners. April Term, A. D. 1891.

Upon the petition of B. W. RUSSELL and others, praying for a highway to be laid on and constructed, beginning at the easterly terminus of Walnut street in the town of Peabody and extending easterly, and leading in an easterly direction to Grove street in Salem.

Notice having been duly given, to all persons and corporations interested therein, we, the County Commissioners for said County, having met, and viewed the premises, and heard the parties, who then and there desired to be heard, do adjudge that the public convenience, and necessity require that said highway should be laid out and constructed as prayed for in said petition, commencing at the easterly terminus of Walnut street in the town of Peabody in an easterly direction to Grove street in said Salem, at a point on Grove street near the tannery of James Dugan and on the northerly side thereof through land of Harmony Grove Cemetery Corporation and land of said Dugan.

In testimony whereof, we the said County Commissioners, have hereunto set our hands this 27th day of April, A. D. 1891.

MORTGAGEE'S SALE.

By P. F. Tierney, Auctioneer 252 Essex Street, Salem

By virtue of a power of sale contained in a mortgage deed given by Henry Bodge to Cornelius H. Buckley, dated September twenty-third, A. D. 1889, and recorded in Essex Registry of Deeds, South District, in Book 1280, leaf 128, for breach of the condition contained in said mortgage, and the purpose of foreclosing the same, will be sold at public auction, on the premises hereinafter described, on Wednesday, the tenth day of June, A. D. 1891, at 12 o'clock, noon, the premises by said mortgage deed conveyed, viz:—The lot of land, situated in Peabody, in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, which is bounded, beginning at a point on Lowell street, and thence running southerly by land now or formerly of John G. Walcott, parallel with and distant fifty-six and one-half feet from the northerly side of the underpinning of the new dwelling house on the premises, twenty rods; thence southeasterly by land now or late of said Walcott, eight rods; thence northeasterly by land now or late of said Walcott, parallel with and about fifty-six and one-half feet distant from the southeasterly side of the underpinning of said house, twenty rods, to said Lowell street; thence northeasterly by Lowell street, eight rods, to the point begun at. Being the same premises described in the deed recorded in said Registry, in Book 1185, leaf 22.

The Naumkeag Crossing.

The new device put in by the Naumkeag road, at the crossing of the Lawrence and Wakefield branches of the Boston & Maine railroad, which are the same as those laid last summer by the Essex Company, are giving excellent satisfaction. They relieve the jolt and jar almost entirely. The device is patented, and was invented by J. Henry Hodgkinson, of Salem, and consists of two parallel rails, so bolted together as to form a guard and prevent side motion of the cars, thus avoiding danger of getting off the track. Between the parallel rails are wedge-shaped treads of iron or steel upon which the flange of the wheels travel in crossing a steam road, raising the car by a gentle grade and allowing the wheels to run over the steam rails upon a level, or so nearly so as to make the passage easy and pleasant. The intervening space is filled at the base with wood, upon which a heavy coating of cement is spread, giving an easy bed for the wheels to travel as they pass from one rail of a steam road to another.

Various devices have been tried to overcome the difficulty caused by the statutes prohibiting street car companies making incisions in the rails of steam roads, but the appliance of Mr. Hodgkinson is far superior to any other now in the market, and so far as is now known, fills all the requirements.

Who Owns Boston?

The Senate is wrestling with the question of the ownership of land held in Boston and vicinity for speculative purposes. Bureau statistics are wanted by that august body to elucidate the problem. Senator Southwick of this town, as a member of the Treasury Committee called attention to the difficulty of obtaining the information. He stated that Mr. Wadlin of the Bureau of census and statistics told him the bill proposed, to accomplish the desired result was practical, and the committee to whom it had been referred, therefore reported against it. The expense of acquiring the information wanted, is estimated at about $100,000. It is thought that much property is held in and near Boston for speculative purposes, to the prejudice of the laboring classes who are obliged in consequence to go far out from the city to find dwellings at reasonable rates. Legislation is not very likely to make any material difference however, according to the opinions of those who ought to know.

Salem Oratorio Society.

The Salem Oratorio Society held its annual meeting in Academy Hall Monday evening. The Treasurer reported that the gross receipts of the three days' festival in April were $2079. The expenses were $1236 95 and the net income was $843 05. The receipts from membership fees were $384 50 and the ordinary expenditures $635 93. The entire receipts from all sources were $3997 57 and the expenditures for all purposes $2772 88, leaving a balance of $1224 69.

The following were elected Directors for the ensuing year: Charles W. Ward, Willis H. Ropes, John Pickering, Thomas M. Stimpson, Frank A. Brown, William F. Martin, Mrs. Charles B. Fowler, Mrs. W. S. Fenolosa, Miss A. F. Perkins.

The Jury Find Rev. George A. Andrews Guilty.

The Superior Court at Newburyport has been occupied for several days with the trial of Rev. George A. Andrews, on the charge of burning his store in Essex. In the course of the trial, the Reverend prisoner took the stand and testified that at the time of the fire he was in bed and asleep. A long train of circumstantial evidence of a very damaging nature was put in by the government, and it seems the jury failed to credit his testimony and yesterday brought in a verdict of guilty.

Secretary Blaine III

Secretary James G. Blaine is in ill health. It is thought by his physicians that he narrowly escaped an attack of apoplexy or paralysis two weeks ago, while in New York. He is now unable to resume his duties. Rumors of his being a complete wreck are said to be without foundation. But his case is critical.

Lieut. Schwaka's stories about finding the mosquitoes in Alaska a terrible nuisance are confirmed by E. Hazard Wells, the chief of the Arkell expedition, who has just returned from our northern possession. Mr. Wells and his party came near starving in the summer because all the game had left the low lands of the interior for a range of gigantic mountains to the north. Caribou, for instance, are driven into high altitudes to avoid the mosquitoes. Concerning the killing of bears by these insects, Mr. Wells is now prepared to vouch for the fact. "They settle around the eyes of the poor brutes and cause inflammation, which is followed by blindness. The bear then either dies of starvation or the inflammation extends to the brain."

"Old Hutch" in Lynn.

"Old Hutch" arrived in Lynn Thursday afternoon and visited Earle's Cafe, on Exchange street, where flanked by tables to protect him from the press of a curious crowd, he received his friends of long ago, until eleven o'clock. Enconced in his corner behind the friendly shelter of tables, he remarked, "I am safe from the reporters." And so he was; for although an item correspondent dodged around until 11 o'clock, and finally followed him to the Sagamore, where he spent the night, the nearest he got to an interview was a promise that when he returns to Lynn in a short time, for a regular visit, the same would be accorded.

At Earle's he was an object of much attraction. Many people went in and called for refreshments to get a sight of the man of varied fortunes, and he humorously said to the proprietor, "Let them all in, John; I am as useful to you tonight as a monkey to a organ-grinder." The great speculator had several touching interviews during the evening with old friends.

It would appear that he has not forgotten the poverty of his early days; for when he registered at the Sagamore he remarked to the clerk, "I want you to understand, a dollar bed is good enough for me."

He took the early train for Boston Friday morning. It is expected he will spend considerable time in this vicinity.

Women as Physicians.

During twenty-three years of association with women students and practitioners, writes Dr. Phoebe J. B. Wait, in the Ladies' Home Journal, I know of many who have achieved fortunes, and who are enjoying a lucrative practice.

Prejudice? Yes, there is prejudice against them. But it is the same prejudice that does not allow women to have political suffrage; the same that objects to women being anything but housekeepers or butterflies. There is no foundation for it whatever, and it will pass away in time. I find that foreigners, Germans especially, who have been accustomed to midwives in their own country, take most kindly to female practitioners. It is the American people that stick to the old exploded theory of woman's inability to own and manage property, to buy and sell, or to follow a learned profession. During the last quarter-century (thirty-eight medical colleges have been opened to women, and seven others are exclusively for women. In the West they are more liberal than in the East. There are now upwards of three thousand women practitioners, where, twenty-five years ago there were but a score.

It is argued that women dislike the sight of blood. Of course they do. So do men. When I commenced the study of medicine I was fully convinced that women would not make good surgeons. But a long experience has reversed that conviction. Many of them undoubtedly possess the nerve to perform any surgical operation. They do their work in a masterly manner, and without flinching. The theory that woman's nervous temperament and sympathetic nature militates against her in this connection, is absolutely false.

Papa, what do you call your office? Well, the world calls an editor's office the Sanctum Sanctorum, but I don't. Then I guess, and the boy was thoughtful for a moment, then mamma's office is a spunkum spunkum, isn't it?

Speaking of people who mean well, the Lewiston Journal tells of a man down East who felt very bad when his son left him to take up his residence in Boston. The boy, seeing the old gentleman's grief, said:—Never mind, father, you must come and see me at the first opportunity. The father looked at the son earnestly, and with a voice husky from emotion, replied:—William, my boy, if I live till I die—and goodness knows whether I will or not—I'll see Boston before I leave Bucksport.

THEY ARE LIABLE!

The doctors are all liable to be mistaken. They were in my case. It cost me $200, because they said I had heart disease, and then told me I must die. Grandmother said it was liver complaint and $20 worth of Sulphur Bitters cured me.—Jennie Poor, Rockport, Mass.

A Reversed Judgment.

By ROBERT C. V. MEYERS.

CHAPTER III.

I threw the roll of notes upon the blazing coals.

All at once there came a low knock on the study door. His wife roused herself, and with a little careful sigh turned from the fire.

"How sweetly Estelle is singing to-night!" she said. Then in a raised voice she called aloud, "Come in!" The door opened, the music from the other room gushed in, and a white capped maid entered and went up to her mistress and said some words in a low tone of voice. "You know, Catharine," said the lady, "that I am trying to put a stop to this."

"I know, ma'am," returned the maid, "but she looked so fagged out I couldn't be so snappish to her."

Maybe the judge's reflections as to his younger life caused him to feel that he owed his wife a little more than usual. He looked up.

"What is it?" he asked. "Anything I can do for you, my dear?"

"It is one of those tiresome women come to speak with you," his wife answered wearily. "Must the mothers and wives and all the female relatives of the men you try come to ask your clemency for the accused ones? Why should people be so preposterous? A jury are the judges of the facts; a judge has nothing to do with conviction."

"You are a good lawyer," smiled the judge, gathering up his loose papers, "and like most women you are against your own sex. You don't say a word about the men who come here."

"These women irritate me," she went on. "The criminal class appears to single out the houses of judges. I suppose they argue that personal appeals will lighten sentences about to be imposed. I believe some of the women who bother us borrow the babies they bring with them; a baby is supposed to be a most pathetic adjunct to an appeal. Do you remember that old toothless one who came here with twins in long clothes?"

"Then the wife and baby of an accused man are down stairs?"

"His mother, sir," ventured Catharine. "And without a baby."

"Well, I suppose I shall have to see her," said the judge's wife. "It is the mother of the man whose case you are engaged on."

"What man?"

"Dunlap."

Again the name of the man may have influenced the judge. As his wife arose from her chair he said:

"My dear, perhaps you had better slip on a shawl. Your diamonds, your gay dress—they are such a contrast to the woman you will see."

"Nonsense!" she said, "nonsense!"

"And, Catharine," said the judge, as the music in the adjoining room became more brilliant, with a man's voice added to it, "tell Miss Estelle I should like to see her."

His wife gave him a quick glance before sailing from the study, her velvet train swishing a yard behind her, and cautiously followed by Catharine. Then the music stopped abruptly, there was a light movement outside the door, and twenty years of blondness and beauty entered the study, a good many tinkling ornaments jingling as she came along.

"Papa," she said, "you sent for me?"

"Sweetheart," said the judge, "I should like you to interrupt your concert for a few minutes. There is a poor woman down stairs, the mother of a man I am trying, and the music, our cheerfulness—"

"Oh, you sensitive papa, you!" was the merry interruption. "Is that all you wanted me for?"

"That is all."

"Then I will go back to Mr. Elwyn—do you hear him picking out a tune on the piano? He says he only knows two tunes: the one is 'God Save the Queen,' and the other isn't. Did you ever hear that before? And—papa, he is all alone in there."

"And I am all alone in here," she looked at him, and the color rushed to her face.

"What do you mean?" she said. "There's a difference."

The judge leaned back in his chair and regarded her.

"Surely there's a difference," he said slowly; "surely there's a difference. Come here!"

She went around to him, putting her arms about his neck.

"Kiss me," he said, "my daughter."

So she placed her rosy face up against his, the faint perfume exhaled by her garments, her tinkling beads and bangles almost as a parenthesis in the caress.

"Now go back to the lonely young man," said the judge, gently pushing her from him. "Surely there's a difference."

But she kissed him once again and smoothed his face a little before she gayly left him, and he waited, listening for the last faint jingle of her ornaments.

to write before going to bed—the letter regarding his coming nomination for governor. Surely there was a difference, as Estelle had said, but surely the father owed his daughter this new honor despite the difference between his loneliness and that of her lover.

The governorship—and after that! He looked up at the limning of a face on the wall—Webster! The cabinet! His wife had said it!

Suddenly there came the sweep of the velvet robe, and his wife entered the room.

"The woman appeals to me," she said. "She wishes to see you. What you said to me regarding my dress as I went down to her maybe rebuked me, for I could not turn her away. Will you see her? She looks sensible."

The judge recalled himself. "I can do little for her," he responded with an air of resignation. "But so long as you have told her you would get my 'yes' or 'no' I suppose I must prepare myself for a bad quarter of an hour. Let her come up."

His wife left the room. She called "Catharine," gave a low order and passed by the study door to the room where the daughter kept the young man from being lonely.

There was a laboring up the stairs, the touch of garments on the wall, and in the doorway stood a woman. The prisoner's dock, the witness stand, may be supposed to hold pale faces, but the judge had never before looked upon a face so utterly devoid of color as this woman's, framed by gray hair and dimly illumined by faded eyes. Perhaps the regularity of the features, the fine outline and the immobility of the expression tended to accentuate the absence of coloring in the epidermis as much as the dun colored gown and bonnet the woman wore. At the first glance he had of her the judge thought of a splendid intaglio cut into sard which was among his wife's jewels.

Then the woman's eyes were fixed on his. She stood on the threshold for an instant before she glided over into the room and closed the door behind her. When she spoke the passionless quality of her voice was as though that were also decolorized.

"Your wife mistook me for Harry Dunlap's mother," she said, "and I did not correct her. I am his aunt—he is the son of my husband's brother. I came in regard to his case. I wish to learn if extenuating circumstances may not tend to lessen the term of his imprisonment. The missing money is a large amount; he was a trusted bookkeeper, and the betrayal of that trust makes the offense all the more heinous."

She put her hand to her throat as though there was an obstruction there. Then she went on in her dull voice:

"The reputation which you bear for integrity, the confidence the community places in you, the applause of the papers over a future honor likely to be yours actuated me to come to you with the recital of that part of my nephew's case which the trial failed to bring out."

Her eyes had drifted around the room as she last spoke, as though she compared the comfort there with something that she knew, and now they rested on the portrait of the judge's wife in all its beauty and idealization. Her profile was toward the judge, and whatever doubt he might have had before was dissipated, and he uttered her name.

"Yes," she said, turning to him; "yes, for all the change you recognize me. I knew that you would. Now listen to me. I know that you regard the crime of which my nephew is accused very sternly; there has been too much wrong doing by trusted men, and leniency would almost amount to complicity."

Again her hand went up to her throat and pressed there.

"As I say, this man is my nephew. I have never had any children. His parents were dead when I married his uncle. He came to me a mere infant, and loved me as his mother. My married life was not happy, as I knew it could not be, for I never loved my husband, who loved me and knew how I regarded him. I wronged him in marrying him; my carelessness of his regard for me only tended to develop in him traits which a wife's affection might have eradicated. His nephew was everything to me; his innocent love kept me from despair when my husband went wrong time and time again—for which wrong I blamed myself, seeing that he cared deeply for me while he was of small account to me. All women cannot love because they are loved. My husband became a gambler, a drunkard. He ill treated me, and my nephew protected me as a son might protect his mother. You will not need to hear details; you know many a similar story in your professional experience. This money, which my nephew is accused of stealing, was in his care. He had taken a half holiday that he might consult an oculist regarding his eyes, which close application to his duties had impaired. He volunteered to deposit in bank a large sum of money paid that day to his firm. First, though, he went to his oculist. He was detained longer than he had expected to be; it was after 3 o'clock, and the bank was closed. He did not return the money to the firm, but brought it home with him, determining to take it back with him in the morning. He never took it back with him. He acknowledged that he stole it, and despite all promises, despite legal acumen, he has not divulged where it is or what he did with it. Why? Because he does not know where it is—because he never stole it. He put the roll of bank notes under his pillow that night; in the morning it was gone. He believes that his uncle, the gambler, the drunkard, took it. He accepted the shame in order to shield me; his great, unbounded son's love would do that for me, for he thought the last blow I could stand would be to know that I had made my husband a common thief, as I had always said that through my not loving him I was morally responsible for his faults. But my husband did not take the money! He knew that it was in the house and he coveted it. Thus in the night I went to my nephew's room and took the roll of bank notes from under his pillow to put them should make it his business to see that his home is comfortably furnished. His wife will think more of him for it, knowing that he has her welfare at heart while he is away. Perhaps even now, the house needs another chair or two, or a new lounge, or a carpet, or maybe a few pictures to brighten it up and make it more cheerful. Look around and see, and remember that we are the people to furnish them to you at LOWEST LIVING PRICES, and on Easy Terms of Payment, if you wish it that way.

Get Our Prices.

A Wife need never be without that little piece of furniture which she wants, if she would call her husband's attention to the fact, and get him to learn OUR price for it; and if money is a little tight with him, why, remind him of our easy payment plan by which he can enjoy the benefits of its use while paying for it. Look through the house, and send us a list of what you would like to have. We'll quote you prices that will surprise you.

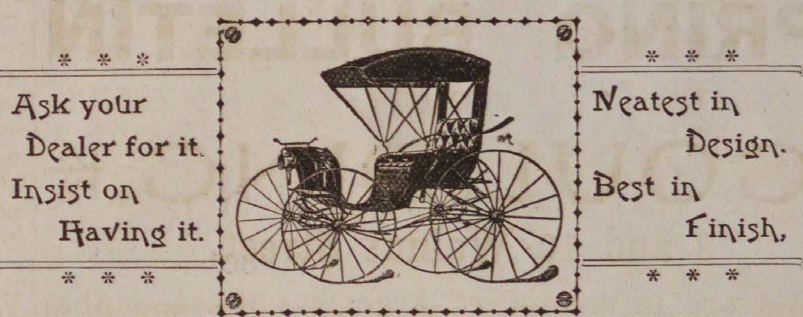

N.B.—The fact that we are the largest house-furnishing establishment in the world is a pretty good recommendation.

ASSESSORS' NOTICE.

To the Inhabitants and other Persons liable to pay Taxes in the Town of Peabody.

The Assessors of the Town of Peabody hereby give notice to the inhabitants of said town, and all other persons liable to pay taxes therein, that their office will be open on and after the first day of May, and from that date to the first day of June, for the purpose of receiving and examining the returns of all persons liable to be taxed in said town, and for the purpose of receiving and examining the returns of all persons liable to be taxed in said town, and for the purpose of receiving and examining the returns of all persons liable to be taxed in said town.

Copartnerships
having a place of business in Peabody, and also in some other city or town within the Commonwealth, are especially notified to bring in a statement in accordance with the 24th section of the 11th chapter of the Public Statutes. Shipping and business income are not taxable to a firm, but each co-partner must include these items in his individual return.

Mortgaged Real Estate.
"Any mortgage or mortgage of real estate may bring in to the assessors of the town or city where such real estate lies," within the time specified in this notice, a statement, under oath, of the amount due on each separate lot or parcel of such real estate, and the name and residence of every holder of an interest therein as a mortgagee or mortgagor, or of such property, and the name and residence of each of two or more places, or when a recorded mortgage includes for one sum two or more estates or parts of an estate, an estimate of the amount of the interest in each estate or part of an estate which shall be given in such statement." (Chap. 175 of the Acts of 1882.) When a statement in conformity with the law above quoted is brought in, the real estate therein returned will be assessed under sections 14, 15 and 16, of chapter 11 of the Public Statutes. But in cases where the mortgagee of the real estate has agreed in writing to pay all taxes assessed thereon, NO STATEMENT OR RETURN IS REQUIRED from either mortgagee or mortgagor, unless requested by the assessors in writing.

Estates in Trust.
Persons holding estates in trust, whether for minor or otherwise, are particularly requested to furnish the assessors with statements in relation to such estates. When trust estates, or estates of persons deceased, have been divided during the past year, or have changed hands from other causes, the trustee, executor or administrator, or other person interested, is required and warned to give notice of such change; and in default of such notice, will be held to pay the tax assessed, although such estate has been wholly distributed and paid over.

Any person bringing in a list of all his taxable personal property will be assessed upon the valuation thereof, and any one neglecting to furnish the assessors with such list within the time above specified will be deemed at a legal meeting of the Board of Assessors, agreeably to the law of the Commonwealth. All persons will take notice that statements of personal property must be in writing, and subscribed under oath before one of the Assessors, at their office, on or before the FIRST DAY OF JUNE, and that the personal property of all taxable persons must be estimated by the Board. NOTWITHSTANDING A VERBAL STATEMENT OR INFORMAL WRITTEN COMMUNICATION TO ANY ONE OR MORE OF THE ASSESSORS. (Pub. Stat., chap. 11, sec. 39 and 41.) When a person has failed to bring in a list or schedule of all his taxable property in conformity with this notice, no abatement shall be assessed upon such person for personal property can be granted, "unless such tax exceeds by more than fifty per cent. the amount which would have been assessed to that person on personal estate if he had seasonably brought in said list; and if said tax exceeds by more than fifty per cent. the said amount, the abatement shall be only of the excess above the said fifty per cent." (Pub. Stat., Chap. 11, Sec. 73.)

Any person taxable in Peabody for personal property can obtain a BLANK SCHEDULE for making a list of such property, with directions for proper filling the same, by applying at the assessors' office.

Literary, Benevolent, Charitable and Scientific Corporations.

The attention of the officers of all Literary, Benevolent, Charitable and Scientific Corporations, located in Peabody, is particularly called to the requirements of Chapter 217 of the Acts of 1882 as the property of said corporations, both personal and real, will be subject to taxation unless the law is complied with. Blank forms for the purpose can be had at the office of the assessors.

TOWN OF PEABODY.

BOARD OF HEALTH REGULATIONS.

THE Board of Health appointed by the Town hereby make and publish as required by law, the following "Regulations for the Public Health and Safety."

The Board shall make such regulations as it judges necessary for the public health and safety. Whenever a violation of any such regulation shall be found, a sum not exceeding one hundred dollars, (Extract from the Public Statutes Chap. 80, § 18.

REGULATION 1ST. It being the duty of the Board of Health of the Town of Peabody, to make such examination of the premises of persons residing in said town as they shall deem necessary for the public welfare, the Board hereby give notice and require that all premises within said limits shall be ready for inspection by the Board on and after May 20th, 1891.

REGULATION 2d. No house, offal, filthy water, dead animals or refuse of any kind, shall be thrown upon the streets by any resident; and no butcher, fish monger or vendor of merchandise, shall leave any refuse upon the streets of this town.

REGULATION 3d. If, upon inspection, any rubbish, offal, decaying animal or vegetable matter, or filth of any kind be found in, under or about any building, within any yard or enclosure, upon any premises, or in the ponds or water courses of said Town of Peabody, or if any privy or drain be found so discharging as to prove a nuisance, and offensive or deleterious to the public health, the owner or occupant of such property or premises shall be notified by the Board to remove or abate such nuisance within twenty-four hours after said notice has been served.

REGULATION 4TH. If any owner or occupant of property as aforesaid, after having been duly notified, shall neglect to comply with the requirements of the above section, the Board of Health shall cause any and all nuisances to be removed or abated at the expense of the owner or occupants.

REGULATION 5TH. On and after June 1st, 1891, swine shall be kept within the following limits in this town except by permit from the Board of Health:—Commencing at the boundary stone east of Holly street and running on the Southernly side of Margin street seven hundred feet; thence Northwesterly in a straight line to Liberty, five hundred feet; thence Northerly of Mr. Simon P. Buxton's residence; thence Westerly in a straight line to Andover street bridge; from the bridge Southwesterly in a straight line, to Swampscott avenue; through Swampscott avenue to Strongwater brook; thence Easterly in a straight line to the Eastern end of the Salem line to Willow, Shillaber, Aborn, Main, Grove, Walnut, Mt. Vernon, Tremont and Highland streets to the boundary stone begun at. No goats shall be kept within the limits of this Town, except in pastures, or in enclosures.

REGULATION 6TH. No public funeral shall be held over the remains of any person having died of SMALL POX, SCARLET FEVER, DIPHTHERIA, TYPHOID FEVER or MEMBRANOUS CROUP, without the written permit of the Board of Health, under such regulations as may prevent the spread of either of such diseases.

REGULATION 7TH. The remains of any person dying of either of said diseases shall be placed in a tight or sealed coffin, and shall not thereafter be exposed to view or disturbed, except for burial, and no undertaker or other person shall be permitted to take to any house, or use any bier or stand with draperies, which is to be used at any other funerals.

REGULATION 8TH. No owner, driver or any other person having charge of any hackney carriage or other vehicle used as a public conveyance, shall convey in or upon said

carriage or other vehicle, any person sick or infected with the Small Pox, Scarlet Fever, Diphtheria, or any other contagious disease, or the body of any person who has died of any contagious disease, without the written permit of the Board of Health, to be given under such regulations as may prevent the spread of such disease, and every vehicle which shall be so used shall be immediately disinfected under the supervision of the Board of Health, and before any other person shall be conveyed in or upon it. This regulation is intended to cover all cases where persons are conveyed from funerals at houses where any one has died of any contagious disease.

REGULATION 9TH. It shall be the duty of occupants of dwellings in which any person or persons may be sick with SMALL POX, DIPHTHERIA, SCARLET FEVER, TYPHOID FEVER or MEMBRANOUS CROUP, and Physicians attending such cases forthwith to notify the Board of Health of the fact.

REGULATION 10TH. The occupants of buildings or dwellings where Small Pox exists, or has existed, shall prohibit and prevent the removal of clothes, bedding and upholstery, or other articles, from the infected buildings, except the removal is made by the Board of Health, or under direction of the Board of Health.

REGULATION 11TH. The occupants of buildings or dwellings where Scarlet Fever and Diphtheria exist, shall withdraw all children attending school, from the same, and the teachers of said schools shall NOT allow their children thus withdrawn to enter a school until the child shall present a certificate from the attending Physician vouching for the safety thereof.

REGULATION 12TH. Night soil carts shall not be allowed to pass through the streets in the thickly settled portions of the town between sunrise and sunset, from June 1st to Nov. 1st, without a special permit from the Board of Health.

REGULATION 13TH. Any person in the town of Peabody who knows or suspects any domestic animal has contagious disease, such as glanders in horses or cholera in swine, must report the same to the Board of Health. The penalty for neglect to do so is fine or imprisonment.

The above is in accordance with the provisions of Chapter 252 of the Acts of 1887.

The Board earnestly requests the co-operation of every individual, in securing the desirable sanitary condition, to promote which the foregoing regulations are framed.
WM. S. OSBORNE, Chairman, Board
GEO. M. PROBST, M.D.,
THOS. J. RELIHAN, Clerk, of Health.

"Section 1, chap. 98 of the laws of 1884. When a householder knows that a person within his family is sick of small pox, diphtheria, scarlet fever or any other disease dangerous to the public health, he shall immediately give notice thereof to the selectmen or board of health of the town in which he dwells, and upon the death, recovery or removal of such persons, the rooms occupied and the articles used by him shall be disinfected by such householder in a manner approved by the board of health. Any person neglecting or refusing to comply with either of the above provisions shall forfeit a sum not exceeding one hundred dollars."

REMARKABLE FACTS.

Heart disease is supposed to be incurable, but when properly treated a large proportion of cases can be cured. Thus Mrs. Elmira Hatch, of Elkhart, Ind. and Mrs. Mary L. Baker, of Ovid, Mich., were cured after suffering 20 years. S. C. Linburger, druggist at San Jose, Ill., says that Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, which cured the former, "worked wonders for his wife." Levi Logan, of Buchanan, Mich., who had heart disease for 30 years, says two bottles made him feel like a new man. Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure is sold by Wm. T. Lee. Book of wonderful testimonials free.

The Boston "Transcript" says that the old story is matched of the Boston woman who, having gone to heaven, reappeared in a seance and said, when asked if she was happy there, "Well, it isn't Boston." The new story is of a Boston man who dreamed he was on the other side, and was surprised to find his wife and daughters all at home (which, by the way, was quite such a home as he pays taxes on here.) He expressed his surprise at the table, and the feminine contingent responded in a mournful chorus, "Oh there's no where to go; there are no lectures here."

Ex-Queen Natalie has been expelled from Serbia by order of the ministry. After a gallant defence of students and citizens of Belgrade, a strong force of gendarmes succeeded in forcing an entrance to her palace and entering her apartments, aroused her from her slumbers and ordered her immediate departure from Serbian territory. The Queen calmly replied—she would yield to force, and requested the students who had so gallantly defended her to make no further resistance. She was then allowed to dress, and bidding adieu to the leaders of her defenders the exiled Queen departed for the palace of Sinai at Bucharest. During the struggle for her defence, one man was killed and fifty wounded.

If you don't want to be robbed of your good name don't have it inscribed upon your umbrella.

Then don't you think it would be best to have a bed of pansies in the back yard, my dear? said Mrs. Shuttle to Job. Not at all. After a while you will learn to put out your showy plants in the front yard. Plant tomatoe cans and ash barrels only in the back yard.

in a place of safety. As I left the room a hand grasped my arm; my husband had come for the money and discovered what I had done. He led me down stairs and there he demanded the money. All the hatred that was in me asserted itself, and I said hot words to him. He struck me, and he had never struck me before. The fire was burning in the stove; I threw the roll of notes upon the blazing coals. "Now," I said, "proclaim me a thief. Give me a prison cell; it will be heaven to any further life with you." But he faced me smiling. "I will do more than that," he said. "My wife shall never be called a thief; Henry shall be accused of the theft, and I dare you to enlighten him as to the truth." It was so; his revenge on me was complete. I would not, indeed, dare to tell my dear boy, for he loves me, and he has idealized me into a martyr, a saint. I am all that he has in the world; to make me less than he thinks I am would ruin his belief in heaven itself, and in me who have only him and his faith in me to carry me through my wasted life. He is glad to sacrifice himself for me. He will come forth from prison a strong man, and we can go somewhere where we are unknown, and he can begin life all over again. But if he knows the truth will he not think me a creature who loved him and his fair name not so much as I loved the idea of thwarting my husband? My husband has been drinking hard since this affair, and today he died. The papers are full of your praise. Among other things they say you have the distinction of never having had a decision of yours reversed by the higher court. I wish you to reverse the decision you have made in this case. Now you know why I am here. Do you believe that I am telling you the truth?" Believe her!

CHAPTER IV.

She felt the touch of lips.

The judge had not spoken since she entered the room except to whisper her name. Every word she said smote him; his long experience had given him many instances of women wronged by men. Here was a woman as deeply wronged by a man as she could be—and the man was himself. All that she was he had made her; the wreck of all that should have made her other than she was; her wretched married life, her husband's downfall, her nephew's disgrace, her own torture that should last as long as she—had done it all. What misery of soul had been hers since that day when she had stood before him and asked him if he wished to marry her! Her love for him had made this ruin—and he had loved her and wronged her love. She had always been fair to look upon; she would have been beautiful with other environments than had been hers, more beautiful than his wife; the education she had gleaned somehow or other, her dignity of speech, could not he himself have brought it about and molded her into a brilliant woman? She had loved him, and her love for him had wrecked her and all those nearest her. Did his wife love him? Had not ambition, rather than passionate affection, brought her to him; had not ambition, rather than the maternal feeling of this woman for her nephew, made his wife anxious for this match between Estelle and John Elwyn?

Believe her! To doubt her would have been to exculpate himself. Believe her! Though the woman watching him may have thought him only cold and callous. "What?" she cried. "Do you hesitate? Do you feel that nothing is my due? Have I not sufficiently accused you?" With a despairing gesture she threw herself at his feet. Believe her!

"No, no," she said pleadingly, "I do not accuse you—you are innocent, the whole world is innocent, only I am not. I came to you because I am not quite dead, and the affection that made you its idol holds to this child of my adoption with all the tenacity that availed it so little of old. I loved you once, and that should be something to you. I ask for something for my dear boy, as I ask you to screen me for his sake from justice. Will there not be sufficient punishment for me when it is always before me that I send him to prison and must withhold the truth from him? I—I—" She could say no more. She knelt there with uplifted pallid face.

And the judge! "Salome!" he said—nothing more. But the agony, the remorse, the grief in that word were apparent to her who heard. She looked at him, her life surely concentrated in that look. Then she rose to her feet and tottered, and he put out his arm to support her. "Oh, Salome! Salome!" he said. He held her thus a little while, and from the adjoining room came the low murmur of happy voices, while from the wall looked down upon him the pictured eyes of his wife. The face of the woman he held had undergone a strange alteration. What years of privation and repression had wrought still remained there, but it was as though a soft light had flooded down over brow and eyes.

She disengaged herself from him, and he took the roll of papers he had written that evening, crushing it in his hand. "To-morrow," he said, "I place in the hands of your nephew's employers the amount of the money that is missing."

My word will be taken for whatever I shall say. And—I will have the sentencing of your nephew! I can say no more."

"He will know the truth," she cried in sudden terror; "my boy will know what I did."

"When you tell him."

"And you say that you will have the sentencing of him. You mean that you will make his sentence light?"

"Yes—the lightest."

"Do you know that people will blame you for that? They will call you unjust; and then there is your chance of being governor; may not that be weakened by what you would do?"

She still thought of him and his welfare despite her own great pain. His eyes were looking into hers, his face came nearer her than cheek; she heard his troubled breathing, and then she felt the touch of lips she had not felt since she was a young, passionate girl.

"Robert!" she said softly, and he put his hands up over his eyes and knew that she went from him, without another word, without another look.

Half an hour later the judge's wife rustled into the study. She was radiant. "Asleep?" she said brightly, going to the table where her husband sat. "Then wake up and let me tell you how glad I am that Dunlap woman came when she did. For when I went to Estelle and John they had been having a little tiff, which I quickly patched up, and the reconciliation, as all reconciliations will do, led to far greater tenderness than before. John will speak to you to-morrow, and Estelle is in the seventh heaven. 'Why,' she said as he raised his face, 'how old you look. It is all that Dunlap case, and—'"

"Will you leave me?" he said in a dominating tone of voice hitherto unknown to her.

"Mercy!" she smiled. "You are angry because I helped to expedite matters a little with Estelle and John?"

"I am not angry," said the judge. "But I should like to be alone. I—I have a troublesome matter to think of."

She leaned over and put her lips to her husband's forehead. "I had forgotten your letter to Gen. Wayne in regard to the nomination," she said. "I am so happy on account of Estelle and John that I forget everything. Go on, my dear; apres moi le deluge—the capital of the state, the cabinet, governor!"

She went from the room humming. In the room beyond the music was resumed; from outside came the jingle of a car bell. The pictured eyes of justly celebrated men—had there been no romance in the lives of those men?—looked down as asking the occupant of the room by what right he should assume the prerogative of the higher position offered him, while the eyes of his wife demanded by what right he should refuse any prerogative offered him. But the judge heeded no fancied question, heeded no question he himself might have asked. He sat there motionless, while the voice of his daughter sang a song of love and truth to the man who loved and trusted her.

THE END.

Wyoming's Woman Miner.
Mrs. Shane, a widow with two children, came to Wyoming two years ago and took up her residence in Jawbone gulch, Silver Crown mining district, where she took a claim and with her own hands has kept up the assessment work. The claim promises to be a paying one, and already she has uncovered a body of rich gold quartz, with indications of richer ore as depth is gained.

Mrs. Shane is a soldier's widow, and is a lady of fine education. Her cabin in Jawbone gulch bears evidence of refinement, and while it is in one of the most out of the way places in the camp she has any number of visitors, among whom will be found the best people of Silver Crown and the surrounding country.

To judge from appearances she is about thirty-five years old. She has brown hair, blue eyes and fair and intellectual face. For the past year she has been teaching the Silver Crown public school, by which means she has made her living while waiting for her mine to reach pay.—Cor. Denver Republican.

Doctors Are Safe.
When the devil was sick his eagerness to become a monk is historical. A small New Yorker has been finding in the same way that altered conditions have a pronounced effect upon one's ambition. He is the son of a lawyer, and his admiration for his father has led him to announce frequently that when he became a man he intended to be in "just the same business as papa." He fell ill, however, and the services of the family physician were sought with prompt and fortuitous effect. Convalescence is apt to engender reflection, and the small Robert became thoughtful the other afternoon, with this result: "I guess, mamma," he said, apropos of nothing, "I will not be in papa's business when I grow up. I would rather be a doctor, because, you see, he can't die."—Her Point of View in New York Times.

A Queer Whim.
An English nobleman a good many years ago took it into his head to live for several weeks on Mount Etna in the refuge 1,000 feet or so below the crater. This worthy, but slightly cracked, gentleman endured his hard fare of biscuits and tinned meats well enough for a fortnight at a time. Every fifteenth day, however, he rode down the mountain to the nearest village, some twenty miles away, and reveled in all the savory dishes the innkeeper could put before him; after which banquet he returned to his mountain perch, inured once again to comparative privation.—All the Year Round.

An Old Story with a Modern Hero.
One day when Dr. Brooks was calling at the house of a parishioner a little boy of the family, who had been under the awe of Dr. Brooks as long as he could remember, ventured to ask the great man, "Oh, Dr. Brooks, were you in the ark?" His mother endeavored to hush him up, but the boy went on, "Oh, I guess you wasn't, 'cause the animals was all in pairs, and if there was another like you it would 'a' sinked the ark!"—Boston Transcript.

The Intelligent Composer.

There are some things that the average printer cannot or will not do, and some that he both can do and does. The former are not nearly so numerous as the latter, so they may be catalogued before a schedule is attempted of his virtues.

The average compositor cannot be persuaded that there is such a word as "ingenious." He is certain to make it into "ingenious" at least nine times out of ten; and then, to restore the average between the u and the i, he is very likely to make "insidious" into "insiduous," probably misled by "deceituous," which he uniformly gets right.

His pons asinorum, however, is "consensus," which he will set up "consensus" in spite of the united efforts of writer, proof-reader, and the whole staff of editors. The word "consensus" seems to carry him off his feet, and he lives and dies in the belief that the longer word is "census," with the "con" prefixed.

Every printing office has what are called "style rules," what are intended to be followed as closely as possible. A common, though not universal, rule is that figures are to be used instead of printing the numbers out at length, but this rule could hardly excuse the compositor for setting up the familiar line of the old hymn so that it read "10,000,000" (ten thousand thousand) "are their tongues, but all their joys are 1," or for spoiling the editor's quotation from the song, "Meet Me in the Lane at Half-Past Nine," by setting it up, "Meet Me in the Lane at 9.30."

One more illustration completes the catalog of his ordinary misdeeds. Whenever an attempt is made to quote the celebrated chapter "On the Snakes of Iceland," which is comprised in the words, "There are no snakes in Iceland," the compositor, no matter how legible his copy, will convert "Iceland" into "Ireland," the St. Patrick legend being apparently more familiar to him than the history of Iceland.

But now let us see what the compositor can do and does do every day of his life. He takes a manuscript, the chirography of which would make the lid of a Chinese tea-chest blush with envy, translates it into the vernacular as he goes along, corrects the spelling and the grammar, and often times the rhetoric, and turns it out, not as the author wrote it, but as he intended to write it. He sets up better English than most men can write; he can detect errors of fact as well as of style; he can give the horse editor points on spotting matters, and the religious editor on theology; he can appreciate even the merits of a discussion on the tariff, and detect the fallacies in a profound leader on economies; and he can do more hard and intelligent work in a given time, if he has to, than any other sort of handiworkman.

Setting off, then, his eccentricities and idiosyncrasies against his fund of general information, his knowledge of a wide range of subjects, and his ability to discriminate between good and bad literary work, it is surely no misnomer to call him the "intelligent compositor."—San Francisco Chronicle.

The first modern war ship constructed in a Japanese navy-yard was launched recently at Yokosuka. The occasion was significant of the Japanese not to be dependent for their iron-clads and cruisers upon foreign countries. The Hashidate the vessel launched, is designed for coast defense, and has a displacement of 4300 tons, with a length of 295 feet, and a beam of 50 1-2 feet. But the Japanese, while endeavoring to build their own ships, are still compelled to import the materials of construction, the machinery and the armament.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all other Throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellow-men. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. NOTED AND QUOTED.

The subject of fire hydrants is one of much interest in Wakefield at present, and when the matter of purchasing the plant of the Wakefield Water Company is brought before the voters for action upon the report and recommendations of the committee now investigating the subject, there will be a decided difference in opinion manifested. From facts which we have ascertained, it is found that the average price which Massachusetts towns and cities pay for hydrants, is $33 per year. This includes the city of Boston, and the above rate is confined to places which have ten hydrants per mile of water pipe. There are twenty-five hydrants in the town of Wakefield, and they average about four to a mile. The contract now existing between the town and the company provides that for the original sixty hydrants, the town pays the sum of fifty dollars each, and for the remaining hydrants the price is forty dollars each per year. Considering the extent of territory which Wakefield covers, this price is claimed to be a fair average. We are informed that the Water Company supplies the town with five hydrants free, located as follows: One at the corner of Pearl and Main streets; one at corner of Albion and Greene streets; one on Albion street near Broadway; one on Broadway near Lake street, and a Lowery hydrant on Main street, opposite the town hall.—Wakefield Citizen & Banner.

The betrayer of the Emperor Maximilian, Col. Miguel Lopez, died the other day in the city of Mexico from hydrophobia—his miserable life ending in a terrible paroxysm of madness. He was the trusted friend of the emperor, but when the latter was reduced to last extremities, shut up in the city of Queretaro, and has planned an escape through the lines of the besiegers, Lopez betrayed the password to the Mexicans for $30,000. In this way Gen. Escobedo gained an entrance at the head of the republican forces and arrested the emperor, who was shot soon afterward. But the usual fate of the traitor overtook Lopez. His wife and children left him, and everybody shunned him, and he has lived the 25 years since the time of the betrayal alone and despised of all mankind, dying at last one of the most dreadful of deaths.—Springfield Republican.

Secretary Tracy has but three 2000-ton cruisers still to be christened, and he is at a loss to decide upon their names. Nearly every mail brings to him new petitions. Applications have been received from Plattsburg, Cleveland, Providence, Milwaukee, Detroit, New Orleans, Memphis, Little Rock, Buffalo and other cities. It is hardly necessary to say that the desire to be advertised is at the bottom of the most of these petitions. Now we have a lot of beautiful Indian names up here in Western Massachusetts that would be just the thing for cruisers—Massasoit for instance.—Springfield Republican.

Our price has always been $5.00 without deviation; and for two years we have done no club work.
We shall probably never sell clubs again, their day having gone by, but there are many who do not care during these dull times to pay so much as $5.00 a dozen for pictures, but who still want the best. As we wish to reach this class, but do not believe in charging two prices for the same thing, we have decided to adopt the medium price of $4.00 for a short time. GEORGE W. BOULTER.

Read This, Ye Sceptics!

GEO. W. BOULTER, of Belfast, Me., for three years a member of the city government, and also member of Thos. H. Marshall Post, No. 42, G. A. R., is well and favorably known as a thoroughly reliable man. He says under date of March 24, 1890:—

"For some years I have been afflicted with Dyspepsia, Biliousness, Muscular Rheumatism and Lameness across Kidneys. Added to all this, I was, for two years, daily attacked with a deadly sickness at pit of stomach, followed by a copious flow of water from my mouth; then I would vomit, which would relieve me for the time, only to be repeated the next day. I commenced taking DANA'S SARSAPARILLA, and before I had taken one bottle the deadly sickness departed; and for over four months I have not had the slightest symptom of a return. My STOMACH FEELS AS WELL AS EVER IN MY LIFE. My BILIOUSNESS IS ALL GONE, and my bowels are regular. My DYSPEPSIA IS A THING OF THE PAST, and I CAN EAT ANY KIND OF FOOD AND DIGEST IT.

My wife has also taken DANA'S SARSAPARILLA for Biliousness and Neuralgia, and has been helped by it more than by any other medicine she ever took. I consider it a wonderful remedy."

It does what we claim or costs you nothing. Could we make you a fairer offer? Try a bottle now.

Memorial Day Exercises.

A detail of Post 50 G. A. R. and the Charles B. Warner Camp Sons of Veterans go to West Peabody and Lynnfield at 7.40 in the morning. At 1 o'clock the Post will form at the Quarters on Main street, and under escort of the Sons of Veterans, and march to the music of the 8th Regiment Band to the Soldier's Monument on the Square, which will be decorated, with impressive ceremonies. Thence, the line counter-marches to the Lexington Monument and after decorating that ancient structure, cars will be taken for Cedar Grove cemetery, when a large number of graves will be decorated. Thence, the line moves to the old Emerson cemetery on Washington street, the Friends and old Boston street cemeteries finally arriving at Monumental cemetery on Wallis street at all of which the graves of deceased comrades will be strewn with fair garlands. The march will then be taken up to their quarters.

Death of Miss Mehitable C. Pope.

Miss Mehitable C. Pope died at the Sutton Home, Monday morning of pneumonia, after an illness of five days. The deceased followed the occupation of dressmaking for many years, and was well known in many families of the town. She was greatly respected and beloved. She sacrificed much for the comfort of the soldiers during the war of the rebellion, and Memorial day was always to her of sacred interest. She was deeply interested also in the temperance cause, a devoted member of the W. C. T. U., from its first formation. Her pleasant smile, and kindly manners will long be remembered. Her age was 74 years, 5 months. Her funeral took place from the Sutton Home, Wednesday afternoon, the service being conducted by Rev. G. A. Hall, pastor of the South church.

Mrs. Horace M. Holt died at her residence last Sunday.
Francis H. Appleton, Esq., is occupying his summer residence in West Peabody.

A new train arrangement on the Boston & Maine railroad will go into effect June 29.

H. A. Besse, superintendent of streets is trimming the shade trees around town.

John Linehan, who has been confined to the house for a number of days, is improving.

Charlie Norris, a four year old boy, was run over on Walnut street, Thursday, and badly injured.

The Low Case Settled.

The case of Low, trustee for W. C. Brown and others, against the town of Peabody, which has been pending for some years has been settled by Henry Wardwell, Esq., as attorney for the town, by payment of $1150. This is received in full satisfaction for all claims accruing from the raising of the dam at Brown's Pond, by the Water Board several years ago, whereby the adjacent lands were flooded. When the proceedings were begun, or in the early stages of the case, the plaintiffs agreed to accept $500 in settlement, and a check was drawn by the Town Treasurer, but the cupidity of the parties was aroused before they got ready to sign the releases, and they backed out. The case was then brought before the County Commissioners, under the provisions of the Statutes, for assessment of damages, and a long hearing took place in Town Hall. Witnesses from Lynn were drummed up who came in, and claiming to be experts in the value of real estate, placed unwarrantable and highly extravagant values on the property before the flowing, and gave it as their judgment that the place had been substantially ruined by raising the dam. Everybody familiar with the location considered the expert testimony ludicrous, but it had the desired effect, and the Commissioners accordingly assessed damages at $1700. The costs carried the total to about $1900. An appeal from this award was taken to the Superior Court where it has been pending for about two years awaiting a trial by jury. Evidently the plaintiffs had some fears of being able to convince a jury of such exalted former value and such complete ruin, as they caused the gentlemen who then consulted the Board of County Commissioners to believe.

A Club Room Raid.

About 9 o'clock Sunday morning, officers Sweeney, Paulen and Hayes made a raid on Blaney's Block on Foster street and secured a keg of beer. Several men were present, the room being occupied by the Star Athletic Club. In Court Thursday morning, the defendant was represented by P. J. McCusker, and F. E. Farnham appeared for the government. The defence set up was that the room where the beer was seized was a club room and that the stuff was owned by all the members for their private use. Upon cross examination, some facts were admitted which showed that this club had purchased the beer with another, and it was divided between them and distributed to the members. The counsel for the prosecution produced a statute of 1881 and a later one of 1887 reaffirming the 1881 act, which makes it a penal offence to have liquor of any kind in a club room for distribution. The Court took the case under consideration. It is thought by many a conviction will be secured. The legal point is a novel one and of great importance, as it promises, if sustained by the Supreme Court, to break up the club room practice of peddling out drinks. The law appears at first thought to be an infraction of the constitutional right of property, but there is still a clearly marked distinction between this class of legislative regulation of personal property and what is proscribed by the constitution.

LOCAL LINES.

Ground was broken Monday, on Lynnfield street, for the extension of the water main to the Alms House.

The annual lawn party of the Old Ladies' Home Auxiliary Society will be held on the 17th of June.

A drop-a-penny-in-the-slot machine for helping people guess their weight has been placed in front of the railroad station.

Wednesday June 10, the County Commissioners give a hearing on the extension of Walnut street over Harmony Grove flats.

Pewholders of the South church are hereby reminded of the 10 per cent discount on all taxes paid on or before Saturday, June 6.

Thomas E. Greene has been appointed constable by the Selectmen, to enable to preserve peace and order at the Baptist Church.

Miss Mary E. Lunn of the New England Deaconess Home, Boston, gave an address at the Methodist church Thursday evening.

Dr. C. C. Pike and Mr. B. N. Moore in behalf of the Law and Order League appeared before the Selectmen a week ago to request that some action be taken on the matter of keeping open stores Sundays. The matter was laid over by the Board for future consideration.

Michael Shea, Daniel Donahue, Richard Ready and Daniel Sullivan were before the court yesterday for playing ball Sunday. They proved an alibi.

Representative Appleton voted against the engrossment of the Congressional redistricting bill yesterday, but, we are sorry to say, the majority were against him.

The local Camp of Sons of Veterans observed its third anniversary Wednesday evening with an entertainment and lunch. A number of guests from other towns were present.

The estate of the late Darby Loftus on Andover Turnpike, near Sylvan street, was up at auction on Monday and bid off by John Loftus at $1700. The sale was made for the purpose of dividing the estate among the heirs.

The Spring Pond Ice Company has sold out to H. N. Batchelder, its local retail trade. The company has purchased the business and privileges of I. H. Beede and will, erect a 50,000 a ton establishment at Spring Pond.

An ecclesiastical Council was held at West Peabody on Wednesday to set apart the church there, which has heretofore been a branch of the Second Congregational church, as a separate organization.

An alarm of fire was rung in from box 13 Thursday afternoon in consequence of a blaze in rear of Bowditch school. A small building owned by Nathan Bushdy was nearly consumed and the rear of the school house was scorched.

An incipient blaze that consumed a shingle or two on the roof of Sheehan & Tobins' blacksmith shop, called out the department to no purpose, Monday. The alarm was given from box 18. Fire caught from their own chimney.

William MacDonald hitched a team of bays on to his new trolley Monday, afternoon in order to give the coach a thorough trial before filling an engagement for a Beverly Farms party Monday evening. Allen Dunlap, an experienced driver, handled the ribbons.

An interesting program entitled "Lessons of Memorial Day" will be given at the Gospel Temperance meeting, Sunday, May 31, in Temperance Hall, commencing at 5.45 P. M. There will be singing by a quartette, with readings and recitations. The public are invited.

The selectmen have voted to prohibit the railroad companies stopping cars on the Square at points that will obstruct a free passage of vehicles through Main and Lowell street. Cars going through Central street or standing east of the Soldier's Monument, will be required to stop within 20 feet of the southerly side of the crossing that leads from Miss Stockwell's store to the monument.

The Ivers & Pond pianos are of the highest grade. They contain the most desirable improvement, the patent Soft-Stop, and they can be bought at fair prices and on easy payments, regardless of distance from the manufactory. A catalogue describing and picturing these pianos will be mailed free if you send a request and your address on a postal card to Ivers & Pond Piano Co., Masonic Temple, 183 Tremont St., Boston.

Mrs. H. K. Pavear and Mrs. Annie A. Clement sailed from New York this week on the Friedland for Europe, where they will pass the summer months in travelling and sight seeing. Three other ladies accompanied them, making a party of five. Mrs. George Upton and son, Roger, Mrs. King Upton, and Miss Mary E. Farley of this town also sailed for Europe this week, from New York, on the White Star liner.

TOLEDO, O., Jan. 10, 1887.

Messrs. F. J. Cheney & Co.—Gentlemen:—I have been in the general practice of medicine for most 40 years, and would say that in all my practice and experience have never seen a preparation that I could prescribe with as much confidence of success as I can Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by you. Have prescribed it a great many times and its effect is wonderful, and would say in conclusion that I have yet to find a case of Catarrh that it would not cure, if they would take it according to directions.

In fashionable circles and among societies, it is now considered the proper thing to have the catering done by McCrillis & Co., of Salem. Every generation has had its crack caterer, and no party, wedding or supper has been considered properly appointed, unless Cassell, Remond or whoever chanced to be the reigning favorite, prepared the spread. McCrillis & Co., 256 Essex street, Salem, in the building known as the King Block, have succeeded to the post of honor and it is unusual now to see any other in charge of the banquet or lunch. They have earned their place by liberal and courteous treatment, thorough mastery of the culinary art and perfect desirable in table service.

Special services were held at the Universalist Church last Sabbath at which the Grand Army, Sons of Veterans, and Relief Corps were present. The church drapings and decorations were very pretty and appropriate. The pulpit was draped with the national flag, and sacked arms stood before it, while the platform was tastefully decorated with flowers. Rev. Mr. Walsh delivered the sermon, taking as his text the words of Exodus XII: 26—"What mean ye by this service?" He spoke of the associations and memories of the hour and the holy principles for which the war was waged. The purposes of the day were to make real to us the heroism of our countrymen who fought for and maintained the union; to help us to realize what a united country means, to learn the value of peace and that all sectionalism is disloyal and unmanly; to impress upon us our present duties and responsibilities and to teach us that patriotism and devotion to the country are the safeguards to our institutions. The musical selections were appropriate to the occasion and the service was made impressive by the singing of the battle hymn of the republic, immediately following the prayer at the close of the discourse.

DEATH.

The crab, the bullace and the elm,
They burgeon in the spring,
And when the west wind melts the snow,
The redstarts build and sing.
But death's at work in rind and root,
And loves the green buds best:
And when the pairing music's mute,
He spares the empty nest.
Death! Death!
Death is master of lord and clown.
Close the coffin and hammer it down.
When nuts are brown and seeds without,
And white and plump within,
And juicy gourds are passed about,
And crinkle down the chin:
When comes the reaper with his scythe,
And reaps and nothing leaves,
Oh, then it is that Death is blithe,
And sips among the sheaves.
Death! Death!
Lower the coffin and slip the cord:
Death is master of clown and lord.
When logs about the house are stacked,
And next year's hose is knit,
And tales are told and jokes are cracked,
And fagots blaze and split:
Death sits down in the ingle nook,
Sits down and doth not speak:
But he puts his arm round the maid that's warm,
And she tingles in the cheek.
Death! Death!
Death is master of lord and clown:
Shovel the clay in, tread it down,
—Alfred Austin in Prince Lucifer.

A TALE OF OLD VIENNA.

Of all the gay Viennese who passed us on the crowded "Gruben" there was none to me as fair as my pretty country woman, Mand Wemyss, of Baltimore, whom I had the pleasure of escorting. I had made her acquaintance over the leaden sarcophagus of a defunct emperor in the vault of the Augustine convent, where the bones of Austria's rulers are on exhibition. Nobody could blame me for falling in love with her, because she really is the sweetest girl on earth.
So we were walking toward St. Stephen's cathedral in charge of a paid cicerone. He was a little old man with a wrinkled face and a nose that had, like his shabby genteel clothes, seen better days. Now it was by no means an ornament, unless considered from the purely coloristic standpoint. He knew nearly everything about the brilliant city by the "Blue Danube," and where his knowledge was inadequate his imagination tided him over.
Suddenly Miss Wemyss halted before a strange object, and with a little feminine exclamation of surprise she asked: "Why, what is this thing for? It seems to be the stump of a tree all covered with nails." And so it was. So closely together had the nails been driven that not a piece of the wood as large as a pin head even was visible on the entire surface.
Our guide at once assumed the customary attitudes of his guild in action, which closely resemble the gyrations accompanying the spread eagle finish of a stump speaker's oration.
And this is the story he told of the nail studded tree:
Several hundred years ago there lived a blacksmith on this spot which is occupied by a stock broker's office now. In those times a blacksmith understood the working of iron in all its branches, and it was as easy for him to hammer the metal into graceful curves and flowers for altar railings as it was to forge a horseshoe or the point of a hunting spear.
Our blacksmith had a beautiful daughter, whose hand was sought after by all the young men for miles around, for she was as good and pure and gentle as her eyes were blue. Her hair was golden and her cheeks were like the glacier snow upon which the morning sun had cast his virgin rays.
Her father guarded her as jealously as the dragon of old ever did guard fair lady, and many were the silent tears poor Kathi wept in the solitude of her "Kemenate" where she had been locked up. Her only joy was the bunch of fragrant flowers which she was always sure to find upon the outer sill of the only window in her room. No matter how early she awoke, these sweet messengers of kindly thought were sure to be in their usual place.
Often and often did she arise with the sun, hoping to catch a glimpse of her unknown friend, but she was invariably disappointed.
At last, one morning she failed to find the flowers. She dressed hurriedly and concealed herself behind the window curtain. She watched for the person whose gift she felt certain to receive yet. And her expectation was not futile.
But what was her surprise and disappointment when, instead of the fine young fellow which her fancy had pictured, she beheld a poor, deformed creature with a large hump on his back.
Her first feeling of horror found vent in a little exclamation, but there was something so sad and pleading in his eyes that were uplifted to hers, that, in her profound pity for him, she felt sincerely ashamed to have exhibited any sign of annoyance.
"Was it you who brought me all those lovely flowers?" she asked in a kindly voice, as he was trying to conceal a nose-gay he held in his hand.
In answer he blushed like a school girl and nodded.
"I thank you for them very much," she continued; "they have been the only pleasure in my monotonous life. But how did you know that I was locked up in here?"
"I have heard you sing occasionally," he answered, "and from the sound of your voice I knew you were young and beautiful, and, alack-a-day, unhappy withal, and because I—I because—I felt—sorry—for you, I brought you some flowers from my mother's garden. But please don't tell master about it, for he would surely—"
Just then a handsome young fellow, lithe as a doe and graceful as a young cherry tree, appeared on the scene, and greeting the hunchback affectionately, he exclaimed:
"Brother, I have been looking for you this last hour; mother is full sorely vexed about your absence," then, looking up, he noticed the young girl at the window just as she withdrew her blushing face.
He bowed to her with courtly grace and raised his jaunty red cap, and she, of course, could not but return the courtesy. Every morning after this incident there were two nose-gays on the window sill instead of one.

In time the old blacksmith yielded to the importunities of his wife and her friends, and agreed to look around for a husband for his daughter.
According to the customs of the time his son-in-law would have to be also a blacksmith. In order to make sure that Kathi's future liege lord was a master of his trade the old man constructed an ingenious lock, which he put on the door of his daughter's chamber.
Whoever had attempted in vain to open the door had to drive an iron nail into a certain tree, but the prize of the successful man was to be the hand of the fair Kathi.
But if none should succeed in unlocking the door then the maiden was to enter a convent as soon as the tree was covered to a man's height.
Full many a swain whose heart had been filled with hope, left sorely disappointed after an unsuccessful attempt, and the tree was rapidly being studded with nails.
Kathi was sadly pining away in her solitary prison, partly because she could not go out into the greenwood and down to the rippling river, but mostly because she loved the hunchback's brother, whom she saw sometimes from her window at daybreak.
The poor hunchback loved her with the ardor that hopelessness alone can give to love, and he worked day and night on a key to open the intricate lock; when he saw how rapidly the day drew near when Kathi would either be the bride of another or go into a nunnery, he worked with redoubled vigor.
After a year and a day the tree had been covered to man's height, and there was only room for one more nail.
So the dwarf presented himself before the blacksmith and asked for permission to try his art. The request was granted, though reluctantly, and the old man wished he had extended the limit by two or three feet, because he saw now no alternative but that of having his daughter married to a deformed man or losing her forever. But he was a man of his word and never took water.
The entire family went in procession to Kathi's door to watch the fateful trial. Naturally the little hunchback felt somewhat nervous, and his hands trembled, partly from excitement, partly from joyful anticipation, for he was almost, if not quite, sure of success.
He inserted the key into the lock and twisted it slightly; a slight snap as of a spring relaxing answered him. A second twist and a second snap, and a third and a fourth, and then a sudden pull. The dwarf took a deep and long breath, and paused for a moment to wipe the perspiration off his brow.
Then he turned the knob. It yielded, and the door opened slowly. The dwarf hastened into the room.
It was empty.
Suspecting a trick, he turned around with flashing eyes, but the expression of genuine surprise and alarm in the faces of the others convinced him that no deceit had been practiced upon him.
The blacksmith was the first to regain his presence of mind. After hurriedly looking about him, he espied the open window. Fastened to it was a rope ladder made of bits of bedclothes. The old man looked out. At first he could not discern a trace of the fugitive. After some minutes he could distinguish his own spotted horse galloping at full speed toward the distant woods.
On its back was the fair Kathi and the hunchback's brother.
Need it be told that the father forgave them, only too delighted to regain his daughter without seeing her married to the dwarf? The latter swallowed his disappointment like a man, and consoled himself with the thought that Kathi remained at least in the family.
The two young people lived like turtle doves, and delighted in telling how "love laughs at locksmiths."—M. de Lepman in Pittsburg Bulletin.

Mrs. Stone's Motto.
The president of the Wednesday Afternoon club is Mrs. A. B. Stone, who is also its founder. Mrs. Stone is from Massachusetts, the daughter of a clergyman, and spent her early life in Worcester, receiving the best kind of a New England education. After her marriage her first home was in Chicago, at a time when the west was not quite what it is now. Mrs. Stone traveled through the west with her husband, who was engaged in building bridges, and improved her opportunities to study and to realize the possibilities and responsibilities of the men and women of this country. After the war Mr. and Mrs. Stone went abroad, where they passed several years, and on their return they settled in this city, where they have now lived for more than twenty years.
About five years ago Mrs. Stone founded the Wednesday Afternoon club, which meets every other week at her handsome apartments in the Valencia. It is on the plan of the Fortnightly, of Chicago, and although Mrs. Stone has always been the leading spirit of the club, she modestly says that she could have accomplished nothing without the co-operation of others. At each meeting a paper is read on some serious question and a discussion follows that is participated in by several members. Mrs. Stone is an earnest advocate of making the highest possible use of whatever gifts or talents one has. This she calls the real gift of life, and she has taken as her motto, "Character is Wealth." A sweet, intellectual face and a warm, sympathetic manner make Mrs. Stone a very charming woman to meet and to know. She is also a member of the Ladies' club and is interested in many of the local charities, as is her husband.—New York World.

Nice Place to Live.

CREPE PULLING.

A Disreputable Fraud Practiced Upon the Families of the Dead.
Reputable florists in this city are suffering greatly by a dodge called "crepe pulling," resorted to by unprincipled dealers in an attempt to increase their business. A reporter, desiring to ascertain just what the above term signified, visited several of the Broadway stores, but the majority of dealers were averse to conversing upon the subject. John B. Nugent, Jr., when spoken to, said: "You wish to find out about this 'crepe pulling,' do you? Well, I'll tell you how the scheme is worked. Each morning these fellows pick up the papers and go through the death lists in a very careful manner. They select those people whom they know are in the middle walks of life. One of their men is then sent to the house of mourning, and he, upon entering the room where the bereaved relatives are seated, inquires in the most sorrow stricken tones what was the cause of death. Naturally, some one will ask whether he knew the deceased. And the reply will generally be that they have had many and many a good time together. Such a jolly good fellow was Jack. And they were almost brothers. He used to come over to the store every day for his bunch of violets or a pink."
"Before the relatives are aware of the fact the artful fellow has a ten or twenty dollar order. This in itself is bad enough, but when these florists make up a floral piece, instead of giving the family natural flowers, they make up the wreath, or whatever it may be, of what we term crepe flowers, an artificial flower resembling a white pink. These things are purchased at about one dollar per pound. A few natural roses are stuck into the design, and when the entire piece is made up the whole thing costs them in the neighborhood of two dollars. One cannot understand how much this pernicious practice indulged in and what harm it does the majority of dealers."
Mr. Nugent told of a certain florist who sent one of his men down to Cherry street to a house where a woman had died. The man went up stairs, and leaning over the coffin actually forced tears to his eyes after declaring that the woman was his cousin, and while no one was looking, as he thought, strewed smilax around. The husband, a big, burly Irishman, and who, by the way, had worked in the flower business himself, caught the fellow, and after giving him a good trouncing, deposited him in the street without any show of gentleness.
"He," said Mr. Nugent, "at least got what he deserved."—New York Press.

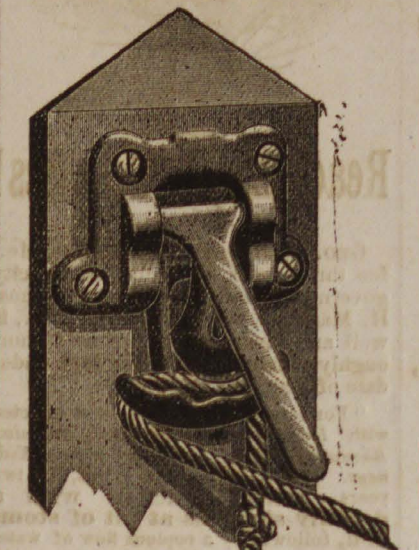

The Place to Wear a Watch.
Half a hundred girls have been noticed lately in the Fifth avenue stages and on the west side of that thoroughfare to have little chains, with charms or lockets attached, hanging from their collars, either directly in front or a little to the left side. Not many days since a daughter of Eve, who was convinced that more was there than met the eye, determined to fathom the mystery. To that end she made frequent journeys in the stages and haunted Huyler's till her pocketbook grew emaciated, all to no end. The little chains dangled tantalizingly before her eyes, and no one told her why. At last, finding herself alone in a stage with a girl adorned after the manner described, she summoned up all her courage and asked the stranger to satisfy her curiosity.
The girl calmly produced a tiny watch, and laughingly said it was the very latest thing to wear them in the collar, "and far more convenient it is," she said, "than to poke them in front of one's dress and have to unfasten two or three buttons whenever one wants to know what time it is." The questioner meditatively felt of her serviceable but ungainly, old fashioned turnip and decided that it would necessitate putting stiffly wired Medici collars on all her frocks were she to attempt following the latest fad.—New York Recorder.

Attended His Own Funeral.
The late Captain Ben Wakefield, of Biddeford, once attended his own funeral, being one of the few men who have had that privilege. He had gone on a fishing trip down on the Grand banks, and had been away from home a good while without his family hearing from him. The same season had proved very disastrous to a number of other fishermen who went out from thereabouts, and the vessel Captain Ben was in had her share of hard luck, and the report reached home that she, with her crew, was lost.
Time passed and Captain Ben did not return, until at last his family gave up all hope that he had been saved, and a day was set for the memorial services. The services were held in the church at Cape Porpoise, the minister had offered prayer for the absent fisherman, who was supposed to have found his grave in the sea, and was just beginning his sermon when Captain Ben walked into the church.—Bangor (Me.) Commercial.

At a diocesan conference held recently a bishop who was about to leave for another see uttered, if one may believe the Guardian, the following farewell words: "If in any way God uses me and permits me to do a little good work there in the last years of my life to bring people together, and to try to make peace and to show people when they are one rather than when they are not one—if anybody upsets a bottle of petroleum and sets it on fire, and if I try to throw a pail of water on it, it will be through the wisdom, and the experience, and the kindness and the many useful lessons I have learned from all of you."
Let his lordship be warned; sand is a safer extinguisher than water in the case of petroleum, as water is apt to float the burning fluid and to spread the danger.—Notes and Queries.

A Reasonable Proposition.

LOYALTY.

They live in the halls of the heroes—
The world's Valhalla gray—
True knights, who in storm and battle
Flung the scabbard of life away.

Following a single watchword,
Dying and undismayed,
For the red rose of the Lancaster
Or the Stuart's white cockade.

Oh, clear as the blast far ringing
From the tips of Roland's horn,
That word and its passionate meaning
On the breath of the past is borne!

What though the cause were worthless,
Though the faith rang false when tried?
With as godlike self surrender
They fought on the erring side.

Borne down in the tide of battle
They died, and are conquerors still,
By Culloden or Roncevalles,
By Cressy or Malvern Hill!

Where the forces of life are meeting,
Strong souls, like warriors, stand
On the side of their Lord's Anointed, Still ready, sword in hand.

For the white ideal of honor,
The crown of their manhood's pride,
For the rose of a love unswerving,
Into the fight they ride.

Strong in a faith unshaken,
Loyal as those of old,
They lift over storm and struggle
Their oriflamme's white fold.

They raise up hands of power,
They strike where wrong defies,
For a dream, a trust, a symbol,
In a rapture of sacrifice.

Their shield still flings its shelter
The weary and weak above—
For the loyal arm gives justice,
And the loyal heart gives love!

The Australian Tree Well.

In the vast rainless tracts of central Australia, where water in the shape of streams, ponds, wells, etc., is unknown, and where thousands of gold seekers, travelers, hunters and others have perished with thirst, the country is found to be tolerably populated by a hardy race known as "Bushmen." For the past century it has been a standing wonder how these human beings managed to exist in such an arid region. It now turns out that nature has made provisions for the welfare of living creatures even in that inhospitable section of the antipodes. Here the eucalyptus tree, which grows 200 to 300 feet high in more favorable localities, grows to but eight or ten feet, gnarled and thickly jointed, like a reed.

Herein lies the secret of the Bush-man's existence. The joints of this dwarf eucalyptus are hollow and filled with pure water, the size of the joint regulating the amount of water to be found within. More than one unlucky being has laid down in the shade of one of these Australian well trees to die of thirst when one stroke with his knife or "machete" would have caused a life giving stream to burst forth.—St. Louis Republic.

Dr. Judson Tells a Story.

The Rev. Dr. Edward Judson tells of a Baptist who had been very sick. The physician had given him some medicine, and told him he could go out, but under no circumstances was he to get wet.
The man went out on the farm, and a shower of rain came up suddenly. There was no shelter near, and to save himself he crawled into a hollow log. The action of the rain caused the log to shrink so as to endanger his life.

He could not move, and being brought face to face with death the whole of his past life came before him as in a panorama; he remembered the days of his childhood, his entrance upon life, his successes and his sins; then he remembered, last of all, that when he left home that morning he refused his wife, when she asked him, for fifty cents for the church, and the thought made him feel so small that he had no difficulty in walking out of the log.—New York Herald.

Birth of the Car Cable.

The sight of six horses vainly endeavoring to take a street car up one of the steep hills of San Francisco inspired in inventor Halliday's mind the idea of the cable car system. The hill was slippery as well as steep. One horse fell and carried down his mate. The other horses tumbled, until the six were in a struggling heap. The weight of the car dragged them down to the foot of the hill, bruising and maiming them. Mr.
Halliday, looking on, was filled with compassion for the poor brutes, and he says he went to work at once on plans for a substitute for horse power. His thinking brought him to the cable system.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Cheaps and Dissatisfaction.

Don't you feel sorry for the woman who haunts the bargain room counters?
About her face is a weary, anxious look,
and her clothes have rather a tawdry air.
It is proper they should, for the very word "tawdry" is derived from St.
Audrey, on whose day fairs were held,
when the bargain seeking dames were induced to buy worthless things because they were cheap. As if anything you didn't want was ever cheap! Although the old St. Audrey's fair is closed, practically it still exists, for the same result follows all purchases such as were made there, i. e., dissatisfaction.—New York Sun.

France consumes from 4,000,000 to 4,500,000 kilograms of raw silk annually, which may be valued at 220,000,000 to 270,000,000 francs. If to this be added the value of the wool and cotton yarns used in mixed fabrics, the total value of the raw material used by the silk industry is found to be from 300,000,000 to 400,000,000 francs.

If there is one truth which more than another is brought out by the study of geology, it is that from the most ancient period down to the present day there has been a gradual introduction from time to time of higher and higher forms of life on this planet, thus constituting a kind of drama of existence.

The water of the central basin of the

The Nicaragua Canal.

For four centuries it has been the dream of far-sighted statesmen of the great commercial nations to cut asunder the two American continents where at the isthmus the land narrows like the waist of a wasp between the two oceans, and where their mountain backbone dips to within a few hundred feet of the sea. As early as 1551, Gomara, the historian, suggested the four locations for a waterway that have since been approved as the only possible ones—namely, at Darien, at Panama, at Tehuantepec, and at Nicaragua. Under the lazy rule of Spain no serious attempt was made to realize the dream, but as soon as the old kingdom of Guatemala revolted and formed the republic of Central America, negotiations were begun under the Presidency of Adams, in 1825; and after Nicaragua separated and became an independent state, on some ten or more occasions negotiations for the building of an interoceanic canal were proposed between Nicaragua and the governments or individual citizens of the United States, of England, of Holland, of Belgium, and of France.

After the Mexican war, when the United States first gained a foothold on the Pacific, a convention for a canal was negotiated by the American charge d'affaires to Central America, but the act was disavowed by this government as without authority. A still more favorable concession to Mr.
Cornelius Vanderbilt and others, who formed the American Atlantic and Pacific Ship-Canal Company, was secured by the new charge d'affaires to Central America, but the concession was connected with a treaty of friendship and commerce with the United States, and failed when the latter was defeated in the Senate on account of the recent Clayton-Bulwer treaty with Great Britain, that had been hastily negotiated for that purpose.

The successful completion of the Suez Canal revived the interest of the civilized world in an isthmian canal.
At the instigation of its then famous promoter, M. de Lesseps, an international congress was held at Paris, to which this government sent delegates, among them Mr. Menocal. Their report and the fear of foreign control of the canal turned the attention of the government and of private capitalists to the Nicaragua route. A Provisional Interoceanic Canal Society was organized by Captain Phelps, General Grant, Admiral Ammen, the Hon.
Levi P. Morton, and others, and in 1880 the society received a concession from Nicaragua, which was forfeited in 1884 for failure to perform the conditions. Then President Arthur negotiated a treaty for the building of a canal by the United States in connection with Nicaragua; but the treaty, while still pending in the Senate, was withdrawn by President Cleveland.

Among the concessionaires of the Provisional Interoceanic Canal Society, which had become merged into the Nicaragua Maritime Canal Company, was Mr. A. G. Menocal, mentioned above, a civil engineer in the United States navy. The failure of this company was due to a long-continued effort to procure aid from Congress—an effort defeated by the influence of M. de Lesseps and Captain Eads—and the attempt to finance the company without government guarantee was made finally impossible by the failure of the firm of Grant & Ward. So long, too, as the work on the Panama Canal was in active progress, it was impossible to secure capital for a rival, almost impossible as a site for a canal, and however, of 1885 the failure of the French undertaking was manifest to close observers, for in that year the expenses already incurred in the performance of less than one-third of the work of excavation amounted to double the sum estimated by M. de Lesseps for the cost of the whole. It was also beginning to be suspected that a canal could not be constructed at Panama without locks, and yet the practicability of a sea-level canal there was the only scientific reason given at the congress for preferring that location to Nicaragua. Tehuantepec presented certain advantages from a theoretical point of view, but it was impossible as a site for a canal, and Captain Eads was unable to persuade the hard-headed business men of America that vessels could be economically carried on wheels over mountains. The necessities of commerce seemed to require some interoceanic canal, and commercially it made little difference what point on the isthmus should be selected for that purpose so long as the canal could be constructed with reasonable economy. Attention then was naturally drawn to the Nicaragua route, since the experimentation of half a century had failed to find a better one. As early as 1879 the American Geographical Society, at the instance mainly of its President, the Hon. Charles P. Daly, had discussed the question. In 1886, by invitation of Judge Daly, Commander Taylor, who had already interested many prominent men at Washington in the enterprise, delivered a lecture before the society in favor of a canal at Nicaragua. The special advantages afforded by the physical geography of this location are unmistakable.

Though the distance from ocean to ocean is 170 miles, by using the San Juan River and Lake Nicaragua the length of the canal to be actually excavated is only 27 miles—a work of no extraordinary magnitude in comparison with the 46 miles at Panama and the 65 miles at Suez. Here, too, the depression formed by the lake is only 110 feet above the sea, the lowest depression in the whole range of the Cordilleras. Here, from the scientific point of view, was the most economical route. The canal, too, ought to be in the control of Americans, and it was therefore prudent to take up without delay the lines dropped by the French at Panama. Science, patriotism, and opportunity agreed.

In this state of public opinion, Mr.
Menocal, who had continued his interest in Nicaragua and his friendship with its government, learnt that the President of Nicaragua would be willing to grant a new concession to a responsible American company. Accordingly in the spring of 1886, Mr. Menocal and Captain Taylor submitted this possibility to Mr. Horace L. Hotchkiss, Chief Justice Charles P. Daly, President of the New York Geographical Society, Rear-Admiral Ammen, Mr. Francis A.
Stout, and Mr. Frederick Billings, well-known citizens of New York. In the following autumn, these gentlemen, together with Mr. J. F. O'Shaughnessy, Captain A. S. Crowninshield, and Messrs. Frederick Billings, W. H. Webb, and James M. Smith, met by appointment in New York, and a committee was appointed, with the result that, after further conference with Mr. Menocal, the Nicaragua Canal Association was formed, with unlimited liability, for the purpose of receiving the necessary concessions and of arranging for the preliminary surveys. Among the members of the association were also Messrs. Robert Garrett, G. E. Kissell, James Roosevelt, H. Hitchcock, and many other men of responsibility. In March, 1887, the government of Nicaragua, and in the following July the government of Costa Rica, granted liberal concessions to Mr. Menocal as agent for the association. The concession from Costa Rica was necessary because its boundary is continuous with the south bank of the San Juan River, and its territory would be flooded if a dam were erected, as was proposed, at Ochoa, at the confluence of the San Carlo and the San Juan. These concessions, after being duly ratified, were secured by the payment of $10,000 in gold, to be forfeited in case of failure to perform certain specified conditions —the conditions being that certain final surveys should be completed by a given time, and that at least two million dollars should be spent in construction during the first year after ratification.

In the winter of 1887-8 the surveys required by the concessions were begun by a large force of engineers, some eighty in number, and of native laborers, of whom a hundred were brought from Jamaica. The expedition was under the charge of Mr. R. E. Peary as sub chief assistant engineer, Mr.
Menocal having been appointed engineer in chief. The association defrayed the expenses of these operations, and is to be re-imbursed, according to the concession, by six per cent of the securities of the final company, issued in excess of its capital.—Harper's Weekly.

A CURE FOR PIMPLES!

The Peabody Press,
PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT 27 LOWELL ST., - PEABODY, MASS.
PEABODY PRESS CO., PUBLISHERS.

TERMS:
$2.00 per year; $1.00 for six months;
50 cents for three months.

SATURDAY, MAY 30, 1891.

THE PRESS is issued Friday instead of Saturday this week, that the office may observe Memorial Day by closing.

As AN offset to the inducements held out by Salem to our townspeople to come thither and incidentally spend what loose change they may bring with them, why not have a series of band concerts on our Square this summer? We would thereby not only keep Peabody people at home but offer attractions for out-of-town people to visit us occasionally. The expense of half a dozen concerts would not be an extravagant sum to raise by subscription.

AT THE special town meeting next Wednesday evening the question of extending water pipes from Washington street, to the glue works of Mr. William H. Brown will come up for consideration. The town has incurred heavy expenses in the extension of water mains in other parts of the town compared to which the expense of laying pipes to Mr. Brown's works would be insignificant.

A liberal policy toward manufacturers should be shown by the community at all times. It is the manufacturer who sets in motion the money that pays the rents of dwellings and keeps alive the retail stores, without which property valuations would sink to a low ebb and the treasury of the town would become empty. His money too invested in real estate, stock and machinery, furnishes another source of revenue for the common treasury, and by his prosperity other industries flourish and add their might to the common weal.

It is rather amusing to see Hon. George William Curtis, the leader of the Civil Service Reform; one of the leaders if not the father of the competitive system, finding fault at being hampered in his own official appointments, as Chancellor of the Board of Regents, of New York, by the application of civil service rules. Like the man who wants to prescribe for you how you shall live, or diet, or bring up your children, he finds his own prescriptions totally inapplicable, to his own case. He don't like to take his own pills. With singular sagacity he discovers a constitutional difference between himself and the common herd of mortals. Civil Service is an excellent thing for somebody else, but nobody wants it applied to himself or those on whom he wishes to confer political favors, but it serves a very nice turn when Congressmen or heads of departments wish to put off besieging henchmen.

The fact is the whole scheme is a humbug that had its origin in the brain of the theorist. It has no part or place in the affairs of practical life. We may admit that it sprang up as a cure for abuses of political patronage, but the remedy is fully as bad as the disease. A little practical common sense, flavored with judgment and honesty, would serve the government fully as well and be much less costly in its application.

Under the present system all manner of fraud is possible, and actually practiced by applicants, that no practical degree of diligence on the part of the examining board can detect; to say nothing of the inherent defects of the general system.

In Memoriam.

Memorial services were held Wednesday evening at the Parker House, Boston to take action on the recent death of Samuel M. Weale a member of Council of Administration of the Department of Massachusetts and a leading spirit in the Service Pension Association. It was directly or indirectly through him, that the service pension of June 27, 1890 was enacted by Congress, although that measure fell far short of the standard of his precepts. He was also an active member of The Sons of Columbia. All of the organizations with which he had been identified were represented. Among the speakers of the evening was Frank E. Farnham Esq., of this town, who had been a co-laborer of the deceased comrade in the service pension association, both being among the organizers of that fraternity.

DANA'S ABSOLUTELY CURES DISEASE!

E. P. Shaw Jr., of Newburyport and Miss Fannie B. Knight will be united in marriage June 9. The ceremony will be one of the most brilliant society events of the year, in that city.

LOCAL LINES.

A. B. Clark, took out about one hundred and fifty of his employees on his steam yacht Cygnet last Sunday. Several members of the Eighth Regiment Band were also invited, who furnished music for the occasion. The Cygnet is a new boat, 63 1-2 feet long 13 foot beam and has two 100 horse boilers. The engines were built by John Boyle & Co., of this town. The appointments on the steamer are first class in every respect and the boat will doubtless command a large share of the business this summer between Ipswich and the Neck.

At an adjourned meeting of the Law and Order League held Tuesday evening several new members were admitted. The committee appointed to appear before the Selectmen on the subject of Sunday store-keeping reported the result of their interview. It was stated extra-officially that the selectmen would probably not be averse to the issuance of rules restricting the hours for keeping open shop on the Lord's Day. Perhaps allowing them to remain open until 10 o'clock in the forenoon, or possibly to observe the hours of opening and closing, now in vogue among the druggists. A conservative sentiment governed the meeting, and it was agreed that whatever was done should be in conjunction with the Selectmen. A committee was appointed to consider the subject and report next Tuesday.

A meeting of the Committee appointed to carry out the improvements of the High School, held a meeting on Monday evening and opened the bids for the work. It was found that the lowest bid exceeded the amount of estimates by about $2000. Isaac A. Drown and J. R. Wingate were the lowest bidders. It was voted to lay the matter over for the present, and as $6300 was thought insufficient to complete the alterations, to ask for a further appropriation of $2000. A town meeting has accordingly been called at their request for next Wednesday evening. It is not considered advisable by the committee, to make any material change in the plan of operations. The course mapped out is what is thought necessary if anything is to be done. Thomas Carroll will resign from the committee, as he has not sufficient time to devote to the work.

The warrant for the special town meeting to be held next Wednesday evening at 7.30 o'clock, was posted this week. It embraces five articles, the second being the main article is to see if the town will appropriate two thousand dollars in addition to the amount appropriated at the annual town meeting, for the purpose of completing the extension and improvement of the High School building or take any action in regard to remodeling said building, agreeably to the petition of the committee. The third is to see if the town will appropriate money for the purpose of extending a water pipe from Foster to Washington street through Low street agreeably to the petition of Michael Sherry and others. This, it is said, will be a paying investment, as there is quite a demand for water on Low street. The fourth article is to see if the town will appropriate money to lay a six inch water main from Washington street to the factory of William H. Brown. Mr. Brown asked for the water before but been unable to get it, and in view of the voters at the annual meeting, extending the water to other localities it would seem that the town cannot deny him the service. The fifth article is to see if the town will make an additional appropriation of two hundred and fifty dollars, to complete the extension of the water pipes to the Towa Farm, agreeably to the petition of Warren Trask and others.

The police made a raid on the grocery store of Billy Hayes in the Washington House, last Saturday evening about 9 o'clock. Chief Peasley and officers Grady, Johnson, Carlin, Wiggin and Mack made the descent upon the ranch, and their efforts were rewarded with a store of booty that showed plainly somebody had done a flourishing retail liquor business. The assault was made at several different points simultaneously. The premises are a maze of rooms, cellars, closets, subterranean vaults, stairways. Billy was there when the officers arrived, but as he did not offer to show them around they made the tour alone, while the surprised proprietor disappeared, sullen and angry. The officers searched the building and all its connections for two hours and took away with them two full barrels of ale. That was found buried under the floor of the old Sunday bar room and both barrels were tapped. A rubber hose about four feet long connected with one barrel and led through a stone wall into the boiler room where the ale could be drawn off into pitchers and retailed by the glass in the billiard room, not far away. alia and recently emptied glasses were also captured, and a number of men were present in the room. The last beer seized by the police was from Hayes over a year ago, and he was convicted, fined and sentenced to three months' imprisonment. The sentence of the Court was never executed, however, on account of a representation by his physician that he was in ill health, and confinement in the House of Correction would be more than likely to prove fatal. Physicians were accordingly employed by the Law and Order League to investigate the case. Hayes also promised not only to stop business but to get out of town if sentence were suspended or revoked, and the same was accordingly done. But no sooner was he out of the clutches of the law, than he forgot his promise, and when reminded of it denied that he ever agreed to leave town. His health soon recovered when the terrors of his incarceration disappeared, and it has been the opinion of the police and others for a long time that he has been doing quite a thriving business, and wires have been laid to accumulate sufficient evidence to ensure a conviction. It has been reported that Billy has skipped the town, but the story is not generally credited at police headquarters.

HOW TO SUCCEED.

This is the great problem of life which few satisfactorily solve. Some fall because of poor health, others want of luck but the majority from deficient grit-want of nerve. They are nervous, irresolute, changeable, easily get the blues and "take the spirits down to keep the spirits up," thus wasting money, time, opportunity and nerve force. There is nothing like the Restorative Nerve discovered by the specialist, Dr. Miles, to cure all nervous diseases, as headache, the blues, nervous prostration, sleeplessness, neuralgia, St. Vitus dance, fits and hysteria. West Peabody.

An ecclesiastical council, composed of pastors and delegates from the various Congregational churches in and about the vicinity of Peabody was held Wednesday at the West Peabody chapel. The council met in response to a circular letter sent out by the West church, requesting that a council meet to consider the expediency of recognizing them as an independent church, they having until recently been a branch of the South Peabody Congregational church.

All of the churches responded by sending their pastor and a delegate except the South Peabody and Middleton churches which sent delegates as they have no settled pastor at present.

A secret session of the council was held from 10 to 12 o'clock. Rev. C. B. Rice of Danvers was elected presiding officer and Rev. Harry Brickett of Lynnfield Centre, secretary, and after reading the church records it was unanimously voted to recognize the West church as an independent Congregational church.

At 12 o'clock the pastors and delegates repaired to school house hall where the ladies of the church served a collation. Twenty-five sitting down to the tables.

In the afternoon a public service of recognition was held. Introductory remarks were made by the presiding officer, Rev. C. B. Rice. A report of the doings at the secret session of the morning was read by the secretary. Devotional service by Rev. Mr. Buckham of Salem. Articles of faith, rules of the church, etc., were read by the church secretary, Frank McIntire. Prayer and recognition by Rev. C. B. Rice. Address of fellowship Rev. James Brodie of Salem. Concluding prayer by the former pastor, Rev. Israel Ainsworth of Rockport.

The church has been until quite recently a branch of and been presided over by a pastor jointly with the South Peabody church. But the latter feeling the need of the exclusive services of a pastor in their parish have severed their connection with the West church.

The West church, although small, is making a vigorous effort to raise sufficient money to support a pastor in their portion of the town. Pledges of contribution have been taken and subscription papers circulated among the church goers and encouraging results have followed. Many have doubled their former subscriptions and it is hoped they will soon be able to have a settled pastor of their own. The pulpit has been supplied for the last month by Andover theological students. The church is in a flourishing condition and bright hopes for its future are entertained.

The ladies aid society will hold a lawn party at the residence of Mr. Bowman Viles on the 17th of June. Mrs. Craig an old and respected resident, died at the home of her daughter in Danvers Monday, of heart disease.

Mr. B. H. Taylor is building a fine residence on Lowell street. The house when completed will be one of the best in the Village, and an attraction to the street.

A son was born to Mr. and Mrs. James Craig on Saturday last. Also a daughter to Mr. and Mrs. Cowan on Tuesday of this week.

A grand tennis tournament will take place at the tennis grounds on the Needham estate, on Decoration day. Two courts have been laid out, and a large number of players are expected to participate including parties from Lynn and Boston.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Flint celebrated the anniversary of their golden wedding on Wednesday.

Mr. B. H. Taylor, has erected a very handsome monument on his lot at the cemetery.

Men have been at work for some time clearing the driveways and walks at the Oak Grove cemetery of weeds and rubbish. The work is expected to be finished before Decoration Day.

Complaints are made because the new flag recently bought by popular subscription for the school house is only displayed on state occasions and holidays. It is thought it ought to be run up every pleasant day during the hours of the school session.

A petition for widening of the bridge over the Lowell Railroad on West street has been handed around.

Mr. John Colcord and Russell Colcord have returned from a trip to Florida.

It is reported that Mrs. Wm. Siner has sold her farm on Winona street, to a Mr. Perkins of Lewis street Lynn.

DANA'S IS GUARANTEED TO CURE.

Probate Court.

At the session of the Probate Court in Newburyport on Monday wills of the following persons were proved: Abby Coombs, of Newburyport, Wm. J. Coombs, administrator with the will annexed; Luther Hatch, do., Marietta Cooper, executrix; Maria E. Kimball, Groveland, Chas. B. Emerson; Mary E. Morse, Amesbury, Orlando S. Morse; Caroline A. Plumer, Newburyport, M. Adelaide Plumer, administratrix with will annexed; Henry Williston, executrix. Administration was granted upon the estates of the following deceased persons. Mary Connors, of Amesbury, John Connors, administrator; Sarah A. Crowther, do., Geo. W. Crowther; Jos. C. Dole, Andover, Georgianna Dole; Mary Flannigan, Salem, John J. Gray; Edwin R. Gage, Haverhill, Frances S. Gage, Haverhill; Warren Kilburn, Newburyport, John A. Kilburn; Henry B. Watts, Swampscott, Emma J. Watts; Woodward A. Webber, Lynn, Walter A. Webber. Five guardianship were granted, 4 sales of real estate were authorized, and 16 inventories, 27 affidavits of appointment and 14 accounts were received.

The Money Market.

The large shipments of gold from the country are said to have a damaging effect on the American stock markets. Last week $8,000,000 of gold went out and within the past four weeks $40,000,000, have been shipped. The rates of interest being higher in Europe than in this country have probably had some tendency to increase the efflux. Says a well known authority. "The knowledge that Russia has the power to create a panic in Paris, Berlin or London and possibly Amsterdam, by withdrawing $100,000,000, of gold has an unwholesome effect upon the financial horizon, that is felt through the various commercial circles of America."

A Blow at Mercantile Agencies.

The House on Tuesday by a vote of 85 to 79, adopted a bill holding Mercantile Agencies responsible for erroneous ratings of business houses, and excluding their reporters from privilege.

Probate Court will be held in Salem next Monday, June 1.

"For all he did, and all he dared, we honor him today."

NOTICE.

To Dealers in Milk.

In accordance with chapter 57 of the Public Statutes, the subscriber has been duly appointed Inspector of Milk for the Town of Peabody for the year eighteen hundred and ninety-one.

All persons selling or dealing in milk within the limits of the town are hereby notified to appear at my office on the first day of May next, or within thirty days thereafter and obtain a license in accordance with the law.

Farmer's Institute and Field Day.

Many farmers in this and other town having expressed a desire to know more about the Massachusetts Agricultural College and Experiment Stations, at Amherst, the officers of the Bay State Agricultural Society, have arranged for an excursion, institute and field day at Amherst, Thursday and Friday, June 11 and 12. Reduced rates have been secured on the Boston and Maine, Fitchburg, Massachusetts Central and New London Northern Railroads, also reduced hotel rates.
Those who attend will be given the fullest opportunity to inspect the work of the School and Stations. At various points of interest about the barns, fields, orchards, etc., there will be interesting familiar talks by the different Professors on fertilizers, cattle feeding, insecticides and other practical topics. We trust some farmers from this vicinity will find it convenient to attend.

Dr. Graves Gets Bail.

Dr. Graves has been admitted to bail.
The amount of the bonds were fixed at $30,000, and were furnished by six business men of Kansas City. He will come East as soon as possible and look after his interests in the estate of the late Mrs. Barnaby. The last will was offered for probate this week, but was contested, and if it should fail of probation other wills are ready to be offered, in one of which the doctor is a legatee.

A FATAL MISTAKE.

Physicians make no more fatal mistake than when they inform patients that nervous heart troubles come from the stomach and are of little consequence. Dr.
Franklin Miles, the noted Indiana specialist, has proven the contrary in his new book on "Heart Disease" which may be had free at Wm. T. Lee's who guarantees and recommends Dr. Miles unequaled New Heart Cure, which has the largest sale of any heart remedy in the world. It cures nervous and organic heart disease, short breath, fluttering, pain or tenderness in the side, arm or shoulder, irregular pulse, fainting, smothering, dropsy, etc. His Restorative Nervine cures headache, fits, etc.

LITERARY NOTES.

Several pages of pictures in Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper this week are devoted to President Harrison's trip to California.
The battle-field of Gettysburg and its monuments also require a page; a fashionable four-in-hand passing the Vanderbilt mansion in New York presents a remarkably attractive first-page picture, and another page is devoted to the adventures of the Leslie exploring party in Alaska. "The Millennium: An Impending Catastrophe," by Professor Totten, of Yale University, is the leading editorial in Frank Leslie's, and a startling one it is. Printed in English and German. Price ten cents.

man" is what is said of Mrs. M. O. W. Ol-iphant's "Memoir of the Life of Laurence Oliphant," to be published May 26th by Harper & Brothers. The work is embraced in two volumes, and includes, besides an interesting narrative of the life of Mr. Oliphant, and of Alice Oliphant, his wife—with portraits of each—numerous extracts from his letters and from some of his other writings.

A Decoration Day poem, entitled "An Old Soldier," by Margaret E. Sangster, will be published in Harper's Young People for May 26th.

A never failing charm of The Ladies' Home Journal is that it is always abreast of the season; somehow it presents just the things one wants most to see at the particular time it comes out; this seems especially true of the June number, with its dainty pages for the Brides of June, Florence Howe Hall's "In Church, or at Home?" Mrs.
Mallon's suggestions for brides and their maids, and Ella Wheeler Wilcox's clever comparisons between women and flowers.
Quite as timely, also, are the portrait sketch of Lady Agnes Macdonald, the wife of Canada's Premier; Sister Rose Gertrude's description of "Life Among the Lepers at Molokai"; Charles J. Dumar's article on "Women as Type-setters," and William H.
Riding's "Hints on House Building."

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL.

Next week is the third and last week of Augustin Daly's Company at the Hollis Street Theatre. The repertoire is as follows: Monday evening, "A Night Off"; Tuesday evening and Wednesday Matinee, "Railroad of Love"; Wednesday evening, "Love's Labor Lost"; Thursday evening, "As You Like It"; Friday evening and Saturday Matinee and evening, "7-20-8."

At the Globe Theatre a hit commenced
Tuesday that will continue for an indefinite period—The Hornets' Nest and The People "In It." Ben Lodge, well known in this vicinity, is one of the prominent figures in the cast.

"The Wolves of New York" play their closing performance at the Boston Theatre to-day.

Next Wednesday is souvenir night at the Park Theatre, and closes the engagement of "A Night's Frolic."

Miss Lydia Thompson bows her farewell at the Tremont to-night. Next week Miss Mary Lawman will appear in "Vittoria."

WIT AND HUMOR.

What did you think of the sermon this morning? I was very much interested. I never supposed that so simple a text was so hard to elucidate.

Home without a mother is not so intolerable after all, the small boy thinks when he finds that the jam closet has inadvertently been left unlocked.

We cannot all learn to write like Shakespeare, but most of us, if we try hard, can learn to spell, and that is something Shakespeare couldn't do.

All things come to him who waits, the proverb says, but statistics show that she who waits frequently waits vainly all her life in Massachusetts.

Woman is naturally more religious than man; and yet man is more fluent with Biblical words when he pounds his thumb instead of the tack he aimed at.

Men criticize women because they are not more practical, and yet a woman can say "No" and make a man realize it in a way that is very practical indeed.

The spotted girl in a Baltimore hospital who says that she would like to be either white or black possess a good square common sense. There's no mugwump in hers.

It is very inelegant to end a sentence with a preposition, but it is also very unwise to say so to your employer when he asks in vivid tones:—What in blazes did you do that for?

It is mean to tell a minister when he has just smoked the good cigar you gave him that the cigar was given you in payment of a bet.

It doesn't foreshadow much happiness in future married life when a young man takes a box of candy to his fiancée and eats two-thirds of it himself during his evening call.

Few things give the average hard-headed business man more pleasure than the ability to say of a successful actress of the stage:—Oh, yes, I meet her quite frequently in private life.

"The power of music, all our hearts allow," but there are a few ignorant persons who have not learned yet, that all colds are cured by Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup. Buy it and try it, 75 cents a bottle.

It is astonishing what a lot of soulful comfort many people take in keeping their clocks eight or nine minutes fast so that they have to practice a lot of mental arithmetic every time they want to catch a train.

If everybody improves the minutes with the zeal that a hen puts into her work while making a surreptitious five-minute call in a flower garden, what a world this would be. What a scratching around would result.

The New York Recorder, without intending any disrespect to the managers of the Lick telescope, says that there are more powerful glasses sold in the Bowery every day, at five cents each, than astronomers have ever dreamed of.

When a man has a bad cough it annoys him to have people come to him and tell him about there infallible cures. He forgets how many times he has inflicted his infallible cure on other people.

Often when a man makes an unreasonable demand of you, if you lead him to think that you are willing to try to carry out his wishes, he will drop the whole matter and feel perfectly contented, too.

No matter how delicately it is done, it never pleases a woman somehow to have her husband point out in the cemetery the kind of monument he thinks he will get for her when the occasion comes.

Taking her literally—Ethel (excitedly) I've got at a wrinkle. Maud (calmly)—Well, my dear, I suppose they are unavoidable.

You mustn't associate with chickens, said mother Duck to her ducklings. Why not, mamma? Because they are not in the swim.

The Lowell Courier thinks that Grover is too poorly to be much of a sprinter, but even he wouldn't object to running down Hill.

It is reported that at the next meeting of the Fish Commission the question will be "Which smells worst, a dead alewife or a live alewife?"

Manners and Society.

Fine social intercourse is really the finest of the fine arts; and if painting and sculpture and architecture are worth cherishing, so is that higher standard of manners without which these things are merely a misplaced fringe for barbarism. It is true that manners joined with nothing better are disappointing. It is true that a hungry man would rather dine with a boor on venison than with Duke Humphrey on his proverbial dinner—that is, on nothing. But if the boorishness destroys one's appetite, where is the good of venison? and "a dinner of herbs where love is"—or even where refinement is—turns out the better bill of fare. The true charm of fine manners is best seen in poverty, when attainable there; but wealth is doubtless the better school for them at first, and this is one reason why men are tempted by wealth.

The English word "means," or the phrase "a man of means," is very instructive, for it views property but as a means toward something more important. And though many men go no further than the means, yet it is something that we have this great truth recognized in language. So all the love for fashionable novels is really an expression of a longing after the refinements of life. And though the "society columns" are often made up largely of the doings of the socially obscure, and though the socially prominent usually try to keep out of them, yet they are no doubt a humble school for good manners to those readers who distrust themselves. The young girl who with vague admiration reads of Mrs. A.'s and Mrs. B.'s entertainments perhaps acquires the wish that when she also is annexed to some matrimonial letter of the alphabet, she also may have an attractive home.—T. W. Higginson in Harper's Bazar.

Cheer for the Ailing.

A physician who has noted the dreariness of the typical waiting room for patients and its evil effects on people already in an unhappy frame of mind from bodily ills has devoted some time to making his reception rooms as cheerful and lively as good taste will permit. In place of bare, white walls, with an odd print or two upon them, a bookcase containing dry medical works and a stand filled with stiff looking bric-a-brac, he has an abundance of well executed paintings or prints, the subjects of which are of an interesting and cheerful nature. The center table is covered with copies of the latest novels, illustrated magazines and files of the humorous weekly papers. The furniture includes several large easy chairs, so restful that when once settled in one of them a person is reluctant to get up again.

"It costs something to do all this," said he, "but it is certainly a good investment. Waiting in a dull, cheerless room is very trying to the nerves, and most visitors to a doctor's office are nervous and irritable. Like all reforms, however, it is carried to excess by some physicians. I know several who have the walls of their reception rooms completely covered with oil paintings, so that the room looks like a badly crowded picture gallery. But the idea is a good one and is rapidly gaining ground."—New York Telegram.

Have You a Family?

A Father of a family is inclined to think the wear and tear on furniture and carpets is enormous. The children don't mind it, because they don't appreciate the expense. But you do, and every dollar you pay over and above OUR PRICES is a loss. We are in the market to supply the best goods at the lowest prices, and it only costs you the price of a postal card or a stamp to get our prices. Investing a cent to save a dollar.

Do It To-day.

A Mother should take into account the wear and tear of the children. In buying a Lounge, or a Bedstead, or a Carpet, why not buy one that will stand the racket? You can buy it here as low as a poor one would cost you somewhere else, and don't let it go too long. If ready money is scarce, we will accommodate you with easy payments. Don't put it off.

N. B.—More than eighty thousand families in New England can testify that we sell every description of house furnishings cheaper than any other house in the business.

The Columbian Fair.

Hon. Thomas M. Waller of Connecticut, has been chosen to take charge of the foreign affairs department of the Exposition, and will soon open headquarters in London, from which information of every description will be furnished to attending exhibitors and visitors. Mr. Waller will visit every capital and considerable city of Europe in the interest of the Exposition. Mr. Waller has been speaker of the Connecticut assembly, mayor of New London, governor of Connecticut and under President Cleveland, Consul General to London, which is the most important position in the United States consular service. He was very popular in London, and by reason of his associations and wide acquaintance, is thought peculiarly well fitted to be the foreign representative of the Exposition. Mr. Waller is first vice-president of the National Commission.

A BABY SAVED!

Since birth my baby had running sores all over his head, and the doctors said that he must die for they could not heal them. I used everything I ever heard of, but it was no good. He got so bad that he would not nurse. My husband's sister told me to try Sulphur Bitters as she had great faith in them. I used a bottle and the sores commenced to heal. After using two bottles more, the sores all healed and I considered my baby saved.—Mother, Concord, N. H.

Governor Stephens' Last Act.

Governor Alexander Stephens—dying a few years ago—persisted in having all business matters brought to his bedside. There was on the table a petition for the pardon of a distinguished criminal; the petition was signed by distinguished men. There was also on that table a letter from a poor woman in the penitentiary, written and signed by herself alone. "Dying," said the great governor. "You think that because I have been ill so many times and got well that I shall get well now, but you are mistaken; I will not recover. Where is that letter by that woman in the penitentiary? I think she has suffered enough. As near as I can tell she has no friends. Bring me that paper that I may sign her pardon."

A gentleman standing by, thinking this too great a responsibility for the sick man, said, "Governor, you are very sick now, perhaps you had better wait till tomorrow; you may feel stronger and you may feel better." Then the eye of the old governor flashed, and he said, "I know what I am about." Putting his signature to that pardon he wrote the last word he ever wrote, for then the pen fell from his pale and rheumatic and dying hand forever. How beautiful that the closing hours of life should be spent in helping one who had no help!—Dr. Talmage in Ladies' Home Journal.

An Opal Worth a Million.

The most famous opal in history was that which was worn in a ring by the Roman senator Nonius, in the day of the triumvirate. Its size equaled that of a medium sized hazel nut. Yet its beauty and brilliancy rendered it a marvel among the dilettanti of Rome, especially when it was known that the goldsmiths and "money changers" had set its value at $1,000,000.

Mark Antony made overtures to Nonius for its purchase, intending, it is thought, to present it to Cleopatra, but the senator refused to part with it, and for fear that it would be taken from him by sheer force sought safety in flight. Here history loses all trace of this famous gem, there being no record of its transference from Nonius to any of his family.—St. Louis Republic.

A Queer Provision in a Will.

The following will, though not especially curious in itself, throws a curious light on the streets of London in the Seventeenth century. John Cooke, among other bequests, left one pound sterling "for the maintenance of a lantern and candle—to be light in the pound at the least—to be kept and hanged out at the corner of St. Michael's lane, next Thames street, from St. Michael's lane to Lady Street, between the hours of 9 and 10 o'clock at night until the hours of 4 or 5 in the morning, for affording light to passengers going through Thames street or St. Michael's lane."—All the Year Round.

ASSESSORS' NOTICE.

To the Inhabitants and other Persons liable to pay Taxes in the Town of Peabody.

The Assessors of the Town of Peabody hereby give notice to the inhabitants of said town, and all other persons liable to pay taxes therein, that their office will be open on and after the first day of May until and including the first day of June, and all persons liable to be taxed in said town are hereby required to bring in at the said office true and correct lists of all the persons (male twenty years old and upward), and schedule and estimates of the personal estates for which they are liable to pay taxes.

Copartnerships

having a place of business in Peabody, and also in some other city or town within the Commonwealth, are especially notified to bring in a statement in accordance with the 24th section of the 11th chapter of the Public Statutes. Shipping and business income are not taxable in a firm, but each resident partner must include these items in his individual return.

Mortgaged Real Estate.

"Any mortgagee or mortgagee of real estate may bring in to the assessors of the town or city where such real estate lies," within the time specified in this notice, "a statement, under oath, of the amount due on each separate lot or parcel of such real estate, and the name and residence of every holder of an interest therein as a mortgagee or mortgagee of the real estate has agreed in writing in two or more places, or when a recorded mortgage includes for one sum two or more estates or parts of an estate, an estimate of the amount of the mortgagee's interest in each estate or part of an estate shall be given in such statement." (Chap. 175 of the Acts of 1892.) When a statement in conformity with the law above quoted is brought in, the real estate therein returned will be assessed under sections 14, 15 and 16, of chapter 11 of the Public Statutes. But in cases where the mortgagee or mortgagee of the real estate has agreed in writing to pay all taxes assessed thereon, NO STATEMENT OR RETURN IS REQUIRED from either mortgagee or mortgagee, unless requested by the assessors in writing.

Estates in Trust.

Persons holding estates in trust, whether for minors or otherwise, are particularly requested to furnish the assessors with statements in relation to such estates. When trust estates, or estates of persons deceased, have been divided during the past year, or have changed hands from other causes, the trustee, executor or administrator, or other person interested, is required to furnish notice of such change, and in default of such notice, will be held to pay the tax assessed, although such estate has been wholly divided and sold over.

Any person bringing in a list of all his taxable personal property will be assessed upon the valuation thereof, and any one neglecting to furnish the assessors with such list within the time above specified will be deemed at a legal meeting of the Board of Assessors, agreeably to the law of the Commonwealth. All persons will take notice that statements of personal property must be in writing, and subscribed under oath before one of the Assessors, at their office, on or before the FIRST DAY OF JUNE, and that the personal property of all taxable persons must be estimated by the Board, NOTWITHSTANDING A VERBAL STATEMENT OR INFORMAL WRITTEN COMMUNICATION TO ANY ONE OR MORE OF THE ASSESSORS. (Pub. Stat., chap. 11, sec. 39 and 41.) When a person has failed to bring in a list or schedule of all his taxable personal property in conformity with this notice, no abatement of a tax so assessed upon such person for personal property can be granted, "unless such tax exceeds by more than fifty per cent. the amount which would have been assessed to that person on his personal estate, if he had seasonably brought in said list; and if said tax exceeds by more than fifty per cent. the said amount, the abatement shall be only of the excess above the said fifty per cent." (Pub. Stat., Chap. 11, Sec. 73.)

Any person taxable in Peabody for personal property can obtain a BLANK SCHEDULE for making a list of his personal property, with directions for properly filling the same, by applying at the assessors' office.

Literary, Benevolent, Charitable and Scientific Corporations.

The attention of the officers of all Literary, Benevolent, Charitable and Scientific Corporations, located in Peabody, is particularly called to the requirements of Chapter 217 of the Acts of 1882 as the property of said corporations, both personal and real, will be subject to taxation unless the law is complied with. Blank forms for the purpose can be had at the office of the assessors.

TOWN OF PEABODY.

BOARD OF HEALTH REGULATIONS.

THE Board of Health appointed by the Town hereby make and publish as required by law, the following "Regulations for the Public Health and Safety":

The Board shall make such regulations as it judges necessary for the public health and safety. Whoever violates any such regulation shall forfeit a sum not exceeding one hundred dollars. (Excerpt from the Public Statutes Chap. 80, § 18.)

REGULATION 1ST. It being the duty of the Board of Health of the Town of Peabody, to make such examination of the premises of persons residing in said town as they shall deem necessary for the public welfare, the Board hereby give notice and require that all premises within said limits shall be ready for inspection by the Board on and after May 20th, 1891.

REGULATION 2ND. No house of ill, filthy water, dead animals or refuse of any kind, shall be thrown upon the streets by any person; and no butcher, fish monger or vendor of merchandise, shall leave any refuse upon the streets of this town.

REGULATION 3RD. If, upon inspection, any rubbish, offal, decaying animal or vegetable matter, or filth of any kind be found in, under or about any building, or in any yard or enclosure, upon any premises, or in the ponds or water courses of said Town of Peabody, or if any privy or drain be found so discharging as to prove a nuisance, and offensive or deleterious to the public health, the owner or occupant of such property or premises shall be notified by the Board to remove or abate such nuisance within twenty-four hours after said notice has been served.

REGULATION 4TH. If any owner or occupant of property as aforesaid, after having been duly notified, shall neglect to comply with the requirements of the above section, the Board of Health shall cause any and all nuisances to be removed or abated at the expense of the owner or occupants.

REGULATION 5TH. On and after June 1st 1891, swine shall not be kept within the following limits in this town except by permit from the Board of Health:—Commencing at the boundary stone east of Holly street and running on the southerly side of Margin street seven hundred feet; thence North westerly in a straight line to Liberty, five hundred feet North of Mr. Simon P. Buxton's residence; thence Westerly in a straight line to Andover street bridge; from the bridge southerly in a straight line, to Swampscott avenue; through Swampscott avenue to Strongwater brook; thence Easterly in a straight line to the Eastern end of Clement avenue and the Salem line; thence by the Salem line to Willow, Shillaber, Born, Main, Grove, Walnut, Mt. Vernon, Tremont and Highland streets to the boundary stone begun at. No goats shall be kept within the limits of this Town, except in pastures, or in enclosures.

REGULATION 6TH. No public funeral shall be held over the remains of any person having died of SMALL POX, SCARLET FEVER, DIPHTHERIA, TYPHOID FEVER or MEMBRANOUS CROUP, without the written permit of the Board of Health, under such regulations as may prevent the spread of either of such diseases.

REGULATION 7TH. The remains of any person dying of either of said diseases shall be placed in a tight or sealed coffin, and shall not thereafter be exposed to view or disturbance, except for burial, and no undertaker or other person shall be permitted to take to any house, or use any bier or stand with draperies, which is to be used at any other funerals.

REGULATION 8TH. No owner, driver or any other person having charge of any hackney carriage or other vehicle used as a public conveyance, shall convey in or upon said

carriage or other vehicle, any person sick or infected with the Small Pox, Scarlet Fever, Diphtheria, or other contagious diseases, or the body of any person who has died of any contagious disease. Without the written permit of the Board of Health, to be given under such regulations as may prevent the spread of such disease, any vehicle which shall be so used shall be immediately disinfected under the supervision of the Board of Health, and before any other person shall be conveyed in or upon it. This regulation is intended to cover all cases where persons are conveyed in funerals at houses where any one has died of any contagious disease.

REGULATION 9TH. It shall be the duty of occupants of dwellings in which any person or persons may be sick with SMALL POX, DIPHTHERIA, SCARLET FEVER, TYPHOID FEVER or MEMBRANOUS CROUP, and Physicians attending such cases forthwith to notify the Board of Health of the fact.

REGULATION 10TH. The occupants of buildings, or dwellings where Small Pox exists, or has existed, shall prohibit and prevent the removal of clothes, bedding and upholstery, or other articles, from the infected buildings, except the removal is made by permission, or under direction of the Board of Health.

REGULATION 11TH. The occupants of buildings or dwellings where Scarlet Fever and Diphtheria exist shall withdraw all children attending school, from the same, and the teachers of said schools shall NOT allow their children thus withdrawn to re-enter the school until they shall present a certificate from the attending Physician vouching for the safety thereof.

REGULATION 12TH. Night soil carts shall not be allowed to pass through the streets in the thickly settled portions of the town between sunrise and sunset, from June 1st to Nov. 1st, without a special permit from the Board of Health.

REGULATION 13TH. Any person in the town of Peabody who knows or suspects any domestic animal has contracted disease, such as glanders in horses or cholera in dogs, must report the same to the Board of Health. The penalty for neglect to do so is fine or imprisonment.

The above is in accordance with the provisions of Chapter 253 of the Acts of 1887.

The Board earnestly requests the co-operation of every individual, in securing the desirable sanitary condition, to promote which the foregoing regulations are framed.

"Section 1, chap. 98 of the laws of 1884. When a householder knows that a person within his family is sick of small pox, diphtheria, scarlet fever or any other disease dangerous to the public health, he shall immediately give notice thereof, to the selectmen or board of health of the town in which he dwells, and upon the death, recovery or removal of such person, the rooms occupied and the articles used by him shall be disinfected by such householder in a manner approved by the board of health. Any person neglecting or refusing to comply with either of the above provisions shall forfeit a sum not exceeding one hundred dollars."

MORTGAGEE'S SALE.

By P. F. Tierney, Auctioneer 252

Essex Street, Salem

By virtue of a power of sale contained in a mortgage deed given by Henry Dodge to Cornelius H. Buckley, dated September twenty-third, A. D. 1889, and recorded in Essex Registry of Deeds, South District, in Book 1296, leaf 128, for breach of the condition contained in said mortgage, and the purpose of foreclosing the same, will be sold at public auction, on the premises hereinafter described on Wednesday, the tenth day of June, A. D. 1891, at 12 o'clock, noon, the premises of said mortgagee, to-wit:—viz:—The lot of land, situated in Peabody, in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, which is bounded, beginning at a point on Lowell street, and thence running southerly by land now or formerly of John G. Walcott, parallel with and distant fifty-six and one-half feet from the northwesterly side of the underpinning of the new dwelling house on the premises, twenty rods; thence southeasterly by land now or late of said Walcott, eight rods; thence northeasterly by land now late of said Walcott, parallel with and about fifty-six and one-half feet distant from the southeasterly side of the underpinning of said house, twenty rods, to said Lowell street; thence northwesterly by Lowell street, eight rods, to the point begun at. Being the same premises described in the deed recorded in said Registry, in Book 1185, leaf 22.

ESSEX SS.

Court of County Commissioners, April Term, A. D. 1891.

Upon the petition of B. W. RUSSELL and others, praying for a highway to be laid out and constructed, beginning at the easterly terminus of Walnut street in the town of Peabody, and County aforesaid, and leading in an easterly direction to Grove street in Salem.

Notice having been duly given, to all persons and corporations interested therein, we, the County Commissioners for said County, having met, and viewed the premises, and heard the parties, who then and there desired to be heard, do advise that the public convenience, and necessity require that a highway should be laid out and constructed as prayed for in said petition, commencing at the easterly terminus of Walnut street in the town of Peabody, and leading in an easterly direction to Grove street in Salem, at a point on Grove street near the tannery of James Dugan and on the northerly side thereof through land of Harmony Grove Cemetery Corporation and land of said Dugan.

In testimony whereof, we, the said County Commissioners, have hereunto set our hands this 27th day of April, A. D. 1891.

ESSEX SS.

Court of County Commissioners, April Term, A. D. 1891, held by adjournment at Salem, May 4, 1891.

On the adjudication, aforesaid, ordered. That notice be given to all persons and corporations interested therein, that said County Commissioners will meet at their office, in Salem, in said County, on WEDNESDAY, the 10th day of June next, at 9.30 o'clock, A. M.—by publishing an attested copy of said adjudication, and of this order therein, in the Salem Gazette and Peabody Press, a newspaper printed in Salem and Peabody, respectively, once a week, for three weeks successively, the last publication to be fourteen days at least before the said tenth day of June, at which time and place said Commissioners will proceed to take such order in relation to said adjudication, as by law they may be authorized to do.

SUNSET ON THE MARSH.

Willows and willows in two gust worn rows,
The fading sunset and the marsh between
A road beneath whose little pools lie keen
At twilight roots, and faint the last light glows.
The yellowing leaves flame down each wind
That blows
And choke the pools and heap the rushes lean.
Wheels rumble; up the road a cart is seen:
White in a whirl of dust it lumbers shows;
Eastward, beyond the wall of gust worn trees,
A rotting boat drawn up among the reeds;
Creeks that past foggy alders, blowing slip;
Salt scents; the stir of solitary bees;
A startled bird that shoreward clamoring
Speeds;
And leagues of water empty of a ship.

PARADISE FOUND.

We had endured life in all its varied phases of housekeeping, boarding, restauranting and co-operative dining, and now as the summer season drew near my wife and I resolved on spending our vacation in a novel manner. We felt that our experiences in the past had prepared us for whatever unknown hardships awaited us in the future.

After many vexatious delays we were at last ready to start. Our electric road cart was all that could be desired. It was of the latest invention, and was provided with the necessary conveniences for light house-keeping. It was in fact a miniature house on wheels.

Early in the morning of a bright June day we took our seats in the roomy bamboo chairs, bade our friends goodbye, and closed the door of our new home. My wife was somewhat excited at first, owing to the novel situation, but she soon grew calm. I pressed the electric button, the engine began to purr, and away we went.

We had no definite plan as to our destination other than this: We would start out on the street that ran directly north from our native village, and follow every branch road that led to the right. By doing this we hoped to lose ourselves in a very short time, and expected to meet with many strange adventures.

We rolled along at a rapid rate. The indicator over the door marked the miles with a regular click, click, like the ticking of a clock. A continuous line of green spotted out along each side of the road dotted with telegraph poles, that really appeared to be only a few inches apart, so swiftly were we moving. Of course I was obliged to hold the rudder with a firm hand, and keep a good lookout from the front window to avoid a collision, for we were continually meeting conveyances of every kind.

As the hours passed by we began congratulating ourselves. By following the several right hand roads we were, as we had hoped, decidedly lost. Everything about us was new and strange.

"How delightful," my wife exclaimed, as she drew the tea table near my chair. "The very air we breathe is filled with a primitive newness that is charming. It is as if one had been suddenly transported to another planet."

When night settled down and the dusky road made it unsafe to proceed farther we followed a broad path that led from the highway into a grove of low spreading trees, and, fastening the doors and windows securely, retired for the night.

The second day's journey brought us into a strange country, unlike anything we had ever seen or imagined. For a long distance the road followed the bank of a broad river, from which the land arose on either side to a great height, in a succession of natural terraces. Fields of vegetables and grain and flourishing fruit orchards alternated with pasture lots, where droves of plump cattle and flocks of sheep waded knee deep in red clover. Everything wore a thrifty, prosperous look.

We rode slowly along, admiring the beautiful scenery. A few houses, exceedingly old and tall apparently built from the same plan, were seen in some of the most sheltered spots. In the distance were tall chimneys, from which great clouds of black smoke arose, and as we advanced we could hear the low hum of machinery. We were evidently approaching large manufacturing concerns of some sort, and my wife expressed a hope that we were nearing some town, as our supply of provisions, owing to the wonderful appetites we had acquired, was fast diminishing.

Her hope was soon realized, for a sudden turn in the road gave us our first view of a most remarkable town. The streets ran at right angles with each other, which gave the place the appearance of an immense checker board. The houses were of the same uniform style as those we had seen in the surrounding country—very neat, but extremely small. My wife remarked on one peculiarity of their construction. Among them all there was no sign of the kitchen addition in the rear, to which we had been accustomed.

The tall chimneys we had first noticed were a part of the one story buildings, which stretched along the bank of the river for several blocks. It was quite early in the morning, and none of the inhabitants were astir, but feeling the pangs of hunger, we began to look around for a corner grocery.

Just as we were opposite one of the low buildings on the bank of the river a boy wearing a red uniform came rushing through the door and started on a run down the street. He carried a red tin box in his hand. I called him and asked to be directed to a provision store. He stared at me as if in doubt of my sanity, and while I waited his reply I noticed a very peculiar expression on his countenance, a sort of an infantile expression which I was at a loss to account for, until his lips parted as his amazement increased, and I discovered that he was toothless.

Without giving the required information, much to our surprise he ran away. And then another and another, wearing the same striking uniform, and with the same baby face, darted through the several front doors of the buildings, and followed in the track of number one. They all carried the red tin boxes, decorated with different labels. There were vegetable, animal, cereal, saccharine and acetons, besides many other names that were entirely new to us.

We saw them stop at each house where boxes of the same style they carried were hanging from the front door knobs. Our curiosity was excited, and forgetting for the moment our hunger, we hastened our speed, determined to investigate. We saw one of them take a small quantity of something that resembled the homeopathic pellets we kept in our medicine chest and drop them in the box that hung from the door knob. Then away he ran to the next house and repeated the operation. As far as we could see these red robed boys were darting here and there, crossing each other's paths like June fireflies before a storm.

We watched them a while, but our clamorous appetites sent us again in search of food. We turned many corners and followed long lengths of streets, but not a sign of anything eatable could we discover. Just as we were becoming thoroughly discouraged a man with a fresh, pleasant face and a well fed appearance opened the door and lifted the box from the knob. Not without some misgivings I called to him and made known our situation.

He stared at us a moment as the boy had done. I began to grow impatient. "We are strangers, sir, and are hungry," I said. "Will you kindly direct us to a provision store?"

"It is a surprise to me," he replied, "to meet with the people who are so very far behind the times. From what distant planet do you come that you enter a civilized city and ask for a provision store? Why, my dear friends, there has been nothing of the sort in this part of the world for many years."

"How, then, do you manage to live?" I asked.

He tapped the box with his plump forefinger, and nodded his head significantly.

"Here, sir, is my provision store," and without more ado he lifted the lid. It was divided into several compartments, in each of which was a small quantity of pellets of different shapes and colors. "You surely don't mean to say that you eat nothing but these nasty pills," said my wife in rather a sarcastic tone.

"And why not, my dear madame?" said he, holding a brown pellet between his thumb and forefinger, and eyeing it fondly, "here is the nutriment from a pound of beef. And here, picking up another, 'is a pound of potatoes. Then here I have my bread and fruit, in proper proportions, besides many other compounds, equally nourishing and satisfying."

Of course we were very much interested, and asked for some further information concerning this wonderful country with its condensed diet.

After swallowing half a dozen pellets with evident relish, he continued: "It was many years ago that a party of chronic dyspeptics, who were traveling in search of health, discovered this beautiful valley and decided on making it their future home. As might be expected, their thoughts turned inward, and their minds were a unit in their anxiety to discover a remedy for their ills. Great rewards were offered, and science was tested to its extreme limits. Behold," said he, pointing proudly to the smoking chimneys and buzzing factories, "behold the results! The products of the surrounding country are entered at the rear of these buildings as raw material, and are distributed from the front doors in this condensed form. And now, after several generations of pellet fed people, we have become a race of perfect men and women."

"Our latest achievement is a generation of toothless children. As we have no use for teeth with this diet we are well satisfied with this improved condition of our race. There is only one drawback to our perfect happiness. We are beginning to fear that we shall never die, but continue to multiply until we are crowded off into space."

"Oh, Tom," my wife exclaimed, "what a delightful existence we have stumbled upon! I understand now why the houses are built without kitchens. It settles the whole vexatious servant problem at one stroke. Just think of it—condensed meals that one can easily carry in their bonbon boxes are delivered the same as our daily papers. Think of the annoyances these people escape, the time they save, besides the perfect health they enjoy. Tom, my dear, we will go no farther in search of a home. Here is an earthly paradise, and here we will remain."

At a signal a group of red robed boys surrounded our cart and she gave her order for a pellet breakfast.—H. T. Holland in Detroit News.

Visible Sound.

The idea of getting a visual expression for musical vibrations occurred to Chladni, a physicist of the last century. He fastened a plate of glass by its center, and then having scattered some sand over the surface threw it into sonorous vibrations by means of a violin bow. Imagine the delight with which he saw the sand stir and form into line on the plate, forming a star of twelve rays. Square plates of glass or metal screwed or even glued to a central support can be made by the merest tyro with tools, and give wonderful results.

A plate, like a string, has one rate of vibration which belongs to it, but again, like a string, by "dampening" it with a touch of the finger or fingers in different points along the edge the note changes, and with it the figure made by the sand. The lines on the plate where the sand settles are the nodes, the lines of comparative rest. The violent agitation in the parts left bare can be shown by mixing a little lycopodium powder with the sand; this is excessively light, and is caught in the little whirlwinds of air generated about the vibrating segments.—Sophie B. Herrick in Century.

He Was Saved.

A Michigan man tumbled into a hole four feet deep one evening, and supposing himself at the bottom of a mine shaft forty feet deep, he put in the night praying and hallowing. When morning came he climbed out and gave a teamster a dollar to boot him for forty rods down the road.—Detroit Free Press.

NOTED AND QUOTED.

Lowell stands fourth among the cities of Massachusetts in the proportion of its foreign born among its total population. Its per cent. is 40.37. Holyoke is first with 49.79; Fall River second, with 49.16; Lawrence third, with 49.99; Chicopee fifth, 39.70; Boston sixth, 34.14 per cent. The shoe cities rank much lower in this respect. Haverhill is the least with 19.03 per cent, while Brockton has but 19.40.—Newburyport News.

The towns of Hampton and North Hampton have each purchased, the past week, large fire-proof safes, weighing over 7000 pounds, in which to keep the town records, etc.

The Massachusetts Harbor and Land Commissioners have recently decided that no one has a right to set a mooring for a boat or leave any floating body, above the line of low water, except by consent of the shore or upland.

A Haverhill hackman charged a party of out-of-town sports $2 to drive them to St. James' road house, not letting them know that the place was closed. He then demanded $3 more before he would take them home.

The report of the Massachusetts Insurance Commissioners upon the condition of the Preferred Mutual Accident Association which does a large business in Boston and other cities of the state, shows that Endowment Societies are by no means the only companies that need the attention of the legislature. Perhaps as we have before stated, it would be well to commence on the regular companies.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all other Throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellow-men. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. A few days ago a cat belonging to a resident at Linebrook sprang upon and caught a robin, which set up such a cry of distress as to attract the attention of a cock in a flock of hens near by, at once started to the rescue of the bird, and pouncing upon the cat with such a force as to compel it to drop its prey and seek refuge under a building near by, when the bird flew to parson's unknown.—Newburyport News.

It is quite true that there is an unflinching appearance about the Salem Court House job. The whole affair is a disjointed specimen of architecture, and the opinion has been often expressed by disinterested observers, that, with an expenditure of less money than was paid for remodelling and enlarging the New Court House, an entire new building could have been erected, more ornamental, and better suited to the County's needs.

Great excitement was created at Iowa City, on Monday, by the clubbing of a University student, by a policeman, for blowing a tin horn. Between 200 and 300 students went to the depot to welcome their ball team and became quite boisterous. A police officer ordered them to stop, and when one of the number afterward blew a tin horn, he came up behind and struck the student a brutal blow with his club, knocking him insensible to the ground. The officer was set upon and forced to take a cab and retire for help. When a posse returned they were charged by the students, two of whom were arrested and several times rescued, but finally taken away. The Mayor ordered their release but his mandate was unheeded. The Marshal was obliged to interfere and liberate the prisoners.

The new court house in Salem, or rather the old one, does not look well as it stands. The job needs finishing. We have an idea that county commissioners have been deterred from going on with the work as originally planned because of certain public criticisms upon the amount of money already spent. The new building was an addition to second court house already erected, and was architecturally an addition to the structure. The old building was covered with mastic which is now peeling off and giving to the structure an exceedingly shabby and decayed appearance. The plan ought certainly to be carried out now that it is so nearly completed, and upon that point we do not hear but one opinion.—Salem Gazette.

What is an Emporium? What goes into its make up? Why the term? The term at once suggests something large. A business conducted on an extensive scale. A mart of trade where everything of a special branch or several branches of a particular line are gathered together under one head. Such a combination properly managed affords at once immense advantages over single department stores.

Advantages in the way of trading with one salesman. Buying your goods at one place. Quicker service. Contracting a single bill in place of three or four. And lower prices. MRS. EVA I. FOWLER resides at Hampden Centre, Me., and as the bright October sun shone upon her face, glowing with health, as she stood upon the piazza of her little cottage, it was hard to realize that only a few months ago she was hastening towards the grave as fast as disease could do its fell work. Listen to the story she told us:—

"I am now twenty-one years old, and last winter I found myself failing rapidly. My side and back were so lame it hurt me to breathe. I felt tired and dragged out all the time, and could get upstairs only with great difficulty. I had a very bad cough. My appetite failed me, and after eating the lightest food I would have terrible distress at the pit of the stomach. I could not sleep. Night after night I would have to get up and sit up after one o'clock until morning. I tried Cod Liver Oil and other medicines, but received no benefit. MEMORIAL DAY IN PEABODY.

Extract of the Address of Hon.
Henry M. Cross of Newburyport.

Memorial Day was observed in Peabody in about the usual manner. Union post, 50 G. A. R., under command of Capt. W. F. Wiley, turned out about one hundred comrades Saturday afternoon and Warner camp, E. of V., about thirty members. The cemeteries were thronged with people. At Cedar grove the services on the soldiers' lot were conducted by Rev. Mr. Welch. The Woman's Relief corps furnished a collection at headquarters at the close of the dress parade. In the evening about 400 people assembled in Peabody Institute to listen to the services and address by Hon. Henry M. Cross of Newburyport.

The programme was the same as usual, and included the routine service of reading the orders by the Adjutant, Invocation, by Rev. A. F. Welch, Reading of the Scriptures by Rev. W. P. Ray, Prayer by Rev. W. L. Reynolds, singing of the National Hymn, and Benediction by Rev. J. W. Hudson. The Eighth Regiment Band played two selections and Commander William F. Wiley made a short address thanking the friends of the Post for the favors that they have bestowed and the assistance they have rendered during the past year. He took occasion also to commend the Women's Relief Corps for their efforts and to thank them for the aid they have rendered the Post. He then introduced comrade Henry M. Cross, of A. W. Bartlett, Post No. 49, G. A. R., of Newburyport.

Mr. Cross stepped forward and spoke substantially as follows:

Mr. Commander, Comrades and Fellow Citizens, I fully appreciate the opportunity your committee have offered me of addressing you to-night, yet I feel a consciousness of my inability to fulfill the undertaking, but if I can find some word or some thought connected with the many patriotic associations of this ancient town, I cannot fail to touch your hearts.

On arriving in Peabody I sought out the monument your citizens have reared to the memory of the heroes of this town who fell in the struggle for liberty, at Lexington, and I was pleased to see that while you honored the fallen heroes of the late war by your garlands, you had decorated the old monument also.

I have not come before you to-night with a formal written speech. I intended, when invited by your committee to deliver the Memorial Day address, to prepare a written oration, but have concluded to trust to such words as the inspiration of the hour may suggest.

I was not here in the morning and do not know just what has been done by the comrades, but with the manifestations of patriotism, and reverence for the heroes who have gone before us, that I witnessed in the brief interval after my arrival, I was much pleased.

In the absence of more extended notes, I want to read you a few lines appropriate to this occasion:

"Here rest the great and good. Here they repose After their generous toil. A sacred band, They take their sleep together, while the year Comes with its early flowers to deck their graves. They need no statues or inscriptions to reveal Their greatness. It is round them, and the joy With which their children tread the hal- lowed ground That holds their venerated bodies, the peace That smiles on all they cherished, and the wealth That clothes the land they fought for—these, though mute As feeling ever is when deepest—these Are monuments more lasting than the fanes Reared to the kings and demi-gods of old."

Here let us meet, and while our motionless lips Give not a sound, and all around is mute, In the deep sabbath of a heart too full For words or tears, here let us strew the sod With the first flowers of Spring, and make to them An offering of the plenty nature gives, And they have rendered ours—perpetually."

My friends, I want you to feel tonight after you have completed the duties of the day, and assemble here together, that the services you have performed are not duties alone, but privileges which you are permitted to enjoy. I want you to look upon the day as something larger and grander than a mere occasion for paying your tribute of respect to the memories of our departed friends and comrades; to consider that we are enjoying a great privilege in commemorating the preservation of this great nation to us, through the patriotism of the men who filled the great army of the republic during the civil war, and that by the example we set the boys of the rising generation, we are rearing a nation of young men, who, in future emergencies, shall be the bul-work of our institutions.

I found upon your monument to-day some words like these—if I can quote them aright: "The town to her sons who died in the great Rebellion that the Union might be preserved and liberty secured to all."

I do not suppose there is any one of us who would have thought so soon after the country was rent with the devastation of civil strife, that our nation could have been so completely reunited in peace and prosperity.

The Union has been preserved. Not a life was lost in vain. Not one drop of precious blood was wasted. The Union has been preserved and the bond of slavery has been broken forever.

My friends, let us look for a moment at the vast contrast between the year 1868, when Memorial Day was first observed, and the present year—1891. The feeling at the South, when Memorial Day services were first inaugurated, was one of desolation and despair. The recruits of the army had but recently returned to their homes which the ravages of war had laid waste. The work of reconstruction which was to open up the rich lands of promise had not begun. What do we find at the South to-day? Since the close of the civil war it has been my fortune to spend much time in the Southern States and enjoy friendly dealings with many men who have served in the various ranks and stations in the Confederate Armies, and I have failed to find one who does not rejoice in the preservation of the Union. I found not one who does not rejoice that slavery was abolished. There is among the people of the South a deep feeling of loyalty. In the event of a foreign war, the South would rush to the front with the same degree of zeal that characterized them in former times.

The destruction wrought in the South, by the invasions of war have proved a great lesson to the whole country, and revealed to the people of that section as well as to us, that to the Southern States of the Union, we must look for the future wealth and prosperity of the nation.

The speaker here quoted some figures comparing the area of the Southern States with the countries of Europe, and showed by comparison a wealth of coal, iron, timber and other staple productions that indicated the superior advantages of the Southern portion of our Union. He then proceeded to say—We are to share in the wealth of resources that are being opened up to day all through the South, through the preservation of the Union by the triumphs of the war. It has given us a country far greater and grander than we ever could have thought of before.

The custom of decorating the graves of heroes runs back into the annals of ancient history. In Rome and Greece the practice of honoring the brave by strewing flowers upon their graves and tombs was early introduced to honor the dead, and inculcate patriotism in the living.

In this country the practice started in the Southern States. Then there was not in Memorial Day one ray of hope. It was all gloom and desolation. To us was a remembrance of victory, and the emancipation of the colored race, while to them, it was but a painful reminder of defeat. The trenches filled with thousands of human remains were not yet overgrown with green. But, we have now come to a period when we can commemorate a far off day of sorrow and mourning. The feelings of the early days have almost all disappeared. Many of the veterans have passed over to the other side.

Let us think how the feelings between the two sections of the country have changed, in the interval, and how their methods have been altered. Recently a Sunday service which was attended by the Grand Army, in one of the Northern cities the sermon was delivered by a man who had been a soldier in the Confederate Army. At the funeral of the late Gen. Sherman, you will all remember, there were present several officers of the Confederate Army, and Gen. Joseph Johnston was one of the pall bearers. At New Orleans I have seen the Confederates and Grand Army comrades marching in line, decorating the graves of all who fell in the war, without distinction or discrimination.

I want to speak of the future of Memorial Day. I want to see this day perpetuated so that it may go down to succeeding generations. My feeling is that the subject is larger than a mere tribute to deceased comrades. This day is as much for every American citizen as for us. I hope to see the day become fixed in the heart of every loyal citizen, as the Fourth of July, and Seventeenth of June and the other days that are held in sacred remembrance, and while at every popular demonstration the Grand Army should always be on the right of the procession, still by the time they are taken away from the scenes of earth and there are no more comrades left the loving services of respect and patriotism will be taken up and carried on by other hands. I am pleased to see the manifestation of interest on the part of the public. I rejoice to see that last year in the legislature an act was passed providing that "in all public schools all of the Commonwealth, the last regular session prior to Memorial day, or a portion thereof, shall be devoted to exercises of a patriotic nature."

Our Memorial Day is not for the Grand Army alone. As the Grand Army of the Republic we take a special interest, but it is as citizens loving our country for what it is that we gather together on this day to perpetuate the memories of the past. We are not holding ourselves up as superior and particularly patriotic members of society entitled to special praise for what we have done. What we did, what patriotism we showed in 1861 is no different from what our boys of to-day would do.

It is the young men who have formed our armies in all times. Twenty-three is about the average age of those enlisted all our wars. Of the citizens of Danvers who fell at the battle of Lexington, whose names are inscribed upon your monument. I find Samuel Cook, 33; George Southwick, 25; Henry Jacobs, 22; Ebenezer Goldthwaite, 22; Jonathan Webb, 22; Peirley Putnam, 21.

Look upon your Soldier's Monument in the Square and notice the ages of those men. Or examine the names upon the Memorial Tablets in your town hall, and you will find from a total of 75, 30 years and under, 52; 25 years and under, 36; 20 years and under, 14.

served my country in one of the so called veteran regiments, and yet the average age of that regiment was not over twenty-three years. And when the time comes that we shall need to make another sacrifice for a great cause our boys will be just as ready to go forward, as we were in '61. It was a sacred privilege as well as a duty that we enjoyed.

These names will remain in sacred memory long after, the proudest and most prosperous citizens are forgotten. I have often thought the glory of having ones name inscribed on those tablets of honor is worth all the sacrifice it has cost to win it.

I think no more frequently of my war record than I do of my school boy days, but when my thoughts do revert to it I enjoy the thought that it was my privilege to go the defence of my country. When I heard a friend regretting that he was two years too young to enlist in the service, I thought how much more highly privileged I was than he.

I want to say something about the part Peabody took in the war. I have some resolutions passed by the town of South Danvers in 1862. I wish I knew who was the author. He may be in the hall this evening, but I suppose he has long since passed away.

Peabody was a long way ahead in responding to her country's call. In spite of the large number of men already sent, and the drain upon the resources of the town, every call for men was met with a determined spirit. The call for 500,000 in 1864, was responded to by the enlisting of 138 men, a surplus of 49, and for the whole war, the town had a surplus over its quota.

When the call came before in 1775, South Danvers responded with that same liberal, patriotic spirit. Its people were always loyal. Their hearts so thrilled with patriotism that they were not content with bearing their mere share in the war, but were ready to do more.

I want before reading the resolution of 1862, to read you a resolution adopted by the town of Danvers at the time of the Revolution. The speaker here read the following resolution: "Voted that if the honorable Congress for the safety of the United States declare them independent of the kingdom of Great Britain, we, the inhabitants of ILLUSIONS.

Go stand at night upon an ocean craft,
And watch the folds of its imperial train
Catching in fleecy foam a thousand glows—
A miracle of fire unquenched by sea.
There, in bewildering turbulence of change,
Whirls the whole firmament, till as you gaze,
All else unseen, it is as heaven itself
Had lost its pole, and each unanchored star
In phantom haste flees to the horizon line.

What dupe we are of the deceiving eye!
How many a light men wonderingly acclaim
Is but the phosphor of the path life makes
With its own motion, while above, forgot,
Sweep on serene the old unvarying stars!

AN ARIZONA ADVENTURE

While in command of a small scouting party in Arizona I went into camp one bright day on the Rio Puerco, very near the New Mexican line. The tents had been pitched and the animals sent out to graze under a strong guard, and I was walking before my tent impatiently waiting a summons to dinner, which I knew by the strong odor wafted from an adjacent coffee pot would not be much longer delayed.

We were about ninety miles from the nearest fort and hundreds from any settlement. There were no ranches whatsoever in this part, only some cattle and sheep belonging to Mexicans, which were herded through the territory. These were in the charge of Mexicans, who lived much the same kind of life as did their stock. Their blanket was their only house, and when night came on they would lie down wherever it might overtake them. For miles around the land was as level as the bed of a billiard table. Mountains were seen in the distance, which were inhabited by Indians. But my little command and a few rattlesnakes and tarantulas were the only living things near.

"Dinner is ready, lieutenant," was the welcome summons with which my cook greeted me, and I was soon doing full justice to an army field dinner of bean soup and "slapjacks."

I was in the midst of this savory repast when I noticed a stranger approaching me. He was a well built, powerful looking man, about forty years of age; his face was intellectual and extremely handsome; he wore a full beard and mustache, both of which were iron gray. He was coarsely clad and carried no weapon. This latter circumstance was the most remarkable thing of all, for in those days in Arizona one scarcely moved without his arms.

Nearing me he asked, in a pleasant, quiet manner, if I were the commanding officer.

I replied that I was.

"I came to see if you could lend me a pistol or a carbine for a few days," he said.

"You don't mean to tell me that you are entirely without arms?" I said, not unreasonably astonished.

"Yes; I have nothing of the kind," he answered. "I have been annoyed for the past three months by those infernal California lions, and if I had a shooting iron I might kill some of them."

"Are you camping near here?" I asked.

"I live just round the bend of the river. Will you walk down with me?"

Little dreaming I was so near a residence, I eagerly accepted his invitation, and filling my pipe and leaving the sergeant in charge of camp, I started forth with my new acquaintance. As we made the turn in the river I saw a large, shelving rock rising from the level prairie. It was not more than a hundred yards from the river's bank, and was really quite imposing in its dimensions. It struck me as so peculiar, so entirely out of place, that I expressed my surprise to my companion.

"Yes," he answered; "I fancy it is a meteorite. I am under great obligations to it, whatever it is and however it came here, for it has protected me for months. That rock is my house."

Greatly astonished, I asked if he lived there quite alone.

"Oh, no," he replied. "My wife and mother live with me."

By this time we had reached the natural dwelling. At what might be termed its opening the rock was ten feet or more from the ground, and it sheltered a space about twenty feet in breadth, gradually sloping backward and downward. As I stepped under the protecting roof I saw two women sitting at work.

My host presented me to his mother and wife respectively, and I saw at a glance that they were Mexicans; not of the class, however, known as greasers, but representatives of a much higher grade. Like most Mexicans, they were disinclined to converse in any language but their own; but when they learned that my knowledge of their tongue was too slight to enable me to understand them, they overcame their reluctance and we chatted quite pleasantly.

I learned that they had been living there for three months. They came with the intention of farming, and later proposed erecting a suitable dwelling.

The Indians had not molested them, but they were worried by the lions, which came by twos and threes nightly to the opening of their habitation, and there howled till daylight, when they returned to the mountain.

They told me it was necessary for one of them to be up all night to keep the fire burning, which was their only protection from these monsters.

Consequently they had taken turns sitting up nights for the last three months.

What surprised me most was the absence of all defensive weapons and farming implements. Not an article of the kind was in their possession. I saw one horse grazing near by, and a dilapidated wagon. Neither shovel, ax nor pistol was to be seen.

It was very apparent that the man had known better days. But in that wild country inquisitiveness often cost one's life. To be sure, I felt no fear with a good cavalry company at my back, but in most cases it was better to be satisfied with what was told me and what I saw.

Having listened to a graphic description of their far from pleasant neighbors, I told them frankly that if I had a pistol or carbine of my own I would willingly lend or give them one, but all the weapons in the command, even those on my person, belonged to the government, and that the orders respecting them were so stringent that I was utterly unable to accommodate them.

"I had a pistol when I came here," said my host, "but I lost it crossing the river. Since then you are the first person that has been this way."

I felt really sorry for them, and also felt that they might think I had given a very flimsy reason for refusing the loan they asked.

That three human beings should be annoyed night after night by wild beasts and a company of cavalry unable to give them protection seemed incredible, yet such appeared to be the case.

At length a happy thought struck me. "I tell you what I will do," I said. "I will send the company in charge of the sergeant about five miles farther down the river to encamp, then I will bring Curley with me, and we will stay here to-night with you. Curley is an old frontiersman, and is acting guide for me. He is a good shot, and will enjoy the sport."

My proposal was joyfully accepted, and I returned to camp to give the necessary directions. About an hour later the company moved out, and Curley and I were alone.

"What sort of an outfit is that down there?" said my companion, pointing to the stone mansion I had recently left.

"I cannot tell you," I answered. "The people say they are worried by the lions, and I have told them you and I will stay with them tonight and sample a few."

"Some escaped jailbird, I suppose," said Curley. "The country's full of them."

"Yes," I answered, "the country is full of them, but I am sure this man is no criminal. His manner and his appearance, barring his clothes, are those of a gentleman, and his wife seems more than ordinarily refined."

"Well," said Curley, "if they will trot out the lions for us we don't care what they are."

With that we started toward the rock. The California lion may have a legitimate name, but this is the only one I have ever heard applied to him. He belongs to the panther and wildcat families, being, I believe, a cross between the two.

The animals are much larger than wild cats, and when hungry are very ferocious. One is sufficiently powerful to pull down a deer, and two will make short work of a buffalo. Their home is in the mountains, but they come to the plains and down into the canyons in search of food.

We spent the afternoon talking with our new acquaintances, who seemed well informed on many subjects. Curley, who was not a bad Mexican scholar, carried on a brief conversation with the young wife in her mother tongue. No clew, however, did he obtain as to her former history.

They gave us coffee, bread and fried bacon for supper, and our host surprised and delighted us by producing from his trunk some cigars. Not a lamp nor a candle of any description did they have. When darkness came on they went to bed or on watch, as the case might be.

We told them all to retire whenever they felt disposed, and they wanted not a second bidding. We saw that our rifles were in good order, and that our ammunition was handy, then we permitted the fire to die out.

Not long did we wait; we had not been on guard more than half an hour, when Curley whispered to me, "Did you see that thing sneaking up here?"

I had already seen it; but it was only a coyote, so I said, "It is nothing but a coyote; we must not shoot, it will frighten the lions."

"I believe you are right," said Curley. "But how about this senator that is approaching?"

Sure enough, here came a large lion walking proudly along, scarcely thirty yards from us.

"Do not fire," said Curley. "Wait until we can get more of them."

A few minutes later four large lions were in our immediate front. The man had certainly told the truth thus far, whatever his intention as to farming might be.

"You take the one on the left, and I'll take the one on the right," said Curley. "Are you ready?"

"Ready," I replied.

"Fire!"

The report of our rifles and the screams of the startled sleepers were almost simultaneous; the three were sleeping soundly and the shots naturally startled them. I threw another cartridge into my rifle and fired at an escaping lion, but I doubt if I injured him. We rebuilt the fire and dragged two fine specimens of the brutes where its light would allow us to inspect them. I had shot one through the heart and Curley had sent a bullet through the brain of the other.

"I think we had better leave them outside," said Curley; "the others will scent the blood and come back."

Whether they scented the blood or not I am not prepared to say, but back they certainly came. We waited until a good opportunity offered, and then, at a given signal, fired again. Two more large lions fell, and Curley succeeded in loading and shooting one that was endeavoring to escape. This made five that we had killed. After watching another hour without any result, we made up the fire and slept until sunrise. The little family were overjoyed at beholding our night's work, and succeeded in convincing us of their sincere gratitude.

After breakfast Curley skinned the five animals and gallantly presented the pelts to the young wife. As we bade goodby to the rock family he said, "If you rub a little strychnine over these carcasses and stake them at some little distance from your ranch you will not be troubled much longer by the lions."

Then, with a cordial farewell, we proceeded down the river to overtake the command.—L. L. in Drake's Magazine.

Monday at the Museum Niobe will convulse the audience with laughter.

This is the last week of the regular season at the Tremont Theatre. Miss Mary Lawman, supported by an excellent company under management of Frank L. Goodwin, has given great satisfaction in "Vittoria," a pleasing comedy translated and adapted from the French.

This is the last week of the season at the Globe Theatre. "The Hornet's Nest" will be the principal attraction this afternoon and evening.

Helen Barry closes her engagement of "A Night's Frolic" at the Park to-night. Salvini still charms the supporters of the Grand Opera House.

Willie Edouin has made Helen Barry an offer to appear next season in London. Minna Gale, who is to be one of the next season's stars, has secured from the widow of Lawrence Barrett, Oscar Wilde's tragedy of "Gundo Ferranti."

Mrs. Agnes Booth will not be under the management of A. M. Palmer next season. She will star under the management of Abbey, Grau & Schoeffel, in an English version of "La Dame du Châleant," the new tragedy by the Italian author Giacosa, which Bernhardt will produce next season. Mrs. Booth has been studying French assiduously and is anxious to appear in Paris.

Lydia Thompson and her clever company has played "The Dazzler" with much success in and around New York.

"As You Like It," this afternoon and evening, will be the programme at the Hollis Street Theatre. This is the last week of Augustin Daly's Company.

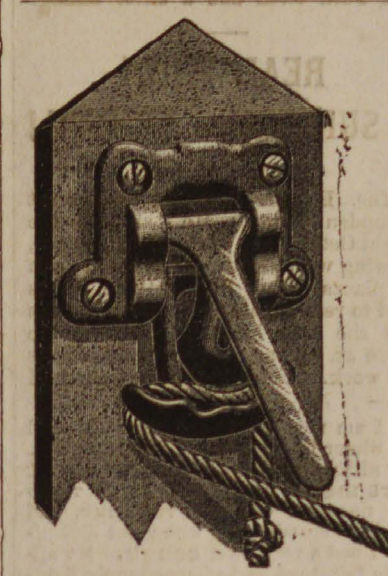

After all, the best way to know the real merit of Hood's Sarsaparilla, is to try it yourself. Be sure to get Hood's.

The Restriction of Immigration.

Public feeling in regard to stringent regulation of the immigration and naturalization of foreigners in this country is more seriously aroused than for many years. The "Native American" excitement of forty years ago was due to a perception of tendencies which are now confirmed. But in form it was a combination of secrecy, sectarianism, and politics, which like a whirlwind blew violently, but soon spent its force. The results of illegitimate immigration and political enfranchisement were foreseen, but they were then theoretical. The time that has elapsed, however, has brought us face to face with actual perils. The volume of immigration has increased, while its quality rapidly decreases. The population of the country is largely heterogeneous, while homogeneity is the condition of great national power. The strength that lies in common traditions, a common history and language, in general intelligence and local pride, is constantly diminished by the flood of the least intelligent and desirable population of other countries which pours constantly upon us. This country is the guardian and illustration, and, as we believe and intend, the conclusive demonstration of the stability and efficiency of popular government as the safeguard of liberty under law. Our first duty is to maintain the conditions under which that demonstration is practicable. To permit liberty to be lost in the wild license bred of heterogeneous ignorance, corruption, and lawlessness would be to betray our trust. The question is not of excluding foreigners, but of assimilation of foreign element. A state or a country may be imperilled by over-immigration like the human body by over-feeding.—Harper's Weekly.

SATURDAY, JUNE 6, 1891.

THE BILL for redistricting the state has been passed to be engrossed, and it looks as if Peabody and Lynnfield will be compelled to cast their lot with political strangers, and become a part of a Democratic district, in which their identity will be obscured.

THE BILL authorizing the establishment of municipal electric light plants became a law on Thursday, being passed to its final stages in the legislature and signed by the Governor. There is now no obstacle in the way of the installation of a plant in Peabody, if a sufficient number of voters of the town signify a desire in town meeting. Some doubt is expressed by friends of the scheme, whether the requisite number can be secured at a special meeting.

It is not often that the witness stand is occupied by Royalty, but the Prince of Wales has given distinction to that much dreaded position this week by being called to mount the pedestal and give testimony in the celebrated prosecution of Sir Gordon Cumming, who has been accused of cheating at cards. His testimony on the stand was highly favorable to the prisoner, but in a conversation later, His Royal Highness expressed a belief that the accused must be guilty, from the unanimity of the witnesses.

It is rumored that the accused is to marry Miss Florence Garner of New York, after the trial.

It now appears that the United States agrees to submit the Behring Sea controversy to arbitration. A course which the Salem Gazette says is an abandonment of the theory that the cession of Alaska to the United States by Russia carried with it the absolute rights in that sea which Russia had theretofore claimed.

The question is an important one, and should be settled—the sooner the better. If this government has the exclusive right to the seal hunting in those waters, that right should be protected and preserved to American citizens, but if, on the other hand, other nations have rights there, a great saving of time, money and trouble can be accomplished by having that fact decided.

THE REFUSAL of the Salem Board of Aldermen to grant to the Essex Electric Street Railway Company, permission to erect poles for its overhead system, on the Willows branch, will result in much inconvenience to the people of this town, as it will necessitate a change of cars at Salem, an annoyance which has long been a subject of complaint by citizens of Peabody, who have had occasion to visit the Willows in previous seasons, unless passengers are particular to make horse cars at Peabody, in which event the journey can be made without interruption, or risk of losing a good seat.

The Essex Company will undoubtedly secure the privilege desired sooner or later, but it is not unlikely that the present season will pass away before the franchise is secured, and the work of setting poles and stringing wires begun. The company has done all that could be done to facilitate rapid transportation to that resort, and its efforts will doubtless be appreciated by the public, more especially when it is remembered that the only opposition to granting the franchise asked for, proceeded directly from the opposition line, and its well-known supporters.

It may be natural for officers of a corporation, in which their money is invested, to view with a jealous eye any new enterprise that appears likely to become a competitor. But in the case before us, a degree of selfishness and intolerance has been manifested that has provoked the just censure of the public. The people have rights which they do not propose to forfeit in order that a monopoly may be perpetuated. These are inauspicious days for monopolies, and though they may continue to flourish and even multiply, it will not be without a protest from the people.

Had it not been for the Essex road, what sort of accommodation would our citizens receive to-day? When the line was promulgated, the street railway service had become a matter of common complaint. Cars were overcrowded and all sorts of abuses were permitted. People from this town, visiting the Willows were subjected to a two-fold annoyance, being not only compelled to change cars to the almost certainty of losing their seats, but being also further obliged to pay an extra fare for the privilege of getting any kind of transportation.

The Essex Company have broken the monopoly, and notwithstanding they will be obliged for the present, to carry passengers by horse cars over the lower part of the route, they will give the public the benefit of a five-cent fare.

ESSEX COUNTY.

McCrillis & Co., the caterers, were granted an inholder's license for their restaurant, 256 Essex street, Salem, Monday night.

Licenses were granted by the Aldermen of Salem, Monday night to the drivers, conductors and starters of the Essex road.

The Salem public library has received a gift of $100 from James D. Perkins of New York, a native of Salem.

Several cars of the Naumkeag street railway were stalled on Tuesday by the action of the lightning.

Two Gloucester fishermen who strayed from their vessel in a fog, have been picked up by the barque Agatha. They had been afloat thirty hours when rescued and were nearly dead from hunger and exposure.

The Lynn committee on Fourth of July have decided to have a parade of "antiques and horrors," also a civic parade and historical display on the morning of the Fourth. Prizes will be offered for the best general feature in each division of the procession. Other prizes will be confined to local features. Postmaster A. G. Hoyt was elected Chief Marshal of the parade.

A dispatch from Manchester, Conn., to the Hartford Courant, Republican, says: "Messrs. Hood & Townsend of Philadelphia, manufacturers of machine combs for wool, etc., have bought that branch of the business from H. Lydall & Foulds here, and will move their works here from Philadelphia. They will employ a large number of skilled workmen, and will have men at work at the Lyndallville factory in a few days." Of course this is merely another example of the frightful rapidity with which—according to Democratic editors—the protective tariff is "improvising" New England industries for the benefit of Pennsylvania.—Boston Journal.

A Dog They Don't License.

A West Peabody woman who owns a dog that is licensed complained the other day of a stray dog which came around her house and carried off her hens. She did not believe the dog was licensed, and wanted to find out to whom it belonged. Asked for a description, the woman said the "dog" has a sharp pointed nose and a big bushy tail. She was told that the county did not license that kind of a "dog."—Salem Evening News.

Trusted a Tramp and Lost His Money.

Frank L. Newhall a farmer who resides in Lynn, out of compassion for a young man of trashy appearance, took the fellow in and gave him employment. The stranger was about 23 years old, gave his name as Charles Clifford, and said he came from Marlboro. The young man had been employed by Mr. Newhall about two months and during the time so far gained the confidence of his benefactor, that the usual precautions taken to guard against the possible vices of the tramp fraternity were dispensed with. Last Saturday Mr. Newhall told him he could take the day off, but Clifford replied he did not have anywhere to go and would as lief stay around the place and pass away time mowing the lawn. His employer gave him the keys to the house and went away leaving him in charge. When he returned in the evening, he discovered that his man had disappeared as had also a coat, vest and about $90 in money, which had been kept concealed under a bed in his chamber. The police were notified, and are working upon the case. Chief Penney has corresponded with the officials in Marlboro and learns that no such man belongs in that town.

Special Town Meeting.

A special town meeting was held in Town Hall on Wednesday evening. Barely one hundred voters could be mustered to vote in the affirmative upon the appropriations, but enough votes were secured, however, to carry the extra appropriation of $2000 for making the alterations and repairs at the High School. The committee now have $8300 at their disposal. George E. Spaulding was present and opposed the motion to appropriate the extra sum. He claimed that by making certain alterations in the plans a number of hundred dollars could be saved, without detracting from the utility of the building. Mr. Merrill informed the meeting that Mr. Spaulding was an unsuccessful bidder for the contract to make the alterations. The motion was finally submitted, and just 160 votes were secured in the affirmative and the motion was declared carried.

An appropriation of $350 was voted, to extend a four-inch main through Lowe street, as asked for in the petition.

The article relating to the extension of a four-inch pipe from Washington street to W. H. Brown's glue works, was taken up, and Mr. Reed moved an appropriation for the purpose of laying a cement pipe, but Mr. Brown objected to that kind of pipe and thought he should have an iron pipe. Some discussion followed, and Mr. Reed's motion was withdrawn. Mr. Brown already has a two inch pipe that was laid at his own expense, which would be taken up if a larger one were laid. Mr. Brown was strenuous for an iron pipe, and called on the Water Board for an estimate of cost. Mr. D. S. Littlefield stated that cement lined pipe would cost 75 cents per foot and cast iron, $1.00 per foot. The distance is 1600 feet, although Mr. Brown would be satisfied if 1200 were laid by the town. While the discussion was going on a number of voters left the hall. It was found necessary to adjourn to Thursday, as 100 voters could not be secured in the affirmative. At the adjourned meeting the same difficulty was met with and the Moderator announced that Mr. Brown had withdrawn his petition. It was voted to instruct the Water Board to complete the extension of water pipes to the Alms House.

A Bit of Local History.

It is not a prophet alone that "is without honor in his own country." Familiarity detracts also from the interest otherwise attaching to inanimate objects on account of their historical associations. Particularly is this true of our immediate vicinity. Doubtless Essex County is by far the richest in the United States in materials for the future writers of fact or fancy, yet these literary mines must remain for the most part to be opened by others.

Our latest reminder of these facts is a little work entitled "A Girl's Life 80 Years Ago," written by Miss Eliza Southgate, a young lady moving in the society of, and indeed connected with many of the first families of New England and New York, during the latter part of the last and the first few years of the present century. The literary merit of the letters which form this book is very great. They have been compared to those of Fanny Burney and even to those of Madame de Sevigne, but their charm to the public is chiefly in their vivid and animated descriptions of places, people, manners and fashions of the day, told so freely, minutely and unaffectedly that one seems to look upon them as through an open door. Our lady readers will be pleased to learn that "sheer muslin shawls put on as Sally Weeks wears hers, are much worn, they show the form through and look pretty." "Silk nabobs (?) plaided, colored and white, very short wals, are also worn," and a deal of similar valuable information. Though Miss Southgate during her residence in Portland, Boston, Albany, Saratoga, New York and other places became acquainted not only with the leaders of society, but also with many literary, business, and political magnates, the most interesting letters to the readers of the PRESS will doubtless be those from Salem, Mass. She was a guest of E. Hasket Derby, son of "King Derby" and she describes in a most graceful and charming manner, the building and grounds, which we have known as the Lafayette House. Then she makes a trip to "Horsely Derby's, about three miles from Salem, a most delightful place." This is the well known farm on Andover street, in this town, owned by the Osborne heirs, and occupied by Mr. J. W. Upton. She goes on to say that there "are cherries in perfection." "There are three divisions to the gardens and you pass from the lower one to the upper through several arches, rising one above the other. The summer house in the centre has an arch thro' it with three doors on each side which open into little apartments, and one of them opens to a staircase by which you ascend into a square room, the whole size of the building. It has a fine airy appearance and commands a view of the whole garden. The room is ornamented with some Chinese figures and seems calculated to serenity and peace." She also describes a hermitage and a greenhouse on the grounds. Such descriptions and sparkling gossip of the beaux and belles of the time, will make the book particularly attractive to local readers in addition to its other excellencies to which we have alluded."

A REAL LUXURY!

Looking out over the many homes of this country, we see thousands of women wearing away their lives in household drudgery that might be materially lessened by the use of a few cakes of SAPOLIO. If an hour is saved each time a cake is used, if one less wrinkle gathers upon the face because the toil is lightened, she must be a foolish woman who would hesitate to make the experiment, and he a churlish husband who would grudge the few cents which it costs.

If your grocer sends you anything in place of SAPOLIO, send it back and insist upon having just what you ordered. SAPOLIO always gives satisfaction. On floors, tables, and painted work it acts like a charm. For scouring pots, pans, and metals it has no equal. Everything shines after it, and even the children delight in using it in their attempts to help around the house.

Grocers often substitute cheaper goods for SAPOLIO to make a better profit. Send back such articles and insist on having just what you ordered.

this town do solemnly engage with our lives and fortunes to support them in the measure."

You will see the same spirit again manifested in the resolutions of 1862. Here the speaker read the following: "Resolved that the citizens of South Danvers desire to pledge their fidelity to the sacred cause of American Union, and their unalterable determination never to falter in their efforts to maintain its integrity and perpetuate its blessings. That they will not measure their legal obligations, nor pause to enquire whether they have done more or less than their neighbors but like their fathers in Revolutionary days they will do all they can to the extent of the means with which God has endowed them, in behalf of the cause of constitutional government, and the salvation of their beloved country."

"Resolved that South Danvers, expressing in her municipal capacity the feelings and wishes of her individual citizens, hereby declares her hearty appreciation of the patriotism of her sons who have enlisted and are now enlisting to serve in the defence of the Union, and faithfully pledges her fostering care in time of need to the families of her brave soldiers, and her lively gratitude for the services, and her blessings upon the lives of those, who, in serving their native or adopted town, Their names will illumine her annals, and be handed down in affectionate remembrance to future generations.

We rejoice that the feeling of patriotism is not exceptional. The time must come when that patriotism must be called upon in the future and when the emergency comes we have full assurance that the zeal of the rising generations can be relied upon to protect this noble Union.

LOCAL LINES.

George Williams, of this town, received his pension this week. He wandered into Salem Market, where "sharks" got hold of him and he was taken in tow by officer Manning.

O. W. Norcross of Worcester has purchased a controlling interest in the Essex Electric Street Railway Company. At a meeting of the Directors last evening he was elected President, and F. E. Farnham Treasurer.

The Essex Electric Street Railway Company is signaling itself by carrying itself by carrying out its agreements with the Town Fathers, and laying block pavements in the Square. It is refreshing to see a company occasionally that lives up to such agreements.

At the last regular meeting of George Peabody Lodge, A. O. U. W., it was voted to accept an invitation to visit Oriental Lodge of Salem, next Thursday evening. Those desiring to attend are requested to take the 7.30 car from the Square on the Essex Road.

The lightning did some damage to telephone wires Tuesday. Fifteen lines were burned out. It also struck a tree in front of the Sutton Home for Aged Ladies and peeled off some of the bark. By the same bolt a woman named Callahan on Centre street was prostrated.

Have you tried George's Ginger? George A. Woods, 14 Northend street, Salem, is making the best extract of Jamaica Ginger in the market. His essences and flavoring extracts are equally superior. They can be obtained from any grocer. Insist on having his goods. When once you try them you will have no other.

The railroads have made special rates for those who wish to visit Amherst on June 11 and 12. The fare from Peabody and return will be $3.45. Trains will leave Boston at 8 A. M., and 1.30 and 4.30 P. M., and leave Amherst at 6.15 and 8.30 A. M., and 2.35 P. M. Meals can be procured in Amherst at the hotel at 50 cents and lodging same price.

The police made 18 arrests in the month of May, divided as follows: Drunkenness 7, playing ball on the Sabbath 4, assault 3, affray 2, profane language 1, maintaining liquor nuisance 1, and number of lodgers 21. Last year during the month of May, which was the first month under license, there were 27 arrests of which 18 were for drunkenness.

The improved clothes line hooks made by the Wilder Manufacturing Co., Salem, are the best things out. You can fasten a line without any trouble at all, and when ones in place it is impossible for them to slip or give way. If one part breaks the rest will remain firm. Morrison & Trask, the hardware dealers, Walnut street, have them. Call and see them.

By special permit of Commissioner Raum, the Board of Pension Examining Surgeons will meet next week on Thursday instead of Wednesday. This is for the purpose of allowing the doctors to attend the annual meeting of the Massachusetts Medical Society which takes place at Boston on Wednesday their usual day of meeting. Claimants who are ordered before the Board for examination should bear this change in mind.

During the month of May, 27 registered letters were handled at the Post Office. The number of letters delivered was 1604; postals 3952; second, third and fourth class matter 15,784 pieces. There were 2783 local letters, 1557 local postal cards and 1355 pieces of other mail matter beside, 1656 railway mail postal cards collected by the carriers. The total number of pieces handled was 53672, and the aggregate local postage was $85.47.

In the Salem Board of Aldermen's meeting Monday night, the committee on streets, through Alderman Palfray, offered an order granting permission to the Naumkeag street railroad to lay tracks in Goodhue, Grove and Tremont streets, in accordance with its petition, but under certain restrictions. The order was adopted. The Essex Electric road was granted leave to withdraw on its petition for leave to use the tracks of the Naumkeag road from Block House Square to the Willows, and also on its petition for leave to use Harbor View and Columbus avenue for tracks.

The Essex Electric railroad made its first trip to the Willows last Saturday morning, with a car drawn by four horses. Sunday regular trips were made and about a thousand passengers were carried over that part of the line. As the Salem Aldermen had not granted the necessary authority to erect poles and string wires for electric service, the trips had to be made by horse cars. Passengers are carried from the head of Foster street to the Willows for a single five-cent fare, in the horse cars. Those taking electric cars are transferred at the office in Salem.

The School Board held its regular monthly meeting on Monday evening. The Chairman was authorized to procure proposals for coal for the school houses. The question of holding an exhibition of needle work and referred to Messrs. Winchester and Carroll, with full powers. Questions for examination of candidates for admission to the High School were approved and the dates fixed for conducting the examinations. As was reported in these columns some time since. They will be held in the different schools of the town simultaneously. The dates are as follows: Mondays, June 8th and 15th and Thursdays, the 11th and 18th.

Benjamin P. Hutchinson, better known as "Old Hutch" visited Peabody Monday and wended his way to the Institute. He had many enquiries to make concerning the old residents, who were playmates in the early days of his boyhood. Many of whom he enquired have long been sleeping the sleep that knows no waking. But there is one at least who is still quite lively—landlord W. H. Baldwin whom he knew after leaving this, his birthplace. He and Mr. Baldwin were mates at North Reading, and the Chicago operator had some amusing stories to tell of the pranks he and "Baldwin" played in the days of yore. Nobody knew him and he might have gone away without notice had he not revealed his identity to John McKeen, the janitor at the Institute, as "Old Hutch," that the newspapers have so much to say about.

Mr. Gladstone went to church last Sunday for the first time since his illness.

The Homely but Useful Girl.

The "useful" girl, writes Ella Wheeler Wilcox, in the Ladies' Home Journal, is not noticeable in any way. Everybody makes use of her, and everybody likes her. She has no enemies and no lovers. Women like her very much, and men speak highly of her when she is brought to their attention in some way; but they never think about her voluntarily. They appreciate her highly when she helps them out of a corner, and thank her cordially, and then forget her until they need her again. She is not apt to marry, for men do not care for useful girls before marriage. She can sew, get a dinner if need be, amuse children, assist in getting up entertainments for other people to participate in, and she is an excellent nurse, and reads aloud well, and sings a little—enough to rock a child asleep or to help out a chorus. She is like the green "everlasting," or old-fashioned "live-forever" plant—scentsless, and not beautiful, yet indispensable in a garden.

McSpirit (in Hades): Who is that chump? Imp: Whist! that is his Satanic Majesty. McSpirit: Well, I don't care who he is. I am not going to have him look down on me that way; why, I was an advertising agent in the Tribune building, New York, when I was up above! Moral: This spirit was proud as the devil.

A Tender Heart.—He—May I see you home? She—No, but you may watch me start.

Since birth my baby had running sores all over his head, and the doctors said that he must die for they could not heal them. I used everything I ever heard of, but it was no good. He got so bad that he would not nurse. My husband's sister told me to try Sulphur Bitters as she had great faith in them. I used a bottle and the sores commenced to heal. After using two bottles more, the sores all healed and I considered my baby saved.—Mother, Concord, N. H.

SALMON AND SEA TROUT.

Just now, from deep quiet caves and hollows far out in the sea, myriads of salmon and sea trout are swimming in large bodies, hardly resting night or day, to visit the rivers where they were born.

No authority on fishes has been able to say where the sea trout and the salmon go in winter; but before the brooks and rivers begin to freeze in the late fall they gather in large bodies, pass rapidly down stream, and swim away for deep waters. Nothing is seen of them again till toward the first of June, when they congregate about the mouths of tidal rivers and brooks.

A salmon born in the Restigouche will not, when it has become a grilse, return to the Miramichi or any other river, but will swim swiftly and alertly up and down the coast, sometimes for several days, till it finds its own river.

Sometimes the salmon, after its two and a half years absence since its babyhood, and returning as a grilse to the shore, enters the wrong stream; but before it has swam far upward it discovers its mistake, turns again down stream, leaving its companions, and makes great haste to the shore, when it skirts along till it finds its native river. I have often watched grilse for hours after I knew they had lost their way; they swim from side to side of the river, examining the bottom, the rocks, and the shallows, and when they are sure that they have never seen the place before, they turn and speedily go seaward.

What makes this most remarkable is that the salmon, which is hatched out in the gravel or sand beds in the river in the beginning of the summer, remains in its native waters only about five months, when it makes its way down with the current, being then known as the parr, a beautiful, lithe, and graceful little fish from four to six inches long. Its return is made when it is three years old, when it is known as a grilse; but its recollections from the time of its babyhood are clear and unailing.

When these lines reach the reader, the salmon and the sea trout will likely be in the river on their march up to the spawning-beds. How often have I lain quietly in a birch-bark canoe at the foot of some fall on the Miramichi and Restigouche, and watched the advancing march of this beautiful fish! As they reach the boiling water at the bottom of the fall, they pause for a while, with their heads up stream and very near to the surface; then they swim across from right to left, looking upward to determine the lowest part of the barrier in front of them. Then they recoil for a short distance, suddenly curve themselves in the form nearly of the letter C, and spring upward, making considerable commotion in the water from the push made by the tail. The old salmon are the best jumpers, and often get to the top of the fall at the first leap; but I have frequently seen grilse and large salmon, which I suppose were very old, make a dozen attempts before getting up. They would reach nearly to the edge of a fall, fail, and tumble back with a great splash. After resting a minute or so, they curved, and made the attempt again. But I have known and heard of no case where any grilse or fairly young salmon did not at last succeed in getting over the barrier.

The sea trout cuts through the water like an arrow, and springs six and eight feet upward to get over rocks and little falls. The object of the visit to the streams every year is that these fishes may deposit their eggs in the shallow beds of gravel and sand that lie everywhere along the upper reaches of the streams. When the female salmon in the early autumn is ready to lay her eggs she poises herself above some shallow, with her head up stream, and burrows into the sand up and down stream, till she has made a cavity large enough; then she deposits her eggs in this opening. The constant motion of the water in one direction soon covers the ova with sand, and there they remain till the next spring, when they grow as large as pens, and the little fish come forth. It was believed up to a little while ago that the salmon fed while in fresh water in summer, and this was held to explain why it rose and took the fisherman's fly so easily. It is now known that the salmon does not taste food during all the months that it spends in the river; no food has ever been found in its stomach in summer, and the stomach itself, on dissection, is found to be closed during that season. It is asked, why, then, does the salmon rise to the fly, if not to eat it? My opinion is, and it is sustained by fishermen and ichthyologists, that the salmon takes the gaudy bait trailed about it sometimes in play and often in anger. This much is sure, the fish never makes an attempt to swallow the fly, for it is invariably found hooked in the lip.

Next to getting married, probably the most important duty the ordinary man has to perform in a life-time is to run for a bottle of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup when the baby has the croup.

INFELIX—SED VICTOR.

Freed from the strife of this world and the scorn of it. Sweetly he sleeps in the emerald plain. Never Ambition, nor Sorrow that's born of it—Scepter or cross—can afflict him again. All that he lived for was Truth and the fight for it. Now all his battles are over and done. Death gives him slumber, at last, and the night for it. Trials all ended and victory won.

They that reviled him may mourn to recover him. Knowing how gentle he was and how brave. Nothing he'll reck, where the wind blowing over him. Ripples the grasses that dream on his grave. Though to our vision this dust be the last of him. Low in the ground and deserted and lone. Time will avenge all the woe that is past of him. Fate will remember and Justice atone.

After the fray and the heartbreaking pain. Alienated affection and honor betrayed. Here is the end, and the crown, and the gain of it—Cold in the earth where the victor is laid. Stars will watch over him, silence lament for him. Soft woodland whispers re-echo his knell—Bird note and leaf murmur tenderly blent for him—Comrade and brother and friend, fare thee well. —William Winter in New York Tribune.

HOW HE WON HER.

He was seedy, but in this sense only, that his was the seediness of hayseed. There was hayseed in his hair, in his whiskers, through which the morning winds moaned, in his eyelashes, on the top of his head. His eyes had a far away, searching-for-hayseed look, his voice seemed to have an intonation of it, and his general appearance was a conglomerate demonstration of hayseed as an extant fact.

As I had nothing on earth to do, I sat on a mound, and while ants crawled up my trousers leg I listened to him as he leaned against the rail fence and talked. His voice seemed to entice to the surrounding atmosphere the mingled odors of new mown hay and of cows waiting to be milked.

I did not listen at first. He might have been a lark singing in a distant field, and I would have understood him as well, until my attention was attracted when he smacked his lips with intellectual gratification and self satisfaction and said, "I always knew it." From that time on I did not permit myself to lose a word. "He had a ternal lot of grit as a lover, had Joe Corker," he said, "and wasn't the man never to give in. He kep' a-courtin' of her from the time she was a little baby gal at school till she was a old maid of forty-two, and never lost hope. It was his way because of his grit. When he started in to do anything he generally done it, simply for no other reason than that he was the durndest feller. So, when he went to love makin' he was more despit than a tiger had ought to dared to thought of bein'.

"He never give himself an easy job, either, for it weren't his way; for the gal he picked out growed up to be one o' them tough old birds what's the more obstinate the more uglier they are and bleaves in marriage as a failure. She were a gal with freckles same size as ten cent dimes all over her. Well, when a man undertakes a job of that kind, even without the grit of Joe as a lover, he keeps at it out of aggravation—you would yourself. Your vanity does it, for you say to yourself, 'if you can't capture a bundle of freckles, what can you do nohow?' In the meantime, as she grows older and gets more obstinate and uglier you loses your temper and she loses hers, and neither of you never git it back again. So it was with Joe, but having the grit as a lover, of which I've spoke, mere loss of temper was nothing to him. Well, he kep' on and kep' on and then he kep' on.

"One day she told him she'd come to the conclusion marriage were not a failure, which give him great joy. Then he got a setback when he learned that a two button cutaway chucklehead had commenced a-sparkin' of her under the delusion she was rich and was the cause of it. It was about that time Joe went west, taking a letter writer with him, so he could send back a courtin' letter took out of the book from every station they stopped at.

"Well, after workin' at different things, always bein' as confident that he'd win as a frog is about its powers to chirp—if it took him a hundred years he'd git thar—he located in a cabin on a swampy tule farm up on four legs above the highest reach of the water. The tide was two feet deep over his land twice a day, so he built roosts all around his place for his chickens to roost on at high tide, for he raised chickens and honey for the city markets, and he rowed around in a boat to the nests to get the eggs. In the meantime while doing so he was always composin' love letters for to write, for he was poetical and done things by inspiration, and the inspirations always come when he was collectin' the eggs, especially if the hens had laid well.

"All around he seen bitterns flying, all perticklerly fat with nothing apparently to eat. It was a caution how fat they seemed to grow and have oily, greasy countenances, all on nothing, and he couldn't make it out till he seen one flyin' one day close by, with a neck a yard and a half long, with a head for all the world like the head of a serpent. Then he watched more of them with heads like corkscrews, and they seemed also to have amazin' long necks and serpent's heads as they flew about in all directions. At last he see how they et snakes, and that, as it took about half an hour to swallow them, they kep' flyin' round and round while doing it, so's the motion would aid digestion.

"One day an idea struck Joe. He seen besides bein' so amazin' fat they were about the size of young chickens. So he killed one one day and chopped its legs and head off and plucked the feathers, and saw, for his purposes, it were a chicken. So, bein' so, he sent them to the city to market as chickens, with their heads off and blue and yellow scalped tissue paper where their legs was cut off, where they gave him a great

Mortgaged Real Estate.

"Any mortgagee or mortgagee of real estate may bring in to the assessors of the town or city in which such real estate lies," within the time specified in this notice, "a statement, under oath, of the amount due on each separate lot or parcel of such real estate, and the name and residence of every holder of an interest therein as a mortgagor or mortgagee. When such property is situated in two or more places, or when a recorded mortgage covers more than one sum, two or more estates or parts of an estate, an estimate of the amount of the mortgagee's interest in each estate or part of an estate shall be given in such statement." (Chap. 115 of the Acts of the Commonwealth.) But in cases where the mortgagor of the real estate has agreed in writing to pay all taxes assessed thereon, NO STATEMENT OR RETURN is required from either mortgagor or mortgagee, unless requested by the assessors in writing.

Estates in Trust.

Persons holding estates in trust, whether for minors or otherwise, are particularly requested to furnish the assessors with statements in relation to such estates. When trust estates, or estates of persons deceased, have been divided during the past year, or have changed hands from other causes, the trustee, executor or administrator of the estate, or other person interested, is required and warned to give notice of such change; and in default of such notice, will be held to pay the tax assessed, although such estate has been wholly distributed and paid over.

Any person bringing in a list of all his taxable personal property will be assessed upon the valuation thereof, and any one neglecting to furnish such a list within the time above specified will be deemed at a legal meeting of the Board of Assessors, agreeable to the law of the Commonwealth, to have neglected to furnish such statements of personal property must be in writing, and subscribed under oath before one of the Assessors, at their office, on or before the FIRST DAY OF JUNE, and that the personal property of all taxable persons must be estimated by the Board. NOTWITHSTANDING A VERBAL STATEMENT OR INFORMAL WRITTEN COMMUNICATION TO ANY ONE OR MORE OF THE ASSESSORS. (Pub. Stat., chap. 11, sec. 39 and 41.) When a person has failed to bring in a list of his taxable personal property in conformity to this notice, no abatement of a tax assessed upon such person for personal property can be granted, "unless such tax exceeds by more than fifty per cent. the amount which would have been assessed to that person on personal estate, if he had seasonably brought in and filed with the assessors a list of his taxable property, and the said amount, the abatement shall be only of the excess above the said fifty per cent." (Pub. Stat., Chap. 11, Sec. 73.)

Any person taxable in Peabody for personal property can obtain a BLANK SCHEDULE for making a list of such property, with directions for properly filling the same, by applying at the assessors' office.

Literary, Benevolent, Charitable and Scientific Corporations.

The attention of the officers of all Literary, Benevolent, Charitable and Scientific Corporations, located in Peabody, is particularly called to the requirements of Chapter 217 of the Acts of 1882 as the property of said corporations, both personal and real, will be subject to taxation under the Act of 1882, and the same, in the absence of the purpose can be had at the office of the assessors.

TOWN OF PEABODY.

BOARD OF HEALTH REGULATIONS.

THE Board of Health appointed by the town, hereby make and publish as follows, to be enforced by law, "the following 'Regulations for the Public Health and Safety':—

The Board shall make such regulations as it judges necessary for the public health and safety. * * * Whoever violates any such regulation shall forfeit a sum not exceeding one hundred dollars.—(Extract from the Public Statutes, Chap. 80, § 18.)

REGULATION 1ST. It being the duty of the Board of Health of the Town of Peabody, to make such regulations for the premises of persons residing in said town as they shall deem necessary for the public welfare, the Board hereby give notice and require that all premises within said limits shall be ready for inspection by the Board on and after May 20th, 1891.

REGULATION 2D. No house, outhouse, filthy water, dead animals or refuse of any kind, shall be thrown upon the streets by any resident; and no butcher, fish monger or vendor of merchandise, shall leave any refuse upon the streets of this town.

REGULATION 3D. If, upon inspection, any rubbish, soil, decaying animal or vegetable matter, or refuse of any kind be found under or about any building, within any yard or enclosure, upon any premises, or in the ponds or water courses of said Town of Peabody, or if any privy or drain be found so discharging as to prove a nuisance, and offensive or deleterious to the public health, the owner or occupant of such property or premises shall be notified by the Board to remove or abate such nuisance within twenty-four hours after said notice has been served.

REGULATION 4TH. If any owner or occupant of property as aforesaid, after having been duly notified, shall neglect to comply with the requirements of the above section, the Board of Health shall cause any and all nuisances to be removed or abated at the expense of the owner or occupants.

REGULATION 5TH. On and after June 1st 1891, swine shall not be kept within the following limits in this town except by permit from the Board of Health.—Commencing at the boundary stone east of Holly street and running on the Southern side of Margin street seven hundred feet; thence North-westerly in a straight line to Liberty, five hundred feet Northwesterly of Mr. Simon P. Buxton's residence; thence Northwesterly in a straight line to Andover street bridge from the bridge Southwesterly in a straight line, to Swampscott avenue; thence Swampscott avenue to Strongwater brook; thence Easterly in a straight line to the Eastern end of Clement avenue and the Salem line; thence by the Salem line to Willow, Shillaber, Aborn, Main, Grove, Walnut, Mt. Vernon, Tremont and Highland streets to the boundary stone begun at. No goats shall be kept within the limits of this Town, except in pastures, or in enclosures.

REGULATION 6TH. No public funeral shall be held over the remains of any person having died of SMALL POX, SCARLET FEVER, DIPHTHERIA, TYPHOID FEVER or MEMBRANOUS CROUP, without the written permit of the Board of Health, under such regulations as may prevent the spread of either of such diseases.

REGULATION 7TH. The remains of any person dying of either of said diseases shall be placed in a tight or sealed coffin, and shall not thereafter be exposed to view or disturbed, except for burial, and no undertaker or other person shall be permitted to take to any house, or use any bier or stand with draperies, which is to be used at any other funeral.

REGULATION 8TH. No owner, driver or other person having charge of any hackney carriage or other vehicle used as a public conveyance, shall convey in or upon said

carriage or other vehicle, any person sick or infected with the Small Pox, Scarlet Fever, Diphtheria, or other contagious disease, or the body of any person who has died of any contagious disease without the written permit of the Board of Health, to be given under such regulations as may prevent the spread of such disease, and every vehicle which shall be so used shall be immediately disinfected under the supervision of the Board of Health, and before any other person shall be conveyed in or upon it. This regulation is intended to cover all cases where persons are conveyed from funerals at houses where any one has died of any contagious disease.

REGULATION 9TH. It shall be the duty of occupants of dwellings in which any person or persons may be sick with SMALL POX, DIPHTHERIA, SCARLET FEVER, TYPHOID FEVER or MEMBRANOUS CROUP, and Physicians attending such cases forthwith to notify the Board of Health of the fact.

REGULATION 10TH. The occupants of buildings, or dwellings where Small Pox exists, or has existed, shall prohibit and prevent the removal of clothes, bedding and upholstery, or other articles, from the infected buildings, except the removal is made by permission, or under direction of the Board of Health.

REGULATION 11TH. The occupants of buildings or dwellings where Scarlet Fever and Diphtheria exist shall withdraw all children attending school from the premises, and the teachers of said schools shall NOT allow their children thus withdrawn to re-enter the school until they shall present a certificate from the attending Physician vouching for the safety thereof.

REGULATION 12TH. Night soil carts shall not be allowed to pass through the streets in the thickly settled portions of the town between sunrise and sunset, from June 1st to Nov. 1st, without a special permit from the Board of Health.

REGULATION 13TH. Any person in the town of Peabody who knows or suspects any domestic animal has contagious disease, such as glanders in horses or cholera in swine, or other disease, shall immediately notify the Board of Health, and prevent the same to the Board of Health. The penalty for neglect to do so is fine or imprisonment.

The above is in accordance with the provisions of Chapter 252 of the Acts of 1887.

The Board earnestly requests the co-operation of every individual, in securing the desirable sanitary condition, to promote which the foregoing regulations are framed.

name because of their fatness and the delicate taste of frogs' legs which serpents give the meat. In consequence he grew rich.

"In the meantime, while watchin' the bitterns and serpents, all unconscious they was doin' it so he'd grow rich, and while pluckin' the feathers off, he was always busy meditatin' an' composin' love letters, and he was always beggin' her to come out and get married. But his ideas, however he put them, never fetched her now.

"At last one day, of a Sunday, he see he must have a change of ideas, so he'd seem different—same as a man seems different in a different suit of clothes—to fetch Miss Selverton, the lady, and was wonderin' what would change them. He rowed in his boat to a neighborin' town, and on the way, though he'd never drank nothin' before, he determined he'd try gin. He'd heard of a man once made a fortune by an idea he got by drinkin' gin, so he got two big black bottles and rowed home with them, determined to try it, for Joe was gittin' so he done it.

"He opened one bottle, and while he was drinkin' it an' idea come to him and he said to himself—'for havin' no neighbors he choose to talk to himself—I'll open the other in honor of her arrival when she gets here.' The idea, which was special brilliant, had come to him of its own accord, so he thought it was a sign of good luck, and put the unopened bottle aside. He then finished the other, and while so doin' he composed and wrote a letter to Miss Selverton what fetched her with all her baggage. He'd dropped the letter book style and just spoke plain. If I don't disremember he said, 'I've got the snakes, and I'm the first man that ever found them payin' property and growed rich by it.'

"Now you'd say she'd never come after that. Well, that's just where you're off. Bein' a woman what thought marriage was a failure, of course she was as full of notions as a river is of drink, so she seen she had a mission, and that mission was to save him from the snakes. It's the delight of that kind of woman's heart to get a husband who occasionally has the snakes, so she can hold him up to himself as a shinin' example of vice, and point him out to himself as a burnin' illustration of intemperance.

"She wrote to him when she started, and on the day she was to arrive he unloaded the other bottle of gin into himself. It was one of the luckiest things he ever took a notion to do and done. When she arrived she had the pleasure of seein' that her theory was correct, and when a woman has a chance to see that, she's as happy as a game cock is when you put on his spurs for to fight, and with unbounded pleasure she gave him a witherin' look that she thought would make him shiver up like a green leaf in a red hot fire, and after makin' inquiries with intense politeness about the snakes, she took him off to church and married him.

"When after that she found him to be a total abstainer, with nothing to reform, and she came to know which snakes he meant, she slowly faded away with disappointment and died of grief. Joe then went east, and when last heard from had married a young dudine out there. That was all, as far as I've heard," he said, and the labors of the day being thus ended, he departed and left me alone to those solitary meditations which the ants were now arousing within me.—Adam Welcker in Washington Hatchet.

The Ticket Seller Surprised Him.
A man whose views on human nature are a trifle cynical received an agreeable shock the other evening. In his haste to catch a train on the elevated road a few nights before he had forgotten to get his change from the ticket seller. He had laid down a dollar bill, called for ten tickets, received them, and dashed on to catch his train. He had traveled some distance up town before it occurred to him that he had come away without his fifty cents. An examination of his pockets made him certain that he had not received the money. The man was in a hurry to get home, however, so did not go down town again to see if he could have his mistake rectified. "Anyway," he thought, "it serves me right for my carelessness. The lesson is worth fifty cents to me."

Several evenings afterward he was mounting the steps of the same station of the elevated road when he recollected his loss. Going up to the ticket seller, whose face he did not remember having seen before, he asked, "Were you here last Saturday night at 7:20 o'clock?"

The man, a stony stare on his face, replied with another question, "Why?"

"I forgot to get my change then."

"Oh," the stare grew stonier, "how much was it?"

"I laid down a dollar for ten tickets and didn't get back the fifty cents."

"Oh, yes, I recollect that. Here you are, sir," and the ticket seller, smiling, shoved out two quarters to the man's great surprise. Since that time the cynic's views have received another bad setback, for a conductor on a Broadway car actually apologized to him for having to give him five coppers in change.—New York Tribune.

The Wizard's Latest.

Thomas A. Edison, the famous electrician and inventor, is preparing to astonish the world, by the exhibit he will make at the World's Fair in 1893.

"I shall have two or three things to show," said he recently, "which I think will both surprise and please the visitors to the electrical department of the Exposition, which, by the way, I am fully convinced, will be a great success. Two of these inventions are not yet ready to be described, or even characterized. The third, however, is so nearly perfected, that I do not hesitate to say anything about it.

I hope to be able by the invention to throw upon a canvass a perfect picture of anybody, and reproduce his words. Thus, should Patti be singing somewhere, this invention will put her full length picture upon the canvass so perfectly as to enable one to distinguish every feature and expression of her face, see all her actions and listen to the entrancing melody of her peerless voice. The invention will do for the eye what the phonograph has done for the voice, and reproduce the voice as well, in fact, more clearly. I have already perfected the invention so far as to be able to picture a prize fight—the two men, the ring, and intensely interested faces of those surrounding it—and you can hear the sound of the blows, the cheers of encouragement and the yells of disappointment. And when this invention shall have been perfected," said Mr. Edison with the trace of enthusiasm's glow in his face, "a man will be able to sit in his library at home, and having electrical connection with the theatre, see reproduced on his wall or a piece of canvass the actors, and hear anything they say. I can place one so it will command a street corner, and after letting it register the passing sights for a time, I can have it cast them on a canvass so that every feature and motion of the passers, even to the twitching of the face, can be seen, and if a friend passed during the time, you may know it. This invention will be called the 'Kinetograph.' The first half of the word signifies 'motion,' and the last 'write,' and both together mean the portrayal of motion. The invention combines photography and phonography."

Mr. Edison occupied nearly an acre with his exhibit at the Paris Exposition. As he wishes to show at Chicago all that he exhibited at Paris, and numerous other things besides, he is desirous of being accorded a greater space in 1893. The electrical exhibit is expected to be the wonder of the Exposition.

ROBERT E. PEARY,
Leader of the New Arctic Expedition.

The Arctic expedition of the Academy of Natural Sciences will sail this week. The steam whaling yacht, "Kite," 280 tons, of St. John's, N. F., has been specially chartered for the purpose. Lieutenant Peary will be in command; he will be accompanied by five hardy sailors, accustomed like himself to an Arctic winter. Lieutenant Peary is a civil engineer in the United States Navy. In 1886 he penetrated 100 miles east of Disco Bay, into the interior of Greenland. He is confident of accomplishing his object, which is to find the North East limit of Greenland. An auxiliary expedition, consisting mainly of scientists, will accompany Mr. Peary. The "Kite" will sail from New York and will make for Melville Bay, will go through the ice to Whale Sound, where Lieutenant Peary, his party and all their supplies will be landed. This done, the "Kite" will say good-bye and turn her prow southward, leaving the party to work their way inland over the ice. They will winter near Whale Sound, and not start in earnest until next April. During the present summer he will carry his camp as far north as possible, making daily journeys of five miles or more, marking each camp station with a cairn which will contain supplies. As the party proceed they will reach the northern limit of the Greeley expedition. From that point an effort will be made to reach the northern terminus of the land and determine its character and also the existence of an open Polar Sea. The expedition will probably be absent three years.

This is one of the most charming months of the year. Get yourself into condition to enjoy it to the utmost by taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, the best spring medicine. Sold by druggists.

Will Asiatic Cholera Follow?

Mr. Joe Howard's theory that, one horror of a similar nature follows another to the number of three, has a chance for confirmation this coming summer if certain predictions prove true. First it was La Grippe: "A whim" the French define it. Second came deaths by scores from its after effects, or from the atmospheric changes of the past few months. Severe cases of pneumonia, bronchitis, intense catarrh and general loss of strength were the results, until death was almost welcomed as a relief to the sufferers. So that this epidemic and its sequences has proven to be the most terribly realistic "whim" that ever infested this country. And now for number three; the theory is said to be advanced that the Cholera is very likely to find fertile soil in the generally debilitated constitutions of our people resulting from the effects of such a winter and spring as has just past. Whether the theory of three will be confirmed in this case or not, remains to be seen. At any rate it behooves every person still affected by any of the complaints due to these climatic changes and epidemics, such as catarrh or bronchial troubles, to look well to themselves and see that every trace of the trouble is removed this present month; before the heat of summer still more debilitates their system. For years we have found that simple old remedy, Johnson's Anodyne Liniment, used as directed, to be the most certain remedy for all forms of lingering summer colds, catarrh or bronchial affections, as well as a preventative and cure for all kinds of summer complaints. It is absolutely certain that a remedy that has survived for eighty years, as Johnson's Anodyne Liniment has done, must have more than average merit. We suppose there is not a family in this country but what has this good old fashioned remedy in the house. If there is, we advise them to get it at once or write the manufacturers, I. S. Johnson & Co., Boston, Mass., for a pamphlet describing its various uses for the last eighty years. Now is the time. Delays are dangerous, and an ounce of prevention is worth many pounds of cure.

We shall probably never sell clubs again, their day having gone by, but there are many who do not care during these dull times to pay so much as $5.00 a dozen for pictures, but who still want the best. As we wish to reach this class, but do not believe in charging two prices for the same thing, we have decided to adopt the medium price of $4.00 for a short time. Mrs. EVA I. FOWLER resides at Hampden Centre, Me., and as the bright October sun shone upon her face, glowing with health, as she stood upon the piazza of her little cottage, it was hard to realize that only a few months ago she was hastening towards the grave as fast as disease could do its fell work. Listen to the story she told us:—

"I am now twenty-one years old, and last winter I found myself failing rapidly. My side and back were so lame it hurt me to breathe. I felt tired and dragged out all the time, and could get upstairs only with great difficulty. I had a very bad cough. My appetite failed me, and after eating the lightest food I would have terrible distress at the pit of the stomach. I could not sleep. Night after night I would have to get up and sit up after one o'clock until morning. I tried Cod Liver Oil and other medicines, but received no benefit. But, I am happy to say, TWO BOTTLES OF DANA'S SARSAPARILLA CURED ME COMPLETELY."

Maria Kellett formerly of this town, died at her late residence in Lynn on Tuesday afternoon of Consumption. Her age was 18 years. Her remains were taken to Salem for interment.

The Law and Order League held a meeting Tuesday evening and voted after considerable discussion to proceed against those who violate the "Lord's Day Act" by keeping open shop.

A picnic was given the pupils of Miss Chandler of the Centre school, at King's Grove, West Peabody, this week. Mr. James P. King furnished the conveyance free. The children appreciated the outing.

Children's Day will be observed tomorrow at the South Church. The pastor will preach in the morning to the children, who will occupy the front pews. In the evening, a concert will be given by the Sabbath School.

One of the Armenian laborers employed at Harrington's tannery was quite severely injured on Wednesday, by running a hook used for handling leather into his finger. A physician was called, who dressed the injured digit.

The free exhibition of the sewing done by the classes of the public schools under the direction of their teacher, Miss Hodgkins, will be held Thursday, June 18, at Town Hall. Some garments made by the children will be shown.

J. Arthur Cook's meat team ran away Thursday forenoon. Starting near Dalton's Court it proceeded down Washington and Mason streets. E. H. Porter stopped the flight. Some damage was done to both horse and wagon.

Senator Southwick offered an amendment to the redistricting bill, restoring Peabody and Lynnfield to their old associations and substituting Stoneham and Wakefield in the proposed fifth, to fill the vacancy. The Senate rejected the amendment, and thus Peabody and Lynnfield are left as "bobs" for Lowell's Kite.

A special town meeting has been called by the selectmen, at the request of the electric light committee, for Thursday next, at 3 o'clock to see if the town will accept the provisions of the recent statute, authorizing cities and towns to establish and maintain light plants. The polls will be open until 8 o'clock.

Probably no article of household use was ever more universally used and admired than the Electric Lustre Starch. It is a great help to housekeepers. It makes shirts, collars and cuffs look like new. It is always in Blue Packages and can be bought of all grocers at ten cents per package. It is foolish to try and keep house without it.

The electric cars are now running to Lynn Public Forest. Passengers from this town can be transferred at Wyoma, and a few minutes ride will land them in that sylvan retreat whose natural beauty has never been marred by the conceit of human art. Last Sunday 8000 people were carried over the new line, and travel thither is constantly increasing.

Daniel S. Webb, father of Mrs. Samuel Trask of this town, and a resident of Skowhegan, Me., was brought here Monday from Portland, where he recently underwent an operation on his eyes with unfavorable results. He is now totally blind, so that it is with difficulty he can be moved around. He was conveyed to this town from Salem in the Salem ambulance and is now at Mr. Trask's house.

A grand ocean excursion of the Steamer Watertown, will be made tomorrow, leaving Beverly at 9 o'clock and Salem at 10 o'clock A. M., under the auspices of the Father Mathew C. T. A. The boat will pass the islands along the coast and also give a view of Magnolia and Norman's Woe, proceeding to the Isle of Shoals. A full brass band will furnish music.

A Lawn Party will be held at the Sutton Home for Aged Women, next Wednesday evening. Music will be furnished by the Eighth Regiment Orchestra from 6 to 10 o'clock. Supper will be served at 6.30 o'clock. The ladies having the matter in charge have arranged to make it a very enjoyable occasion. Tickets for adults are 50 cents, and for children under 12 years, 25 cents.

Chas. H. Odell has been appointed agent for the American Casualty Insurance and Security Co., of Baltimore. This company makes a specialty of insuring employers against risk of accident to the employees for which they may be held liable. It is the largest company of the kind doing business, and issues policies on the most liberal terms. Manufacturers and employers should call on him at his office in Thomas' Block and examine the plan.

Charles H. Cassidy and Miss Katie G. Nagle of this town were united in wedlock at St. John's church at 9 o'clock Tuesday forenoon. The groom's brother officiated as best man and the brides sister as Maid of Honor. The ushers were Michael Cassidy, Henry Marr, Wm. F. Duffy and Michael Donovan. The church was well filled with friends of the contracting parties and the ceremony was performed by Rev. P. Masterson. The twain will reside on Central street after their return from the bridal tour.

The Providence Line have commenced their regular summer schedule between Boston and New York. Fast steamboat express trains with Wagner parlor cars run daily, except Sundays, leaving Park Square station, Boston, at 6.30 P. M., and connect with the boat at Providence. Three magnificent steamers—Massachusetts, Connecticut and Rhode Island—are in service, affording passengers all the luxuries of the best transportation lines. Tickets and staterooms can be secured in advance at the station, or the company's office, 207 Washington street, Boston, by express or telephone.

At the hearing before the County Commissioners at Salem, Wednesday morning, Chairman Goulding represented the Board of Selectmen, to look after the interests of the town. William S. Osborne, Samuel Trask and Rev. Willard Spaulding were also present. Henry Wardwell, Esq., appeared as counsel for the petitioners and F. L. Evans, Esq., represented the city of Salem. The Harmony Grove corporation was represented by George Wheatland, Esq., and Supt. George W. Creesey. The main question before the Commissioners was the precise location or course of the proposed road, and incidentally, the manner of construction. Charles W. Putnam, Civil Engineer, exhibited a map of the lots and adjacent land showing the different courses that were proposed. One course is a direct prolongation of Walnut street, passing through Dugan's tannery at Grove street, Salem, and the other is more circuitous, sweeping around from Walnut street, and following parallel and close to the canal. The first is of course preferable, viewed from the stand point of public convenience, but it is opposed by the Grove corporation, as an encroachment upon the cemetery limits, and it necessarily involves heavier land damages, but still as that location leaves quite a large strip of land available for building purposes, on the side toward the canal it would furnish an offset in the shape of betterments.

The Sabbath School concert at the South Church will commence at 6 P. M. to-morrow.

An exhibition of the art work of Miss Ida F. Upton's pupils will be held at her studio, Newcomb's Block, 5 Central street, Salem, on Thursday, Friday and Saturday, next week.

The meetings at the Methodist Church, conducted by laymen, remind one of the old time Methodist revival meetings, full of zeal and fire. The services to-morrow will be in charge of gentlemen Barker, Ray and Robson, at 10.30 A. M. and 6 and 7 P. M.

Two advanced students of the Boston School of Technology have been in town this week, testing the line and equipments of the Essex Electric Street Railway. Their reports are very satisfactory, and highly commendable of the Franklin Electric equipment. The object of the test was for scientific purposes, and for practice for the students.

The employees of the Essex Road, surprised Conductor Michael Boyle, on Wednesday night, or rather Thursday morning, by calling at his house about 1 o'clock and summoning him from his slumbers to receive a silver water set as a token of esteem. Conductor James Fowler made the presentation to the astonished beneficiary, who responded as well as the conditions of the hour and shock of surprise would admit. The party was hospitably entertained until about half past two when they retired in good humor. The recipient has recently been married.

The Essex Electric Street Railway were granted permission last Saturday, to put in a turnout on Walnut street, near the corner of Wallis street. The grant is subject to certain requirements as to paving and drainage. The turnout will prove a great public convenience and will avoid the long delays on the Square, as it will bring the down cars in a position to observe whether the up car for which it is now obliged to wait on the Square, has left the turnout on Tremont street. At present much time is lost by the uncertainty of the relative position of up and down cars. The work is in progress, and the turnout will be ready for use early next week.

TREATMENT OF CROUP.

WHAT TO DO FOR THE DISEASE IN THE ABSENCE OF A DOCTOR.

Dangerous Croup as Distinguished from False Croup—The Latter May Be Treated Without Medical Aid, but a Physician's Advice Is Always Safe.

The particularly dangerous characteristic of croup is, like pneumonia, its suddenness. Its action is so rapid, and the little patient is so soon in a condition that is very near to death, that parents "lose their heads," and from extreme fear and anxiety are unable to coolly go to work with their best judgment. There are two sorts of croup—one in which the hoarseness and choking are caused by a sort of spasm or contraction of the glottis, and known to physicians as pseudo-croup or false croup, and in this there is little or no formation of membrane. With false croup there is much tightness, the same harsh, brassy cough, the breathing is wheezy, difficult and rapid. The attacks come on with catarrh and hoarseness, and are apt to recur several nights, sometimes coming on in the daytime.

There are many causes for an attack of false croup. Sometimes it originates from the stomach. An exceptionally hearty supper or some indigestible food eaten during the evening may set up an irritation which will bring on the symptoms of false croup, but of course the usual cause is exposure and wet feet. It is really a mild disease, and quickly subsides under proper treatment, and is not apt to be followed by dangerous complications.

For immediate relief wet a towel in cold water and wring it out just dry enough to prevent its dripping, and fold it about the child's neck, then cover this with dry towels or flannel cloths to prevent the pillow, etc., from being wet. In many cases this wet packing of the throat is all that is necessary. Leave it on until the breathing is easy and natural, and be sure to rub the child dry and warm after taking off the pack. It is well to put a light woolen bandage about the throat for the remainder of the night, but never accustom a child to being "bundled up." If the cold pack does not prove sufficient to give relief at once, give repeated doses of sirup of ipecac, larger or smaller according to the violence of the spasm, until vomiting ensues.

An excellent cough medicine to keep in the house, and one which works well in cases of false croup, is the old fashioned mixture of sirup of squills and paregoric, or a mixture of glycerine and water in equal parts. If with this treatment the child does not get easy, and fall into a natural sleep, but, on the contrary, the choking sensation continues or becomes worse, you may conclude that you have a case on hand of true croup, and the sooner you get a doctor the better.

GUARDING AGAINST CROUP.

False croup you may relieve tonight, and tomorrow morning there may be no trace of it; tomorrow night and the next night and for several nights it may come on again as badly as ever. It is not so, however, with true croup—there is no "let up" in this case; the condition gradually gets more and more severe until death ensues from suffocation, or until the disease submits to treatment. The average duration of a case of real croup is about seven or eight days, and many methods and remedies are advised.

Both false and true croup may be guarded against in great measure. It is a mistake to accustom children to such bundling and wrapping up when they go out that active exercise is not easily taken, and of course I would not have you go to the other extreme and not clothe them warmly enough; but if they are strong and lively, the latter course is really the safest, provided they can come indoors to rest and get warm. Look to it that their feet are attended to when they come in from playing in the wet. A good rubbing, or better still, bathing in alcohol and water, and then rubbing, and dry, warm stockings, will often prevent a case of croup or some other form of cold.

If they are weak, or not really active and strong, a course of sirup iodide of iron will usually bring them up. See to it that they are regular and rather lax in their bowel movements, for nearly every preparation of iron has a tendency to promote constipation.

WHAT TO DO FOR CROUP.

Death is almost always caused by suffocation, on account of the closing up of the glottis by the membrane, which forms so rapidly that constant attention with the probang or spray is necessary to impede its growth. Whichever method of applying is used, any application that is irritating is dangerous and should be avoided, as, for instance, nitrate of silver and several of the mineral acids.

Probably the best solvent is freshly made lime water, and it may readily be applied in form of vapor without any apparatus. Small pieces of fresh, unslaked lime may be put into a wide mouthed bottle—a pint glass fruit jar will answer—and water poured upon it to slake it, and the patient may then breathe the fresh vapor as it arises. In cases of true croup this is probably the best course to pursue until the doctor comes. Tincture of iron (full strength) may be applied to the membrane with a camel's hair pencil or a probang. The latter instrument is simply a bit of fine soft sponge, fastened securely with silk thread to the end of a piece of whalebone or reed about as long as a lead pencil, and is simply a swab.

With this swab diluted lactic acid may be applied to the membrane, and next to lime water it is probably the best and safest solvent that can be used. To prepare it for use simply add the acid to water until it has a decidedly sour taste. During an attack of croup it is necessary that we should do everything to keep the patient nourished, as the tremendous exertion of breathing, together with the apprehension of fatal result, are most exhausting.—A Doctor in New York World.

Trials of an Author.

There came to a man who has had a success in literature which we should envy did we not all agree he deserves it, a lady who was neither young nor fair, but who had the assurance of youth in combination with the obstinacy of advancing years.

"I have decided," she said to him, "that I must earn my living by writing poems. I sent a poem to the Blank Magazine, and they returned it with a printed slip. Now, I want you to write to the editor, and tell him that he made a mistake."

It naturally seemed to the author that he had to deal with a humorist or a mad woman; but the lady was certainly in earnest and apparently sane. He endeavored to show her that it was not his business to interfere with the decisions of the editors of magazines, who might be supposed to know their own business. The lady insisted, however, and in the end he was forced to decline point blank to do what she asked. Thereupon she turned upon him and declared that he was one of those who endeavor to keep others out in order that they may have the field to themselves, and who are meanly jealous of other authors who are sure to eclipse them if they are but heard.

"It is all a ring," she declared with vehemence. "I have been told so before, and now I am sure of it. I can't make you do justice to me, but I can show you up."

Her method of "showing him up" has been to send letters of bitter invective to the papers, one of which fell into my hands. Of course nobody would print them, but she perseveres, and in addition to this she sends to the luckless author, whose crime is that he did not make the editor of the Blank Magazine print the rhymes of an unknown woman, a letter once a week. Of course he burns them unopened, and it is not easy to see what satisfaction it can be to the woman to keep on with this sort of thing, but the fact remains that she does. The story is not profound importance, but it throws a curious bit of a side light upon the life of the successful author of today.—Arlo Bates in Book Buyer.

Wanting and Getting.

It has been said that the reason so few people get what they want in this world is that they do not want it hard enough. There is profound truth at the bottom of this old conceit. Earnest striving and perseverance are rare qualities. A little struggle, and then a falling off; a few faint efforts, and then despair—this is the usual story of attempts to "get anything," whether it be a physical, mental or spiritual good. But to long for a thing so strongly that for the sake of its attainment one can conquer obstacles, live down opposition, ignore discouragement and work persistently and through years of trial and obscurity toward the fulfillment of a hope—is not this the record of all grand achievements and the history of all purposeful lives?

Many more wishes might be realized if people were willing to pay this price for them. Anything worth having in this world is dear, including experience. Genius itself has been defined as only unlimited patience, or an endless capacity for hard work.

It was told of some celebrated general that he never knew when he was defeated. By and by he could not be defeated. A little of the same spirit infused into ordinary life would make many a dream possible that now seems to the wistful dreamer as extravagant as the cloudiest castle in Spain.—Harper's Bazar.

The Improvised Pianist.

A few weeks ago a dancing party was given at one of the largest clubs in Vienna. The regular pianist did not turn up. A message came to say that he was ill. What was to be done? A porter ran out, hailed a cab and said to the driver:

"Drive me—faith, I don't know where."

"Why, what is it you want?"

"I want a piano player. Do you happen to know of one in the neighborhood?"

"I should think I did; in fact, close at hand. You needn't trouble to get into the cab."

"Where is he?"

"Right in front of you. I play the piano myself fairly well, and shall be glad to accommodate you."

Cabby got down from his box, took his seat at the instrument and kept the visitors dancing till break of day. What is more, he declined to accept any payment; he said he had come as an amateur and for the love of the thing. He considered himself highly honored to have been allowed to spend a night with "such grand company." Where but in Vienna could you hope to find such a sample of musical training, civility and disinterestedness among the cabbies?—Le Monde Artiste.

Shook the Deacon.

In the course of his sermon Rev. McLeod told the congregation that if any among them were asleep they had better wake up or they would miss hearing a good story. Much to the amusement of the congregation one old man left his seat, advanced a few steps up the aisle, grasped another old man by the shoulder, and, after giving him a sound shake, whispered in his ear sufficiently loud enough to be heard in all parts of the church: "Brother B. Wake up! The elder is going to tell a story. If you would keep better hours Saturday nights you would be able to keep awake during church services." The unlooked for scene caused an audible titter in nearly every pew in the church, which in many cases had not entirely ceased when the benediction was pronounced.—Sun Prairie (Wis.) Countryman.

A cubic inch of any of the stones from which the palaces, churches and fine residences of Paris are built contains hundreds of thousands of fossils, so that it may with truth be said that Paris, together with its pavements and quays, is composed entirely of the shells of the mollusks.

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL.

After four weeks of successful labors at the Grand Opera House, the brilliant young actor, Alexander Salvini, continues to charm his auditors. Next week the bill will be changed to "Monte Cristo."

The magician, Kellar, concludes his engagement at the Boston Museum tonight, and the stage will be given up next week to the new eccentric comedy by the authors of "Ermoline," entitled, "Niobe." This is its first production in Boston.

Barnum & Bailey's Greatest Show on Earth has given Boston a fine entertainment the past week. With the consummate energy that has always characterized the management of this wonderful combination, they appear this season with new features and large additions in every department.

The city of Concord, N. H., has extended an invitation to Grover Cleveland to be present at the Fourth of July celebration, as a guest of the city.

The great falling off in the consumption of tobacco is mainly owing to the growth of refinement in cities, and therefore it is the tinfoil and fine-cut trade that has suffered most. In the country at large the amount of chewing tobacco consumed is still enormous, but countrymen are fond of plug tobacco, either sweet plug or the dry kind that can be used both to chew and to smoke in pipes.

The well-known specialist, Dr. Franklin

The Sea.

I stood one night by the heaving sea,
And gazed on the foaming waves,
And I thought as I stood there all alone,
Of its unknown, countless graves.
Those graves that lie there amid the depths,
Unseen to the eyes of man,
Whose murmuring billows chant their dirge,
And the eye of God doth scan.
I thought of the forms that were sleeping
there,
In the graveyard 'neath the sea,
And I knew that God watched o'er their rest,
With his care so tenderly.

No loving hands can o'er deck those graves,
With a spray of sweetest flower,
For they are decked with the sands of white,
By their God's Almighty power.

Roll on! Roll on! With your ceaseless roll,
Thou grand majestic sea,
You will in time give up your dead—
Reveal its mystery.

THE FARM AND GARDEN.

Never breed from a pampered animal, no matter how many prizes it may have taken at the fairs.

Among the best winter apples that can plant are Smith's cider. Baldwin, Ben Davis, Porter and Gravenstein.
These are all favorites in the markets, and always command good prices.

Many small fruit growers have been dissatisfied with the dewberry on account of its troubled habit of growth.
A Pennsylvania cultivator has trained his bushes upon a light wire trellis, and thus overcome all difficulties of cultivation. Try it.

The forcing of early lambs is quite as profitable near our large cities as is the forcing of fruits and vegetables.
In March of the present year, dressed lambs weighing 30 pounds sold in the Boston market at $14 each. But it requires warm barns and good care to grow them.

If the lawn had in the beginning a good rich soil beneath it, it might be kept up indefinitely by the use of wood ashes alone. The use of manure on the lawn about the dwelling house is very offensive, and need not be resorted to if ashes can be had. Apply the ashes with a sieve early in the spring, and once or twice thereafter if they seem to be needed.

We have before us a statement of the returns obtained by a Northern Ohio fruit grower from an acre of strawberries, raspberries and grapes.
The first gave him $220, the second $250 and the third $240. Of the three the grapes probably gave the best profit as they cost less to cultivate and harvest. There are but few places in our country where they may not be planted with profit.

The region about Barnesville, Ohio, has become famous of late years for its strawberries, and growers there uniformly find the business profitable.
One reason for this may be found in the fact that "they make an effort never to ship a bad berry from their place, and endeavor to get as big berries at the bottom of the basket as at the top." An example like this might well be followed elsewhere.

The beech is not used as much as it should be for a shade tree, and few have given it the deserved attention in this respect. The leaves are small and distributed all through the tree, so that that they permit a free circulation of air. A good shade tree should not have too dense foliage, or the air will be sultry beneath it, and so defeat the very end for which it is intended, that of providing a cool and refreshing place of rest.

From preliminary enquiries made by the Treasury Department it appears that about $9,000,000 will be required for the payment of bounties to sugar producers for the year 1890. Of this about $8,000,000 will be for cane sugar, and $1,000,000 for beet sugar. While cane sugar production will doubtless increase somewhat under stimulus of the bounty, beet sugar will rapidly become a much greater factor than it now is.

A practical and sensible application of Grange and Alliance work is that now practiced by some of the associations in New England, which are buying grain by the car load direct from their brother farmers of the West, without the intervention of middlemen. By this sort of co-operation in buying and selling, and by the direct exchange of products between the farmers of different regions, much good may be done both to the buyer and seller.

One advantage that accrues from the use of commercial fertilizers upon potatoes is that they usually contain sulphuric acid and chlorine, free or in compound, and these act more or less as fungicides, and destroy the germs of rot, mildew, mold, &c. The rot in the potatoes is caused by a parasite, and if we use manures with a little copperas we usually have little trouble from it.
Barnyard and stable manure are thought rather to increase these troubles.

If you contemplate setting out grape vines this season let us counsel you not to choose rich, loamy land, but rather a gravelly, or even quite rocky soil.
Too rich land will produce too rampant growth of wood at the expense of fruit.
Besides, that land will pay so well for other crops that require good soil and high cultivation that it should be retained for such purposes. Make amends to the grapes for the poorer land by giving special fertilizing with ground bone, or even with whole fresh bones, planted right in with the roots when you are setting the vines.

Did you ever stop to question the difference in the profit of the man who raises 100 bushels of wheat on 10 acres of land and his neighbor who grows the same amount upon three acres?
The income is the same, but how about the cost per bushel? and, by the way, how many farmers can tell what it costs them to grow a bushel of wheat;
but to go back to the two neighbors.
Not only is there a difference in their money profit, but a wide difference as well in the content and satisfaction that they find in the business. One of them says, "Farming does not pay."

Potatoes, with good cultivation, pay uniformly a better profit than any other crop that can be grown at the same expense and with the same cultivation. Dairy cows, of the best class, pay better than any other stock which demands no more capital; and fowls pay better than any other small or minor industry of the farm. Taken in combination, they are just the thing for an industrious man of small means who has 10 acres of good ground.
Upon this much land, with this combination, such a man would be sure not only of a good living, but of saving a snug sum every year.

In no branch of our agriculture is there a wider divergence between that which might be accomplished and that which actually is accomplished. For instance, the average milk production from our cows is about 3,000 pounds, and of butter 125 pounds; yet it has been shown that it is possible to procure nearly 30,000 pounds of milk from one cow in a year, and from another more than 1,100 pounds of butter.
There is too wide a difference here,
and our new agriculture will work toward closing up the gap by bringing up the average—not by lowering the exceptional production.

Lice are the greatest plague and profit destroyer of the poultry raiser.
Unless the utmost care and cleanliness are observed they are sure to appear when warm weather comes. It is best not to wait till they come before applying the remedies, but saturate the perches with kerosene now, burn up all filthy nests, and with wash coops and fences with hot lime wash. Do this thoroughly, and it will save lots of trouble in the season. The effectiveness of the whitewash is much increased by applying it hot and getting well into the cracks and corners.

The small farmer everywhere is generally doing better than the large farmer. That this is true may easily be proven by enquiring into the relative prosperity of the 40-acre farmer and the 100-acre farmer in your own neighborhood. Which is burdened with the least debt in proportion to the total value of his land? Which is producing the best profit to the total value of his land? Which is producing the best profit upon his capital and the largest money yield per acre? And which gets the most satisfaction out of the business of agriculture? One trouble is that we have been too grasping in regard to land, and have acquired more than we could handle to the best advantage.

The new agriculture is to be based largely upon common sense, the outcome of some bitter experiences of late years. Among the things that we have learned is, not to keep more live stock than we can keep well. The effort to maintain one head more than this may destroy the profit of all; and not to store perishable produce for a rise when we are offered a fair price for it. Rats and mice can soon counterbalance the gain, even if it comes, and if the rats and mice do not, then the interest may; and then, again, the rise may not come. Another item is that stock is mature whenever it will sell at the top of the market. After that point is reached you may easily make gain in weight at loss of profit.
"Quick sales" is as good an axiom for the farmer as for the merchant.

Excepting that a few ornamental and native forest trees should be about the house, every other open or available place about the homestead should be planted with a fruit tree of some kind.
Plant plum trees in the chicken yard,
for fruit and for shade for the fowls, and so that the fowls may keep the curculio away. Plant pears and apples and cherries along the lane, for the fruit to make a pleasant and inviting avenue. Plant grapes, for the fruit and as screens from unsightly objects; and, by the way, the forest trees might as well be walnuts and chestnuts, so that they can give fruit as well as shade, and maple for the sweets they yield. Look around carefully, and you will find many bare places that can be improved in appearance and at the same time made profitable by planting a tree there.

"Science in dairying" is defined as being that which teaches a man how to feed a cow at a cost of 15 cents a day and make her produce a pound and a quarter of butter good enough to bring 30 cents per pound on the open mar-

SATURDAY, JUNE 13, 1891.

THE POSSESSION of the pen with which the Governor signed the redistricting bill has been acquired by Senator Bennett, but what there is about that pen more than any other pen, will puzzle the average man to tell. The measure is certainly not particularly popular, and contains as slight a trace of principle as any bill that has been enacted by this or any other legislature. But the people afflicted with folly are not yet extinct.

THE BILL by which Massachusetts is redistricted has passed both branches of the legislature, and become a law. The Governor's signature was affixed Wednesday afternoon. Vigorous opposition was interposed from various quarters, but to no particular purpose other than that of expressing the wide spread disapprobation, and asserting the rights of minority.

Peabody and Lynnfield will now part company with Salem and the rest of the cities and towns that composed the old district and cast her lot with Lowell, Lawrence, Woburn and other municipal ties with whom we shall be obliged to cultivate acquaintance. We shall probably get accustomed in time to our new associations, but it will be difficult to become reconciled to being a small factor in a Democratic Congressional district.

It is already rumored that the bill will be amended next season.

THE VOTERS of Peabody are called upon to express by ballot, next Thursday, their desire as to the establishment of an electric light plant, at the expense of the town. The polls will be opened at 3 o'clock, and remain open until 8 o'clock, so that ample opportunity will be given to everybody interested in the question to deposit his ballot.

The subject has been before the town so many times doubtless many people have become weary of it, and may feel a disinclination to take the trouble to go to the Town House, and express their pleasure. But the matter is an important one. It is not simply a question whether or not the town shall be lighted by electricity. That is purely a matter of convenience or luxury, and if it were the only issue involved, would scarcely call for comment, although much might be said even upon the expediency of any change in the mode of lighting our streets and public places.

The real question at issue in the coming meeting presupposes the desirability of a change from kerosene lanterns to arc lights. The question then is, shall those lights be established and maintained as a part of our municipal organization? and upon this matter volumes of testimony might be produced to show the fallacy of the scheme. At the town meetings that have been held for the express purpose of discussing this very question, it was plainly demonstrated that the cost of maintenance and operation under municipal control, would be fully as large, if not larger than by private enterprise, notwithstanding the claims set up by our neighboring town of Danvers to the contrary. It is true that Danvers and some other towns scattered over different parts of the United States, by their peculiar mode of book-keeping, showed some figures that indicated a lower rate of maintenance than was paid by some other cities and towns to private companies, but their peculiar style of book-keeping is not such as would satisfy the requirements of any practical business man.

No better illustration of the fallacy of municipal ownership need be sought than the status at Lewiston and Auburn, Maine. There, with equal advantages possessed by both, the cost to one under a contract with a private lighting company, is lower than to the sister city under municipal management.

The Water Works has been a beacon that has guided many in the past, to the conclusion that a municipal establishment must necessarily be the cheaper and more advantageous to the town; but to those who are guided by such conceptions we have a word of caution. Do not deceive yourselves. Examine the Reports of the town for the few years past, and see for yourselves whether the Water Works has been really a self-sustaining institution. If we take into account merely the expenses of operation, stripped of the item of interest and first cost, it must be admitted that that department has paid its way. But we must look further. The original cost of the plant and the interest on the bonds cannot be disregarded, and when they are taken into consideration, we leave it for anybody who desires to compute the problem, to say whether that department is really self-sustaining. But what we have to say about the High Service System is not to be taken disparagingly. We do not mean to insinuate that water is a poor investment for the town. It rests upon an entirely different basis; but we simply wish to caution our readers against relying on any false assumptions.

The electric light question opens a number of pertinent enquiries. Can the town in its present condition afford to indulge in the large expense that a suitable lighting plant will entail? If a majority of the voters of Peabody are convinced that a municipal establishment is more economical than buying light of a private company, have they considered the expediency of spending $20,000, or $30,000, to install a plant at the present time?

The business of the town is perhaps at a lower ebb than ever before, certainly lower than for many years past, while expenses have already been incurred that will reach many thousands of dollars, and under such conditions, valuations must necessarily be low, and tax rates correspondingly high. Electric light at least, is a mere luxury, certainly not a necessity at the present time, and too, according to the doctrines of those who have been most strenuous in opposing the petitions of the private companies, and most zealous for municipal management when any electric lighting system should be installed, the present condition of electrical apparatus is that of infancy, liable in the near future to be overturned and supplanted by more improved and cheaper devices for accomplishing the desired purpose.

If that doctrine were true a year ago, it is true to-day, and it will be extremely unwise for the town to spend a large sum of money on any experiment. It will be foolishness for the town to spend a large sum of money on any experiment. It will be highly injudicious to put in a plant that perhaps a few years will demonstrate a costly failure. Will it not then, be well as has so often been urged before, to "go slow" and wait at least a reasonable time, until the town can better afford the expense, and see if the improvements that have been so confidently predicted by those who now urge the town to take this important step, shall come?

Whatever course is taken, let us hope there will be a full and free expression of sentiment at the polls next Thursday. Let every voter feel that he is interested in this important question, and not allow the issue to be decided by default.

Speaking of Chauncey M. Depew as an orator, Frank Leslie's says.—Mr. Depew has not had his equal as an orator ready for all times and occasions. Since Mr. Beecher died and, since Mr. Evarts retirement from the theatre of activity.

Liquor dealers in New York are rejoicing over the advent of a fellow who claims to have a process whereby a drunkard can be made sober within three days. It strikes us that the look-up will do that very thing, if it has a fair chance. But why do saloonists consider the process "one of the greatest blessings, not only to the liquor dealer, but to all mankind?" Let us see; how did the ancient Romans manage to get away with several dinners at one meal? Is there any possible similarity in the processes?—Temperance Cause for June.

Robbing Uncle Sam.
Going through the mail sacks used to be a tedious job for a road agent, and it didn't often pay for the time wasted. Besides it doubled the number of pursuers by setting all the United States marshals on the hunt for the robber, and when caught it landed him in the United States court and insured a heavy sentence. Nevertheless, a great deal of money is sent by mail, and for the convenience of road agents and other thieves who may desire to take the chances of being caught, Uncle Sam invented the registered letter and its especial pouch. No other reason for the invention of the registered letter system can be imagined. A registered letter is not insured and Uncle Sam will not pay for it if it is lost or stolen. The registered mail is put into a little pouch, which is put inside the ordinary mail sack. When the road agent gets hold of a mail sack he rips it open either by running his knife around the sack near the bottom and thus cutting the bottom off with one sweep, or by making two slashes criss-cross in one side of the sack. Thanks to Uncle Sam's kind consideration and foresight, he isn't obliged to ransack a thousand letters, but finds all the valuable mail sorted out for him and neatly done up in an easily portable pouch, which he takes along to open at his leisure in brush.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

THE MELVILLE MURDER
EDITED BY ALFRED B. TOZER.
COPYRIGHTED BY AMERICAN PRESS ASS'N, 1891

CHAPTER I.
CONTRIBUTED BY THE REVEREND JAMES MORGAN.
My memory is not as reliable as it was once, and I can't be exact as to the date. It is my impression, however, that the interview I am asked to recall took place early on a Saturday forenoon in April, in the year eighteen hundred and seventy.
It must have been Saturday, for I remember that the notes of my next day's sermon lay before me for revision when my wife's knock sounded on my study door.
I was greatly annoyed at the interruption, but before I could utter the impatient words which arose to my lips my excellent wife threw open the door and announced a lady visitor who desired to see me in private.
The next moment Mrs. Clark Melville entered the room.
I was still in my easy chair at the writing table. My visitor, without waiting for me to hand her a chair, took the first one that came in her way as she advanced into the apartment, carried it forward with her own hand and sat down with her face within a yard of my own.
"I am in great trouble of mind," she said, "and come to you for sympathy and advice."
Mrs. Clark Melville was the wealthiest and most popular lady of my congregation. She was noted for her perfect toilets, for her deeds of charity, and for an invincible pride in the Melvilles, past and present, which amounted almost to a mania. As her pastor I had frequently shared her confidences, but she had never before asked for sympathy and advice on her own account.
I saw at once that it was no ordinary trouble that had brought her to me. Her kind, motherly face was paler than usual, and there were haggard lines upon it which I had never seen there before. It was evident that her nervous system was unduly excited, and that she had rested badly the previous night.
"The body was found in a pool of blood." We all have our little weaknesses, and I confess that one of mine got the better of me then. In my eagerness to have my curiosity satisfied I lost sight of the fact that she had come to me for sympathy as well as advice. I sat staring her full in the face until she was forced into an abrupt question leading up to the subject in hand.
"Have you read the morning papers?" I had not. For once I had given my own affairs precedence over those of my neighbors. I had worked on my sermon and neglected the news.
"I am sorry," she said, when I had answered her question. "It will make it more difficult for me to begin."
The Tribune lay upon the table within easy reach, and I took it up. Before I could unfold it she took it from my hand and laid it aside.
"I can't sit here and see you read the reporter's account of it," she said, in explanation of her action. "Now that I am here I want you to have the story from my own lips. My coachman was murdered last night—murdered in his own room and under my roof!"
You may imagine how astonished I was. A servant murdered in cold blood under the roof of one of the most aristocratic families in the city! It seemed to me almost too horrible to be true.
I am almost ashamed to put on paper what I did next. I attempted to regain possession of the morning paper, which my visitor had put aside, in order that I might devour the details of the tragedy. Mrs. Melville restrained me with a motion of her hand. At that moment she was the least excited of the two. I admit that I, a clergyman, entirely unaccustomed to deal with matters of a criminal character, was startled beyond power of expression.
One after another I rejected every expression of astonishment and sympathy which my slow brain suggested. Again my stupidity forced her to lead the conversation.
"I want your advice," she said. "I can confide my secret to no one but you. Tell me what I ought to do and you shall be obeyed implicitly."
I found my tongue at last. I reminded Mrs. Melville that as yet I was entirely destitute of the slightest information regarding the tragedy.
"I beg your pardon," she said. "This trouble seems to have turned my poor head. You shall hear all I know about the wretched affair. Then you can tell me what I ought to do."
I repeat the story, so far as possible, in Mrs. Melville's own words:
"The murder was committed early in the evening. Not earlier than seven, for the coachman left the kitchen about that hour, and not later than eight, for the body was found about that time. From the kitchen the unfortunate man went directly to his room on the second floor of the carriage house. The coachman's room opens from a hall which occupies a portion of the second floor of the laundry building. At the other end of the hallway are the stairs leading to the kitchen. The coachman's door is the only one opening from this hall. There is no door at the top of the kitchen stairs.

"From the kitchen the coachman's room can be reached only by means of the stairway and the hallway I have mentioned. From the carriage floor below, the room is reached by a narrow stairway, terminating at a stout door opening into the room. This door is invariably kept locked. The only person allowed to have a key to either of the doors opening into the coachman's room was the coachman himself. This precaution was taken to prevent the kitchen being entered by means of the carriage house door and the hallway over the laundry.
"The murder took place in the coachman's room. The body was found in a pool of blood in the center of the apartment. There had been no struggle. Nothing in the room had been displaced. The poor man must have been stricken down as he sat tidying some portion of the harness. Straps and buckles lay scattered about the floor, just as they had fallen when the unsuspecting man fell from his chair, stunned and bleeding by a blow dealt from behind with some blunt instrument.
"The servants came to me the instant the body was discovered, and I hastened to the spot. The sight of the dead man and the blood overcame me. I sank, half fainting, into a chair standing against the door opening from the stairway leading from the carriage floor. For several minutes I was too weak to follow my inclinations and leave the room, and in the general excitement no one noticed my condition. I remained there, with the back of my chair resting against the floor, until the arrival of the police.
"Guided by a servant who had been dispatched to the nearest station house, the police officers entered the building by the carriage door. I knew of their presence only when they demanded admission from the opposite side of the door where I sat. Before I could gather sufficient strength to rise to my feet the door was thrust rudely upon me. The officers had discovered the key in the lock on the outside, and had opened the door without the assistance of those in the room. My inability to move obstructed their entrance, and a servant came to my assistance. I was at once taken to my room, and I only know from the servants what followed.
"A rigid examination of the premises was made by the police officers. All the servants in the house were summoned and questioned. The officer in charge kept his conclusions to himself until the last moment, when the chambermaid begged him to cause the main portion of the house to be searched. The assassin, she urged, might be secreted in some of the upper rooms, with the intention of doing further mischief in the dead of night.
"The officer calmly referred her to the cook's statement that no one had passed through the kitchen either to or from the passage after seven o'clock.
"It is all clear enough," he said in conclusion. "The person who murdered the coachman entered the building by the carriage door. You saw that we found the key in the door when we arrived. The murderer passed through the carriage house when it was unoccupied. If the door opening into the coachman's room was locked when the murderer reached the head of the stairway, he found the key on the outside—just as we did. The chances are, however, he went on, 'that the door was open. The assassin came upon his victim unawares. The opening of a door would have attracted attention. After committing the deed the murderer departed by the same route, taking the precaution to delay possible pursuit by locking the door after him. The only wonder is that he did not remove the key."
"There," he concluded, "you have the whole thing in a nutshell. Show me a person with whom the coachman lived in bitter enmity and I will show you the person who took his life."
"The chambermaid was silenced; but the conversation, short as it was, served to attract the attention of the servants to another one of the excited group of servants, all of whom seemed then to remember that of late the housekeeper had violent quarrels with the murdered man. She had even been heard to threaten him.
"The officer was quick to notice the new interest with which the housekeeper was being eyed by her companions. Without waiting an instant he asked a question he might well have delayed.
"Tell me," he demanded, "were all the servants on friendly terms with the coachman?"
"The stupid creatures stared harder than ever at the poor housekeeper and said not a word.
"Tell me," repeated the officer, "is there a person in the house who lived on unfriendly terms with the murdered man?"
"A moment more and it all came out. The housekeeper had been known to threaten the coachman! The miserable creature! I am tempted to discharge every servant in the house when I re-

A REAL LUXURY!

Looking out over the many homes of this country, we see thousands of women wearing away their lives in household drudgery that might be materially lessened by the use of a few cakes of SAPOLIO. If an hour is saved each time a cake is used, if one less wrinkle gathers upon the face because the toil is lightened, she must be a foolish woman who would hesitate to make the experiment, and he a churlish husband who would grudge the few cents which it costs.

If your grocer sends you anything in place of SAPOLIO, send it back and insist upon having just what you ordered. SAPOLIO always gives satisfaction. On floors, tables, and painted work it acts like a charm. For scouring pots, pans, and metals it has no equal. Everything shines after it, and even the children delight in using it in their attempts to help around the house.

Grocers often substitute cheaper goods for SAPOLIO to make a better profit. Send back such articles and insist on having just what you ordered.

An item has been going the rounds of the papers, that Rev. Willard Spaulding had a bill approved by the selectmen last Saturday for services and costs of the Electric Light contest. The item has conveyed an erroneous impression. What the selectmen did do was to authorize the Treasurer to draw a check for the costs of Court in the case referred to. The items were the regular costs taxable by the Clerk of Courts and about $90 for services of the court stenographer.

Statistics published by the Massachusetts Total Abstinence Society, show that in the entire vote of Essex County, for 1889-90 and 1890-91, the gain for license was 3,523, and the no-license gains, 1,490; making the net loss for no-license 2,033. In 6 cities license gains were 2,532, no-license gains, 588; net loss for no-license 1975. In 29 towns the license gains were 990; no-license, 932; net loss for no-license, 53.

Carburetted Hydrogen.

Some French chemists have been investigating the nature of firedamp mixtures in relation to colliery explosions, with important results. For this purpose mixtures of pure formene and air were employed, and of these mixed with ordinary illuminating gas, which were made by passing the gases through multiple Bunsen burners into a wooden box placed against granite and porphy blocks, and so disposed that by striking them with a pick the sparks fell into the box. It appears the mixtures of illuminating gas and air were easily exploded by the sparks whenever they were large enough to remain incandescent during an appreciable time, a result obtained with nearly every blow, the sparks being formed of metallic particles burning strongly and forming globules of magnetic oxide. On the other hand, it appears that with mixtures of formene and air no inflammation could be obtained, although more than a hundred experiments were made under conditions in which a mixture of illuminating gas and air would inevitably have been ignited—a difference thought to be due to the inflammation of formene requiring a much longer time than that of illuminating gas, and the sparks becoming cold before it can be effected. Further experiments were made with mixtures of formene, illuminating gas and air, the result being that when the mixture contained equal quantities of two gases, explosions were in some cases obtained, but with mixtures employed that contained the proportions of 75 per cent. of formene and 25 of illuminating gas no explosions took place of any kind.

Edward Smith of Pittsfield, Vt., a farmer and representative in the legislature, who mysteriously disappeared April 23, returned home this week. He has been wandering in the South and was out of his mind. He is unable to tell where he went, but thinks he was as far south as Florida. He had $500 when he disappeared, and returned with $390. He regained his reason in Virginia, and came straight home, worn out bodily, but all right mentally.

A former resident of Boston was Gen. John G. Neil, the noted soldier of Missouri, who dropped dead of heart disease in St. Louis on Monday. He created a sensation by his method of clearing Northeastern Missouri of guerrillas, hanging or shooting a number of bridge-burners. All the sympathizers with the Confederacy were loud in their denunciation of his acts and some staunch ministers also condemned his methods.

Robbing Uncle Sam.
Going through the mail sacks used to be a tedious job for a road agent, and it didn't often pay for the time wasted. Besides it doubled the number of pursuers by setting all the United States marshals on the hunt for the robber, and when caught it landed him in the United States court and insured a heavy sentence. Nevertheless, a great deal of money is sent by mail, and for the convenience of road agents and other thieves who may desire to take the chances of being caught, Uncle Sam invented the registered letter and its especial pouch. No other reason for the invention of the registered letter system can be imagined. A registered letter is not insured and Uncle Sam will not pay for it if it is lost or stolen. The registered mail is put into a little pouch, which is put inside the ordinary mail sack. When the road agent gets hold of a mail sack he rips it open either by running his knife around the sack near the bottom and thus cutting the bottom off with one sweep, or by making two slashes criss-cross in one side of the sack. Thanks to Uncle Sam's kind consideration and foresight, he isn't obliged to ransack a thousand letters, but finds all the valuable mail sorted out for him and neatly done up in an easily portable pouch, which he takes along to open at his leisure in brush.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

THEY HAVE NEVER FAILED.
I have been sick more or less for the last ten years, which has cost me many dollars in doctors and druggists' bills. The last two years it only cost me three dollars. Why? Because I used Sulphur Bitters instead of employing doctors. They cured me of Jaundice.—F. F. Boyd, Hoboken.

THE MELVILLE MURDER

EDITED BY ALFRED B. TOZER.

CHAPTER I.

CONTRIBUTED BY THE REVEREND JAMES MORGAN.
My memory is not as reliable as it was once, and I can't be exact as to the date. It is my impression, however, that the interview I am asked to recall took place early on a Saturday forenoon in April, in the year eighteen hundred and seventy.

It must have been Saturday, for I remember that the notes of my next day's sermon lay before me for revision when my wife's knock sounded on my study door.

I was greatly annoyed at the interruption, but before I could utter the impatient words which arose to my lips my excellent wife threw open the door and announced a lady visitor who desired to see me in private.

The next moment Mrs. Clark Melville entered the room.

I was still in my easy chair at the writing table. My visitor, without waiting for me to hand her a chair, took the first one that came in her way as she advanced into the apartment, carried it forward with her own hand and sat down with her face within a yard of my own.

"I am in great trouble of mind," she said, "and come to you for sympathy and advice."

Mrs. Clark Melville was the wealthiest and most popular lady of my congregation. She was noted for her perfect toilets, for her deeds of charity, and for an invincible pride in the Melvilles, past and present, which amounted almost to a mania. As her pastor I had frequently shared her confidences, but she had never before asked for sympathy and advice on her own account.

I saw at once that it was no ordinary trouble that had brought her to me. Her kind, motherly face was paler than usual, and there were haggard lines upon it which I had never seen there before. It was evident that her nervous system was unduly excited, and that she had rested badly the previous night.

"The body was found in a pool of blood." We all have our little weaknesses, and I confess that one of mine got the better of me then. In my eagerness to have my curiosity satisfied I lost sight of the fact that she had come to me for sympathy as well as advice. I sat staring her full in the face until she was forced into an abrupt question leading up to the subject in hand.

"Have you read the morning papers?" I had not. For once I had given my own affairs precedence over those of my neighbors. I had worked on my sermon and neglected the news.

"I am sorry," she said, when I had answered her question. "It will make it more difficult for me to begin." The Tribune lay upon the table within easy reach, and I took it up. Before I could unfold it she took it from my hand and laid it aside.

"I can't sit here and see you read the reporter's account of it," she said, in explanation of her action. "Now that I am here I want you to have the story from my own lips. My coachman was murdered last night—murdered in his own room and under my roof!"

You may imagine how astonished I was. A servant murdered in cold blood under the roof of one of the most aristocratic families in the city! It seemed to me almost too horrible to be true.

I am almost ashamed to put on paper what I did next. I attempted to regain possession of the morning paper, which my visitor had put aside, in order that I might devour the details of the tragedy. Mrs. Melville restrained me with a motion of her hand. At that moment she was the least excited of the two. I admit that I, a clergyman, entirely unaccustomed to deal with matters of a criminal character, was startled beyond power of expression.

One after another I rejected every expression of astonishment and sympathy which my slow brain suggested. Again my stupidity forced her to lead the conversation.

"I want your advice," she said. "I can confide my secret to no one but you. Tell me what I ought to do and you shall be obeyed implicitly."

I found my tongue at last. I reminded Mrs. Melville that as yet I was entirely destitute of the slightest information regarding the tragedy.

ASSESSORS' NOTICE.

To the Inhabitants and other Persons liable to pay Taxes in the Town of Peabody.The Assessors of the Town of Peabody hereby give notice to the inhabitants of said town, and to all persons liable to pay taxes therein, that their office will be open on and after the first day of May until and including the first day of June, and all persons liable to be taxed in said town are hereby required to bring in at the said office true and perfect lists of all the polls (males twenty years old, and upward), and schedules and estimates of the personal estates for which they are liable to pay taxes.

Copartnerships

having a place of business in Peabody and also in some other city or town within the Commonwealth, are especially notified to bring in a statement in accordance with the 24th section of the 11th chapter of the Public Statutes, Shipping and business income are not taxable to a firm, but each resident partner must include these items in his individual return.

Mortgaged Real Estate.

"Any mortgagor or mortgagee of real estate may bring in to the assessors of his town or city such real estate as he owns, within the time specified in this notice, a statement, under oath, of the amount due on each separate lot or parcel of such real estate, and the name and residence of every holder of an interest therein as a mortgagee or mortgagor. When such property is situated in two or more places, or when a recorded mortgage includes for one sum two or more estates or parts of an estate, an estimate of the amount of the mortgagee's interest in each estate or part of an estate shall be given in such statement." (Chap.
117, of the Acts of 1882.) When a statement in conformity with the law above quoted is brought in, the real estate therein returned will be assessed under sections 14, 15 and 16, of chapter 11 of the Public Statutes. But in cases where the mortgagor of the real estate has agreed in writing to pay all taxes assessed thereon, NO STATE-MENT OR RETURN is required from either mortgagee or mortgagor, unless requested by the assessor in writing.

Estates in Trust.

Persons holding estates in trust, whether for minors or otherwise, are particularly requested to furnish the assessors with statements in relation to the real estate in trust. When trust estates, or estates of persons deceased, have been divided during the past year, or have changed hands from trustee to trustee, executor or trustee, or administrator, or other person interested, is required and warned to give notice of such change; and in default of such notice, will be held to pay the tax assessed, although such estate has been wholly distributed and paid over.Any person bringing in a list of all his taxable personal property will be assessed upon the valuation of the assessors with such list, and the time specified will be deemed a legal meeting of the Board of Assessors, agreeably to the law of the Commonwealth. All persons will take notice that statements of personal property must be in writing, and subscribed under oath before one of the Assessors, at their office, on or before the FIRST DAY OF JUNE, and that the personal property of all taxable persons must be estimated by the Board, NOTWITHSTANDING A VERBAL STATEMENT OR INFORMAL WRITTEN COMMUNICATION TO ANY ONE OR MORE OF THE ASSESSORS. (Pub. Stat., chap. 11, sec. 39 and 41.) When a person has failed to bring in a list of his taxable personal property in conformity with this notice, no abatement of a tax assessed upon such person for personal property can be granted, "unless such tax exceeds by more than fifty per cent. the amount which would have been assessed to that person on personal estate, if he had seasonably brought in such list." (Pub. Stat., chap. 11, sec. 39.)
Any person taxable in Peabody for personal property can obtain a BLANK SCHEDULE for making a list of such property, with directions for properly filling the same, by applying at the assessors' office.Literary, Benevolent, Charitable and Scientific Corporations.The attention of the officers of all Literary, benevolent, Charitable and Scientific Corporations, located in Peabody, is particularly called to the requirements of Chapter 217 of the Acts of 1882 as the property of said corporations, both real and personal, is subject to taxation unless the law is complied with. Blank forms for the purpose can be had at the office of the assessors.CYRUS T. BATCHELDER,

BOARD OF HEALTH REGULATIONS.

The Board of Health appointed by the Town hereby make and publish as required by law, the following "Regulations for the Public Health and Safety":—The Board shall make such regulations as it judges necessary for the public health and safety. * * * Whoever violates any such regulation shall forfeit a sum not exceeding one hundred dollars. (Extract from the Public Statutes Chap. 80, § 18.REGULATION 1ST. It being the duty of the Board of Health of the Town of Peabody, to make such examination of the premises of persons residing in said town as they shall deem necessary for the public welfare, the Board hereby give notice and require that all premises within said limits shall be ready for inspection by the Board on or after May 20th, 1891.REGULATION 2D. No house, outhouse, filthy water, dead animals or refuse of any kind, shall be thrown upon the streets by any resident; and no butcher, fish monger or vender of merchandise, shall leave any refuse upon the streets of this town.REGULATION 3D. If, upon inspection, any rubbish, filth, decaying animal or vegetable matter, or filth of any kind be found in, under or about any building, within any yard or enclosure, upon any premises, or in the ponds or water courses of said Town of Peabody, or if any privy or drain be found so discharging as to prove a nuisance, and offensive or deleterious to the public health, the owner or occupant of such property or premises shall be notified by the Board to remove or abate such nuisance within twenty-four hours after said notice has been served.REGULATION 4TH. If any owner or occupant of property as aforesaid, after having been duly notified, shall neglect to have comply with the requirements of the above section, the Board of Health shall cause any and all nuisances to be removed or abated at the expense of the owner or occupants.REGULATION 5TH. On and after June 1st 1891, swine shall not be kept within the following limits in the Town of Peabody, except ing died of SMALL POX, SCARLET FEVER, DIPHTHERIA, TYPHOID FEVER or MEMBRANOUS CROUP, without the written permit of the Board of Health, under such regulations as may prevent the spread of either of such diseases.REGULATION 7TH. The remains of any person dying of either of said diseases shall be placed in a tight or sealed coffin, and shall not thereafter be exposed to view or disturbed, except for burial, and no undertaker or other person shall be permitted to take to any house, or use any bier or stand with draperies, which is to be used at any other funerals.REGULATION 8TH. No owner, driver or other person having charge of any hackney carriage or other vehicle used as a public conveyance, shall convey in or upon saidcarriage or other vehicle, any person sick or infected with the Small Pox, Scarlet Fever, Diphtheria, or other contagious disease, or the body of any person who has died of any contagious disease without the written permit of the Board of Health, to be given under such regulation, as may prevent the spread of such disease, and every vehicle which shall be so used shall be immediately disinfected under the supervision of the Board of Health, and before any other person shall be conveyed in or upon it. This regulation is intended to cover all cases where persons are conveyed from funerals at houses where any one has died of any contagious disease.REGULATION 9TH. It shall be the duty of member how ready they were to cast suspicion upon the trembling creature. I think I am right in saying that but for one thing the officer would have taken her in charge there and then. He had previously expressed an opinion that the assassin had entered his victim's room through the carriage house door. Only for this circumstance my poor housekeeper—as honest a woman as ever lived —would have been charged with the coachman's murder!"

CHAPTER II.

ALSO CONTRIBUTED BY THE REVEREND JAMES MORGAN."The murder was committed by an occupant of my house.""After the departure of the officers," continued Mrs. Clark Melville, "I summoned the housekeeper to my room.
There I heard from her lips the story of the officers' investigations in the coachman's room, just as you have heard it from mine. The poor creature was much disturbed over her own prominence in the matter, and declared herself to be the innocent victim of a conspiracy on the part of the servants. I dismissed her with the assurance of my protection and retired for the night."It will not surprise you when I tell you that I could not sleep. The instant I closed my eyes the ghastly scene in the carriage loft thrust itself upon my imagination. After a time I remembered having previously placed a sleeping potion in an adjoining room, and arose to get it."When I turned the knob of the door opening into the room I found that a chair had been placed against it on the other side. I forced my way in and closed the door behind me, in order that the atmosphere of my own room might not be disturbed. When I turned back with the sleeping potion in my hand, the position of the chair put a thought into my mind which effectually banished sleep for the remainder of the night.
The chair stood away from the door and away from the wall, just where the opening of the door had forced it."The chair I had occupied in the coachman's room had obstructed the opening of the door at the head of the stairs leading from the carriage floor below, just as this chair had obstructed my entrance into the inner room."I remembered then that I was among the first in the coachman's room after the alarm was given. I remembered, too, that the chair was not moved from the moment I entered the room until it was thrust aside upon the arrival of the police."The chair must have been placed against the door before the murder. It must have been placed there by the coachman himself. This being the case, how could the assassin have entered and departed by the stairs leading to the carriage floor without displacing it? He could not have closed the door on the outside and left the chair standing against it in the room."Then the horrible thought that the murderer had gone on his fatal errand through the passage from the kitchen took full possession of me. From that moment I have been able to think of nothing else. I want your candid advice. For God's sake, don't give it hastily!"No person not connected with my household was in my kitchen that day.
I cannot be mistaken in this. If the misérable inferences I have drawn from this small discovery are correct, the murder was committed by an occupant of my house—by a member of my family or by a person in my employ!""What could I say? There she sat, wrought by her own relation of the tragedy into a state of nervous excitement, appealing to my sympathy in the same sentence in which she demanded my candid decision.I had refrained from interruption or comment during the recital in order that I might get the story—possibly then for the first time put in connected form for expression in words—free from any bias or change of ideas which might be suggested by questions or prematurely expressed conclusions from me. The result was that I passively accepted Mrs. Clark Melville's own conclusions. I recognized the discovery she had made as of the greatest importance.I knew then as well as I know now the character of the advice she expected me to give. I could not give it. I must here record another weakness. My first thoughts were utterly selfish and utterly unworthy of a man in the position I occupied. They should have been of the troubled woman before me, who had risked her peace of mind on my decision and sat waiting for my reply. My only excuse is that I knew how implicitly Mrs. Melville trusted me. I understood that a word from me would set the matter at rest forever so far as she was concerned. I felt the whole weight of the tragedy on my humble shoulders. Like a coward I ignored her claims upon me as her pastor and as a gentleman, and refused to bear the burden.I took advantage of the loophole she had left in begging me not to give a hasty reply. I explained that it was a serious matter. I told her that I must have time to think.

I saw that she was disappointed.

EUGENE ESPERENCE OUDIN.

A great sensation was created in London by the appearance of a new operatic star who hails from the United States.
Mr. Oudin, who was born in New York in 1858, is the son of French parents, and received his musical training exclusively in his native city. A graduate of Columbia University, he was admitted to the bar in 1879, and practiced until 1885, occupying his leisure time with the study of music. He became a pupil of Signor Moderati, the celebrated teacher, and for six years was baritone soloist at St. Stephen's Roman Catholic Church. In 1886
he made his operatic debut as Valentin, in "Faust," with the provincial troupe of the American Opera Company, following this up with many other successes.
He then suog with the McCaull and other light opera companies, until the summer of last year when he was engaged by Mr.
D'Oyly Carte for the new opera of Sir Arthur Sullivan. The part of the Templar in this opera was written expressly for him. His impersonation of the character excited universal admiration and the London critics all unite in predicting him a splendid future. It is assumed that Mr. Oudin will return among us next year when he will undoubtedly receive a hearty welcome as due to our principal opera singer.

LITERARY NOTES.

"The Season" for July, just out, is one of the most delightful publications of its kind to be found. This number is unusually well filled with very appropriate costume for the Summer months. The colored plates show the very latest designs. On Plate 884 a very stylish and unique dress of cashmere and silk, and also one of muslin with ribbon trimming, will give great pleasure. Another pretty design in walking costumes, and also a morning robe, will be found on Plate 885.
Two very beautiful costumes of foulard, on Plate 886, will be largely reproduced by those who are lovers of the beautiful.
The designs are new and extremely becoming to all. The designs for embroidery, lace-work, applique, scorch-work, knitting, crochet and fancy articles are well represented. This publication should be in every home. Subscriptions:
Yearly, $3.50; Single Copies, 30 cents.
The International News Company, 83 & 85 Duane Street, New York.A double-page portrait, drawn from life, of Thomas A. Edison in his laboratory will be published in Harper's Weekly for June 10th. A sketch of the Yale and Princeton base-ball teams, with portraits, will be another interesting feature of the same number. The four-page Supplement will comprise an article on the New York Coffee Exchange, written by Dr. Richard Wheatley and amply illustrated.Harper & Brothers have ready for immediate publication, "Jinrikisha Days in Japan," by Eliza R. Scidmore; "A Group of Noble Dames," by Thomas Hardy, and "Unhappy Loves of Men of Genius," by Thomas Hiltcock. They will also issue a new popular edition of W. C. Prime's "I Go a-Fishing," and a library edition of H. Rider Haggard's "Eric Brighteyes."Elizabeth Robins Pennell, who during her residence in Great Britain has had ample opportunities for observing the social distinction peculiar to that country, will contribute an entertaining article on "The English Middle Class" to Harper's Bazar published June 12th.Howard Pyle's romance of the Middle Ages, entitled "Men of Iron," which has been one of the prominent and most attractive features of Harper's Young People for several weeks past, will be concluded in the number of that periodical for June 9th. A new serial, "Flying Hill Farm," by Sophie Swett, has been commenced.The Souvenir Publishing Company, of Lynn, have published a book of choice illustrations of Lynn, Swampscott, Marblehead and Nahant. The Souvenir contains 25 full-page, half-tone illustrations, reproductions of photographs taken by different members of the Lynn Camera Club. They are all gems of art, the best being selected from a large number of photographs. This souvenir should be in every home. It will make a beautiful present to send to your friends in distant homes. The price of this book is only 25 cents. It is for sale at the stores, also at the office of the Souvenir Pub. Co., 40 Broad Street, Lynn, Mass.The Magazine of American History closes its twenty-fifth volume with the June issue. The picture of Columbus with which it opens—a copy of the celebrated portrait in London from a miniature the Spanish Queen had painted for herself—is said to be one of the best and most authentic likenesses of the great navigator extant. The first article of the number, uniquely illustrated, touches a colossal theme; it is entitled, "Glimpses of the Railroad in History." The second paper, "The Slave Insurrection in Virginia in 1831, known as 'Old Nat's War,'" by Prof. Weeks, of Johns S. Hopkins University, presents some thrilling sketches of a terrible massacre but little known to the world. "British Merchants in 1775," by Walter R. Benjamin; and "Some Rare Old Books," by A. R. Fulton, are both readable and valuable contributions. "Distinguished Germans in American Affairs," by Dr. Oscar Braun, of Chicago, with graphic personal sketches of such men as Prof. Lieber, Dr. Carl Beck, Charles Follen, Governor Koerner, Frederick Muench, Carl Schurz, Frederick Kapp, Franz and George Schneider,

Over 5000 yards of ham-burg embroidery at the most ridiculous figures.

The how of it:

We found an importer who was ready to close out the residue of his season's stock. Most any price would do it, and we got an immense quantity of excellent goods at the price we wanted.

They are so cheap that when they came among our stock, some goods, even those bought before the tariff jump, looked high beside them. So we dropped those to the common level.

Here are the prices.

5c lot.
750 yards.
Values 10 to 20 cents

10c lot.

WIT AND HUMOR.

I thought the doctor told you you'd be out in a week? said a gentleman to a friend. He did, and so I was. Why, man, you're in bed yet. I know it; but was out $75 just the same.

Awkward enough—Brobson—You look all broken up, old man. What's the matter? Craik—I called on Miss Prun last night, and no sooner had I entered the parlor than her mother appeared and demanded to know my intentions. Brobson—That must have been rather embarrassing. Craik—Yes, but that was not the worst. Just as the old lady finished speaking Miss Prun shouted down the stairs:—Mamma, mamma, he isn't the one.

Jimson—"How has Heberlinge, the morocco maker, been getting along since he refused to accept returned skins? Have all the shoe manufacturers cut him? Jaggsen—No, nearly all of them decided to cut his stock.

Among recent advertisements are the following—Wanted, a steady young man to look after a horse of the Methodist persuasion. For sale, a piano by a lady about to cross the ocean in an oak case with carved legs. Wanted, women to sell on commission.

The following is found among recent advertisements:—Lost, a small lady's watch with a white face, also two ivory young ladies' work boxes, and a wallet belonging to a gentleman made of calf skin.

New York tax-payer traveling in Egypt—What earthly use were all these monstrous pyramids? Why did the Egyptian governments build them? That's what I can't understand. American statesman after reflection—Mebby there wor a divvy in 'em.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all other Throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellow-men. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper, W. A. NOYES, 820 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.

Still Alarm.

Hose 1 responded to a still alarm this forenoon. The cause of the alarm was a slight blaze on the roof of a building belonging to Mahew S. Claak, on Wallis street, set by a hot cinder from a neighboring chimney. The fire was extinguished by a hand hose.

And now Edward, put on your dressing gown and your slippers, sit down in this big armchair, and have a real comfortable smoke! What! You going to let me smoke in the parlor? I must run over to the club, and let the fellows know what an angel I have for a wife. Good bye, dearest!

Say, Johnson, have you heard that P—of New York is bound to have D. A. after his name? No; you mean P—, the advertising expert, don't you? Yes. What in the world does D. A. stand for? Doctor of Advertising. But he'll never be a success as doctor. Why not? Because he hasn't patients—(patience)—enough. Anybody that cannot understand this joke can obtain the correct analysis by sending address and two cent stamp to this office.

TRY DANA'S SARSAPARILLA!

May—Oh, I never was so mortified in my life! While Count Sphagetti was playing at the piano, that horrid imp of a brother of mine took a red smoking cap and passed it around among the guests! Belle—How dreadful! What did the Count do? May—Oh, he was so delightful about it. He took the cap laughed and said, Oh, youa mouk!

Minnie—How can you say that marriage is a failure when you have Ethel and me, papa? Papa—Ah, you see the trouble is that I don't know whether you two ought to figure among the assets or liabilities.

Now, cook, just you look here! Look at that piece of bacon I've given your mistress! It's the thickest and worst cut I ever saw in my life! and this piece I am going to take myself is only a little better.

This, ladies and gentlemen, is the celebrated trick mule, "Dot," said the clown as the beast was being led into the ring. After many years of effort I am able to say I can make him do anything that he wants to.

Mrs. B.—George, I am outraged. The moment you see that Miss Landon you seem to forget that you are a married man? Mr. B.—No, my dear; on the contrary; the very sight of her makes me think of that.

Algernon—Didn't I see an ambulance frunt of the club last night? Sydney—Yeth, it wath for Awithaw, poor boy; an idea stwuck him, and I geth he won't live.

May I hope? he asked after his seventeenth. Yes, she replied, you may. Because?—he said, pleadingly. Because, she responded, earnestly, this is free country.

Legislative Notes.

The governor has vetoed the bill providing for the establishment of a new insane hospital for incurables, at Medfield.

A new salary bill was introduced into the legislature, by Mr. Turner of Medfield, giving legislators $225 per month for the first four months, and $3 per day afterward, the bill to take effect next year.

The House order providing for a commission of investigation with a view to shortening legislative sessions, was rejected by the Senate Wednesday.

The House, on Wednesday, by a vote of 34 yeas to 61 nays, refused to accept the report of the finance committee that the resolve for collecting statistics regarding land held in Boston and vicinity for speculative purposes, and the condition of families resident in rented tenements; ought to be rejected.

The legislature was prorogued at 7.34 o'clock on Thursday.

Complete House Furnishing Emporium.

What is an Emporium? What goes into its make up? Why the term? The term at once suggests something large. A business conducted on an extensive scale. A mart of trade where everything of a special branch or several branches of a particular line are gathered together under one head. Such a combination properly managed affords at once immense advantages over single department stores. Advantages in the way of trading with one salesman. Buying your goods at one place. Quicker service. Contracting a single bill in place of three or four. And lower prices ALWAYS from the fact that the items of expense in running such a store are made smaller in a dozen ways. Such is our Emporium, and its popularity is best attested by our constantly increasing trade. Remember that we have four floors fully stocked with GOODS THAT SELL.

Our price has always been $5.00 without deviation; and for two years we have done no club work. We shall probably never sell clubs again, their day having gone by, but there are many who do not care during these dull times to pay so much as $5.00 a dozen for pictures, but who still want the best. As we wish to reach this class, but do not believe in changing two prices for the same thing, we have decided to adopt the medium price of $4.00 for a short time. The quality of work will be the same as heretofore.

FEMALE TROUBLES

Complicated with Liver and Kidney Diseases, Cured by Dana's Sarsaparilla after the most noted Physicians failed.

WASHINGTON MILLS, ME., Dec. 10, '87.

Gents:—For the last three years I have been suffering from a complication of Diseases, and have employed the most skillful physicians in the state, having been treated by local physicians at home and by physicians in Portland, Me. All my physicians told me my disease was so complicated, I could never get well. And certainly all my medical treatment gave me no relief. I had no appetite, bowels in a bad state, female trouble combined with liver and kidney trouble, so said my physicians. I grew so weak and reduced, I had done no work for one year, when Dr. Tribou, my physician, at the time, advised me to try DANA'S SARSAPARILLA. Soon after trying it I began to feel a wonderful change. I commenced to gain in flesh and strength, and after taking three bottles I felt like another person. I now feel well and strong and am able to do all the work in a family of eight. I feel that I owe my health entirely to the wonderful curative power of DANA'S SARSAPARILLA. I prize this valuable remedy highly, and shall earnestly recommend it to all the afflicted.

I cannot say too much in its praise for all it has done for me.

Very truly yours,

Mrs. F. A. WENTWORTH.

Over three years have elapsed since the above letter was written. Mrs. Wentworth takes three or four bottles of DANA'S SARSAPARILLA each year to help Nature repel any attack upon the diaphragm of Health, and as a result, enjoys heaven's richest blessing—Good Health.

"Go thou and do likewise." Suffering one, remember we GUARANTEE A CURE. Will you try it?

Fire at the O'Shea Tannery.

An alarm from box 23 was pulled in at 12.37 o'clock Sunday morning, quickly followed by a second alarm from the same box, in consequence of a fire in the building in rear of the currying shop occupied by Geo. J. Winchester & Son. The building is owned by the heirs of Timothy O'Shea and leased by Messrs. Winchester and the larger portion is sub-let by them to John O'Callahan of Salem, for finishing flesh splits who was the only occupant. Within a few inches of the burned building is the barn of J. N. Burbeck, which is filled with hay. The entire surrounding of the building was of a highly inflammable nature and the scene of the blaze was very threatening. But with consummate energy and perseverance, the firemen attacked the fire fiend and battled so bravely, that in spite of the surroundings, the blaze was confined to the building in which the fire originated. Some of the adjacent buildings were scorched more or less, but no damage was done. The cause of the fire is unknown. No boiler is located in the building and no fire used there in any manner. It is generally believed to have been set. Twenty minutes before the alarm was rung in by John Conours, the watchman passed through the building and at that time no trace of fire was discovered.

Messrs. Winchester lost about $1000 on baled hides that were in an adjacent store house and were scorched more or less. The portion of the burned building reserved by the firm was unoccupied, so this will be the extent of their loss on stock. Mr. O'Callahan had in his shop 3000 sides of finished grain leather and about 20 tons of flesh spirits, the latter belonging to Badger Bros. and G. C. Tyler & Co., of Boston. He states that the loss on splits will be $13,000 and on grain leather some $5000 more. The insurance on his interest in the stock is $5000 and the balance is carried by the owners. On the machinery he estimates his loss at $2600 and the insurance is $2000. The O'Shea estate carried an insurance of $975 on the machinery. The whitening machine in Mr. O'Callahan's shop was owned by W. C. Quirin & Co., of Boston. The building and all its contents were nearly a total loss, and the rear end of the large currying factory belonging to the O'Shea estate was damaged slightly. Much credit is due to Chief Littlefield and his assistants for the manner in which the fire was handled. The insurance was carried by O. B. Chadwick & Co.

John P. Fernald will edit the White Mountain Echo this season.

A free concert will be given in Peabody Institute, Wednesday evening, by the Damon Family assisted by Fred Blake baritone, and Miss Mamie Trask elocutionist, under the auspices of the Progressive Benefit Order. The Lodge started with a membership of 21 members a year ago, and have increased to over 100 at the present time. The cost to secure $100, has been just $30. Tickets can be had for the concert of Harry G. Robbins or C. K. Hutchinson.

A horse belonging to Aaron F. Clark was standing on Main street in charge of Mr. Clark's grandson, Harry, Monday afternoon. The lad stood on the ground beside the animals head, when an electric car belonging to the Naumkeag company came along and frightened the horse so that he ran down Main and Wallis streets. The top buggy to which he was attached was demolished. The same evening a horse driven by A. O. Elwell of Danvers became frightened from a similar cause and ran away, striking a tree on Main street near Holten, throwing himself down. The occupants, two men, jumped out and averted a serious accident. One wheel was despoiled of its spokes and it was found necessary to put the team up at Smiley's stable.

Messrs. Maynard and Coffin gave a pleasing concert in the Institute Tuesday evening.

A party was compelled to take the eleven o'clock car to Danvers Thursday night to obtain hotel accommodations, because there was none in town.

The concert under the auspices of St. John's choir, Tuesday evening was a success in every sense of the word. Everybody was well pleased with the programme.

Jordan Lodge, F. & A. M. worked the third degree on four candidates on Wednesday evening. Several visitors were present from other lodges. Communication was served in Thomas' Hall. The lodge adjourned until September.

The usual rain came to the Old Ladies' Home society's lawn party on Wednesday and put a damper on the festivities and the attendance. The orchestra furnished music indoors and the prompter called off from one of the open windows. About 125 persons were present.

The Regulars had a rough time on their yachting trip the 17th. They went down as far as Gloucester, to their old fishing ground, but the sea was running so high that it was impossible to fish although the bait was plentiful. The seacock party returned to Salem at 2 P. M.

Frederick Freund, was in the yard connected with the tanning establishment of George J. Winchester & Son, on Wednesday morning, looking for work, when a ladder accidentally fell from a building and struck him on the head inflicting a severe scalp wound of which he died on Thursday.

Masconomo tribe of the Improved Order of Red Men elected the following officers Thursday evening: Prophet, John F. Pickering; sacheem, Edwin E. Buxwell; senior sagamore, B. B. Humphrey; junior sagamore, George H. Low; representatives to the great council, C. C. Hills, J. F. Pickering; alternates, C. J. Larrabee, George O. Nimblett.

A cold, wet and disagreeable day it was Thursday, and doubtless many were thereby deterred from going to the polls to drop a ballot upon the electric lighting question. The polls opened at 3 o'clock and kept open until 8.30 o'clock. A few ballot distributors were put on as soon as the polls opened, to work in the interest of the Electric Light Committee, but voting was slow and little interest was manifested in the result of the contest. The total vote was 738; 650 in the affirmative and 78 in the negative. If the meeting two months hence confirms the action of Thursday, by appropriating the necessary funds, work will doubtless commence at once, and the town will be lighted by electricity before spring.

William Peace was arraigned before Judge Merrill on Thursday morning charged with obtaining money under false pretenses, on a lot of skins stolen from W. P. Clark, last January. He pleaded guilty and was bound over to the October sitting of the Grand Jury. The skins were recovered by Mr. Clark from a pawnbroker, whose only source of satisfaction is the above proceeding. Peace was arrested in Boston.

The Fireman's Relief Association has elected the following officers: President, D. S. Littlefield; vice president, C. G. Folsom; secretary, J. F. Moreland; treasurer, S. S. Littlefield; directors, C. H. Hooper, W. H. Joll, G. H. Carr, F. B. Thomas, G. O. Pierce, F. E. Berry, H. G. Upton, E. W. Larrabee, W. W. Reed. The treasurer reported a balance on hand amounting to $3053.30, showing a gain during the year of $115.58. A check was received from John C. Burbeck to swell the fund.

The entire capital stock of the Franklin electric company, which has done business in Craig's mills for the past year and a half, has been sold to the principal stockholders of the Direct Electric company and the works will be removed to Bridgeport, Conn., about the first of July. The sale was made on private terms, but it is understood that a good price was realized by the original holders of the Franklin stock. The purchasers are interested in several improved electrical appliances among which is a storage battery which promises to revolutionize the electrical science. The removal will be quite a loss to the town. About 200 men have been employed at the works until recently, and much of the time the works were run day and night. The factory was first fitted up by the Robinson-Foster company which had a short career and acquired an unsavory reputation, and was taken by the mortgagee of that company, O. W. Norcross of Worcester, under foreclosure, who organized the Franklin company, under whose management the motors and dynamos were perfected and made practical, and quite a business was being worked up. The Essex Electric cars are equipped with the motors and dynamos of the Franklin Electric company and are giving excellent satisfaction.

TALKING WITH MOLTKE.

EX-PRESIDENT ANDREW D. WHITE'S
DESCRIPTION OF HIM.

He Met Him at a Reception in Berlin on the Occasion of the Golden Wedding of the Old Emperor William—Baron Nothern's Felicitous Introduction.

By many people ex-President Andrew D. White, of Cornell University, ex-minister to Germany, is regarded as one of the best authorities on German affairs in the United States. Years of patient study and observation give great weight to his views on the new Germany of today.

Regarding the great German soldier and strategist the ex-president says:

I first saw Von Moltke just after my arrival at Berlin at the festivals attendant upon the golden wedding of the old Emperor William. The first of these was a great theatrical representation at the Royal Opera house, at which the emperor and empress and very nearly all the crowned heads of Germany, with representatives of the various royalties of Europe, were present, and besides these, attracting even more attention, Bismarck, Von Moltke and the leading generals of the Franco-Prussian war.

The appearance of these people comes back before me very vividly, but no one is more distinctly present to me than Von Moltke. He seemed absolutely different from every other personage in that great hall. He was a tall, spare man, his face a mixture of determination and kindness, his whole appearance, as more than one person has said at various times, being that of an intelligent, kindly college professor or schoolmaster.

There was something singularly gentle about his whole bearing, yet it was impressive. He sat very quietly, exchanging some little conversation with his next neighbor, Manteuffel, the dreaded viceroy of Alsace-Lorraine. The contrast between the two was very marked—Manteuffel, apparently, all keenness and severity, Von Moltke firm, but gentle.

INTRODUCED BY BARON NOTHERN.

When I next saw him it was at an evening gathering where there was not a large number present, and where I had the opportunity to converse with him. I was introduced to him by the dean of the diplomatic corps, Baron Nothern, sometimes called "the father of constitutional liberty in continental Europe," a man of very wide political knowledge and who more than once, as I sat at the table, gave me accounts of his conversations with Talleyrand and other men of the first Napoleonic period.

Baron Nothern in presenting me to Von Moltke took advantage of a little sketch published in one of the German newspapers, and said: "Sir Field Marshal, I wish to make you acquainted with a gentleman who was born in Homer, who lives in Syracuse and who has aided in founding a university at Ithaca."

At this Von Moltke laughed pleasantly, and evidently did not understand the allusion, whereupon I told him that in the earlier days of this country we had a way of naming our townships and villages after noted heroes of antiquity, but at present we did better, naming them after the great men of these times, and telling him that no doubt in the newer states he would find his own name and that of Bismarck attached to some of our younger towns. He seemed interested in this and talked on very pleasantly.

I look back to that evening as one of the most interesting during my stay in Germany.

MOLTKE IN PARLIAMENT.

At various other times I met Von Moltke, but do not recall anything of especial interest. No man was more free from the slightest tincture of vanity. As he walked through the streets and in the parks, going to and from the office of the general staff, he was undistinguishable save by his tall, scholarly form from the crowd of military men about him. He evidently wore just as little in the shape of orders and decorations as was permissible.

At court he was expected, of course, to appear in more splendid attire, but even then there was always the same quiet modesty and simplicity. He seemed to me in some respects "the noblest Roman of them all."

But perhaps his most impressive appearance was as a member of the imperial parliament. From time to time as I happened in to hear the discussions I saw him in his seat, quiet, imperturbable; but on two occasions I heard him speak, and on each of these his subject was the necessity of larger votes of money and men to maintain the military supremacy of Germany.

Nothing could be better in their way than these speeches of his. He looked and spoke as I could imagine Julius Caesar looked and spoke in the Roman senate. Nothing could be more simple and yet nothing more effective. He was listened to by men of all parties with the utmost respect.

He seemed to stand in a sense aloof from all parties, and to be guided simply and solely by what he considered the best interests of the German empire. On hearing him speak one could not resist this conclusion, and as his manner was simple, voice good and statements very clear, direct and strong, but without the slightest tendency to exaggeration, his words carried great weight.

I remember hearing him say in substance in one of these speeches that Germany must be prepared for any emergency, and must maintain the very highest condition of military efficiency possible for at least fifty years. And I remember, too, with what a sort of solemnizing effect these words, quietly uttered, but evidently the result of conviction based on knowledge, had upon the audience. They seemed to carry a sense of responsibility to the heart of every person present.—New York Herald.

UNFORTUNATE.

"The effect of Rev. Mr. Harkin's sermon on the terrors of hades was lost."
"How so?"
"The church was as cold as a barn, and the prospect he held out was rather agreeable."—Epoch.

Felt That He Had Been Cheated.

A young clam farmer from Canarsie, accompanied by his 250 pound wife, created much amusement on a bridge train coming to Brooklyn Sunday a little before midnight. The cars were as well filled as is usual at that hour. The rustics drew attention to themselves by the loud tones of their conversation. "Now, baby," the man was saying, "you know I ain't a bit stingy and I wouldn't care for the money at all, but I don't want any catfish of a toll grabber to do the dead swindle on me—Sunday nights, anyway."

"Oh, never mind, Reubea," said "baby" consolingly.

"Well, now, baby, you can see for yourself. There's eighty-four cents out of a dollar. Do you see that? That shark has kept back ten cents on me. It ain't the money I care for, baby. Here, do you want it?"

"No; I don't want it. I wish you would keep quiet."

"Well, if you don't want it, here goes," scattering the change on the floor.

"Baby" maintained a stolid silence, gazing ruefully at the coin on the floor. Finally Reuben realized that he had been guilty of criminal waste, and he said: "Well, if you don't want it, I'll take it," and he began clumsily to pick the money out of the spaces in the matting. At this point a general laugh arose from the other passengers. When the Brooklyn station was reached the farmer was still mourning his missing dime, and when I left his ponderous wife was struggling to prevent him from taking the next train to New York to get hunk with "that pirate" at the toll box.—Brooklyn Eagle.

He Didn't Strike.

A hurrying crowd was pushing its way down the broad steps of the elevated platform at the city hall elevated station Wednesday afternoon. A handsomely dressed woman, accompanied by a tall man of the sporting class, moved leisurely along, trailing a foot and a half of her skirts behind her. A big, clumsy boy in his eagerness to reach the street planted a heavy foot on the trailing skirt, almost throwing the woman over backward. Naturally she was very angry and speedily found some very harsh words to bestow on the boy. Her male companion was angry, too, and at the foot of the stairs he collared the lad and raised his cane to administer chastisement. But the blow did not fall. A burly workman caught the arm to which the cane was attached and half a dozen determined voices exclaimed, "Don't hit that boy!"

The tall sporting man braced himself for a fight, when a mild looking young gentleman looked him fixedly in the eye and said: "See here, my friend, you had better calm down right away. You have got the unpopular end of this dispute. If you have ever walked down stairs behind a woman who lets her skirts drag, you ought to understand what the public sentiment is on that subject." The sporting man made no reply. He let go of the boy and walked rapidly away, followed by a very indignant and talkative woman.—New York Times.

A Cause of Depression.

There is another and equally important cause of mental depression and physical disorganization as is that of overeating, and lack of sufficient exercise. This is the constant application to occupation which is in vogue in this country. Men and women alike, since women are formidable competitors of men in professional pursuits, have a practice of going on in the same treadmill manner, year after year, without any lapse for rest. We live in this country to too high a pressure, in a business sense. Men engage of course in business, more actively and in greater numbers than women, yet being brought into so close contact with the former, women naturally absorb not only personal interest, but are often plunged into its vortex, and become as bound up by its demands as the men themselves.

It is not unusual, in fact, for women to assume and carry out the management of the counting room, office and store as well as the household. The strain of these demands upon the system is naturally very great under the most favorable conditions, when the body is nurtured and rested in a reasonable manner.—Jennett-Miller Magazine.

Men Who Eat Pie.

A truly charming gentleman is Mr. Edmund Russell, apostle and expounder of the Delsartean faith. We take back all the uncivil and cruel things we have uttered against old Delsarte and his creed, for we have seen Mr. Russell eat pumpkin pie at Rector's restaurant late of nights. In the whole wide range of philosophy there is none other that appeals more directly or more potently to our sympathies than does that philosophy which justifies by practice the eating of pumpkin pie.

Mr. Whittier, the Amesbury poet, is as famous a punisher of pie as Ralph Waldo Emerson was, and that is saying much, for Emerson was mighty in the pursuit, comprehension, mastication, digestion and assimilation of that cheering viand. Apple pie, however, and not pumpkin, was Emerson's favorite diet, and is Whittier's.—Engene Field in Chicago News.

Blood Oranges Cannot Be Stained.

"Blood oranges" have been investigated by order of the health officer of Washington. The story that they are "fixed" with a syringe and a little aniline dye has been going the rounds of the newspapers. It was seen by Dr. Townsend, and as the supply of "blood oranges" in the Washington market seemed to be abundant, he directed an inquiry with a view of condemning the fruit if it had been tampered with. The chemist to whom the matter was referred says in his report: "The oranges are naturally stained, no artificial coloring of any kind having been used. The small spot on the side is a fungus spot and not a puncture. It is impossible to stain an orange by injecting any artificial staining fluid into the fruit either before or after plucking from the tree."—Washington Letter.

LOVE'S EQUATION.

Scant beauty hers whose beauties tongue can name
And cold his love whose lips can word its flame—
Sweetheart, thy charms shall never measured be.
Save by that love to which they temper me.
And all the passion reigning o'er my heart
I know but as thy beauty's counterpart.
—Duffield Osborne in Harper's Bazar.

To Circumvent Moths.

This is the season when our innocent looking little enemies, the moths, do their destructive work—at least this is the beginning. The small, cream colored moths flying around should be destroyed. They do the mischief, depositing numbers of eggs in woolen and fur garments, carpets, curtains, upholstered furniture—nothing escapes them, and before we know the danger frequently our most cherished garment is riddled by these little pests.

The great trouble comes from not putting things away clean and free from the moth eggs. Articles slightly soiled are certain to attract moths. It is therefore well to wash everything that can be washed, like flannels and stockings. Coats, cloaks, furs and similar things should be cleaned and beaten and aired several times before finally putting away for the summer. When carpets are kept down during the summer, tar paper should be laid under the edges and the room swept carefully with a stiff broom once in a while, particularly the edges of the carpet, corners and seams.—Chicago News.

Numerals That Inform.

Perhaps the most ingenious use of numbers to convey information is due to Mr. Melvil Dewey, state librarian of New York. He has divided literature into ten great departments and given each of them one of the ten numerals. History, for instance, is represented by nine, and every historical work has nine for the first figure in its number.

The second figure denotes the subdivision of history to which a work belongs; seven as a second figure is marked upon volumes treating of North America. Another and similar step gives three as a third figure for histories of the United States.

The works of Mr. George Bancroft, as Mr. Dewey would classify them, would bear the numerals 973. After that number would come the figures pointing out the shelf on which the volumes were to be found. To avoid disarrangement, it is usual in large libraries to leave ample room for new additions in each department; the shelves are not permitted to become quite full.—Youth's Companion.

Pronouncing Modern Greek.

As many may know the pronunciation of the modern Greek language is by accent, and not by quantity, as in England and America has been the custom with ancient Greek ever since the time of Erasmus, the Dutch precursor of Martin Luther. Of late years the American scholars have been pronouncing more and more by accent, and the custom has even invaded England and Germany. Now it seems that the German scholars in Athens, noticing the interest taken by the young emperor in matters of education, have petitioned him to make the pronunciation in German schools conform to the usage of the modern Greeks. Were this done it would be much easier for a German in Greece to understand the spoken language, which he can read easily in the newspapers, but cannot comprehend when he hears it at his hotel.—Boston Advertiser.

Remembering His Enemies.

Mr. Edward Wortley Montagu, son of the famous Lady Mary, endeavored to be very sarcastic in his last will and testament. After some insignificant bequest "To my noble and worthy relation the earl of —," he adds: "I do not give his lordship any further part of my property, because the best part of that he has contrived to take already. Item—To Sir Francis — I give one word of mine, because he never had the good fortune to keep his own. Item—To Lord M. I give nothing, because I know he will bestow that on the poor. Item—To Sir Robert W. I leave my political opinions, never doubting he can well turn them into cash who has always found such an excellent market for his own."—All the Year Round.

Ears.

If your ears burn, people say some one is talking about you. This is very old, for Pliny says, "When our ears do glow and ring, some do talk of us in our absence."

Shakespeare, in "Much Ado About Nothing," makes Beatrice say to Ursula and Hero, who had been talking of her, "What fire is in mine ears?"
Sir Thomas Browne ascribes this conceit to the superstition of guardian angels, who touch the right ear if the talk is favorable, and the left if otherwise. This is done to cheer or warn.

One ear tingles, some there be
That are snarling now at me.
—Detroit Free Press.

Hope for Him.

"I don't know that you will be able to do much with him," said a father to a principal of a school, to whom he had brought his son as a pupil, "he is so full of mischief."

"Does he tell the truth?" asked the principal. "Can I always depend upon his word?"
"Oh, yes," said the father, "he is honest; he will tell the truth, even when it is against himself; you may depend upon that."

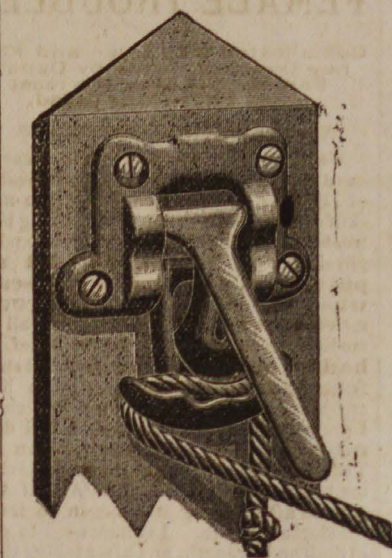

"Then we can manage him," said the principal. "He will make a reliable, manly man."—Christian Leader.

Railway Clerks with Long Days.

The hours on duty of a booking clerk are usually ten a day; but they are at very irregular times. This is on account of trains starting to run as early as 5 a. m. and continuing till midnight. There must be always some one to book the passengers; and as there are nineteen hours to cover, and in many cases only two clerks, they have to work as best they can that both may have time for their meals.—Chambers' Journal.

A RECENT article in the Springfield Republican headed "Hollowness of English Monarchy" reviews the life of Edward Albert, Prince of Wales, and after alluding pointedly to his connection with the late scandal of which it intimates that Sir William Gordon Canning was made a "scape goat" to clear the Prince's skirts, contrasts the moral character with that of Parnell and proceeds to say:

"It is their future king that the English people contemplate, and not a hounded friend of Ireland. They have said that a certain transgression of the moral code debars a man from a position of political leadership, and yet here is one by his own testimony guilty of another crime against the social order whom they propose in a very short time to crown as their honored and venerated monarch. The grim logic of the situation is that the institution of royalty as a whole is no longer worthy of a people so intelligent, so moral and so powerful. For the Prince of Wales is the incarnation of a system, of a tradition. He is no better than it is possible for him to be under the conditions to which he and his peculiar class of fellow mortals are condemned to live and grow. It is very foolish for the English people to protest against his habits and his personality or to ask him to be a nobler man. Their prince is what they have made it easy for him to be. The only remedy is to abolish him and all that he represents. As it appears to-day before the intelligence of the English race throughout the world English royalty is a hollow mockery."

His Royal Highness is perhaps no more licentious than many of his predecessors. The history of monarchical governments presents frequent instances of a similar character. But the great majority of the common and middle classes are already restive under the monstrous burdens that are imposed to maintain the splendid establishment of royalty, and it will take but a slight breeze of popular disfavor, to overthrow the established order and deprive the royal voluptuary of his royal inheritance. Such episodes as the recent scandal will have much more weight than formerly in fomenting discontent.

THE EDITORIAL column of the Marblehead Messenger of last week contained an elaborate and costly plan for doing away with Salem tunnel. The scheme comprehends the discontinuance of the Swampscott and Marblehead branches, and making Marblehead a main line town, by double tracking the branch from Lynn to Marblehead and crossing Salem harbor upon a viaduct. The editor wisely qualifies his article by reminding the readers that he is cognizant of the difficulties of harbor laws, engineering the jealousy of other towns.

We would suggest a cheaper and more practical means, a plan that is free from all the difficulties involved in that suggested by the Messenger—make the Wakefield branch a part of the main line and remove the stone depot at Salem to the site of the Salem and Lawrence depot. Or by running a line from Lynn through South Peabody and thence tapping the Wakefield branch in the neighborhood of W. H. Brown's glue works thence continuing to Salem and points east, at the inconveniences of the tunnel could be removed. The tunnel need not then be used at all unless it should be thought best to run the Marblehead trains through it to afford better connections.

Even to double track the Wakefield branch and despatch the Pullmans and Eastern freight over that branch would reduce the liability to accidents and make the tunnel less objectionable, as for ordinary service the covering over the tunnel could be extended southerly without detriment. Such can hardly be done now, without increasing the number of steps on either side, which would be ungainly in appearance and a serious obstruction to travel.

We feel convinced that with the rapid population of cities and towns on that part of the road we have mentioned, that at no very distant time it will be found expedient to make the Wakefield branch, or a part of it, the main line of the Eastern Division.

MUCH DISSATISFACTION has been expressed the past week in consequence of the closing of the street railway station kept by George Stevens, last Sabbath. Mr. Stevens says he received notice from the Law and Order League with reference to closing on the Lord's Day, and not wishing to violate the law and incur the penalty, he closed, and will continue to close until he is satisfied he can open and accommodate the public without laying himself liable to prosecution. Of course as a common victualler he has a legal right to keep open, but the ordinary business of victualling is not sufficient to pay for keeping open all through the day and evening. It is the sale of cigars and soda upon which such places usually rely. And those commodities are demanded by the public.

Peabody is a law abiding place, but we doubt if more than a very small minority would vote to close all of the places of business in town on Sunday, if the question were submitted for ballot, and above all, to close a railway station.

The public want to be accommodated and it is of no use to deny them reasonable privileges. It is far better to grant what few demands are made than by a rigid adherence to the "blue laws" to arouse popular indignation and thus endanger the sanctity of the Sabbath.

LAST YEAR in the city of Lynn, three hundred and sixty-five buildings were erected—one for each day on the calendar. While the fire of November, 1889, may have had some influence upon this extraordinary enterprise, we presume that the low tax rate was a more potent factor. The rate was but twelve dollars. Such an amount of building in a single year is a matter that even the rapidly growing cities of the West would point to with pride. We recall an instance less than five years ago when a western city of more than double the population of Lynn, was congratulating itself on precisely the same record.

Will the time ever come when Peabody can boast of the like? Not, we fear, until more economy is practised and her tax rate is lowered to the proper level.

One of the prettiest home weddings took place at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Warren French, 203 Lexington street, East Boston, Thursday afternoon, last week, when their eldest daughter, Miss Hattie S., was united in marriage to Mr. Joseph S. Merrill, a well-known business man of Amesbury. Only the immediate family and relatives were present. At 2.30 Mr. and Mrs. French and the ushers, Mr. George L. R. French, a brother of the bride, and Mr. Fred Garson, entered the parlors, followed by the bridal party, to the strains of Lohengrin, played by Mr. Marvin T. Goodwin. The bridesmaids were the Misses Nellie and Louise B. French, sisters of the bride, and the best man was Mr. William Merrill, a brother of the groom. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. J. W. Hamilton, after which a wedding dinner was partaken of. The parlors were very prettily decorated with ferns and daisies and the bridal pair stood upon a mat of daisies and beneath a floral bell. The bride looked lovely in white cashmere en train. The presents were numerous and beautiful. At 6 p. m. Mr. and Mrs. Merrill left for Amesbury, amid a shower of rice and well wishes, where they will reside.

Col. and Mrs. J. Frank Dalton celebrated their 25th anniversary of their marriage, at their residence, 111 Lafayette St., Salem, on Monday evening. A large circle of friends were present and although it had been announced that presents were not expected, it required the entire area of a large table to support the substantial tokens with which the guests laden. One of the gifts that was prized highly was a spoon that had been in the Felt family for more than a hundred years.

A building standing at West Gloucester, occupied by Kilby W. Elwell for the manufacture and storage of fireworks and the materials for their manufacture, was completely destroyed about 4 o'clock Tuesday morning by an explosion, caused no doubt by spontaneous combustion. The explosion was terrific and heard for more than a mile away. Several people who heard the explosion and others who were notified of the catastrophe hastened to the scene and succeeded in extinguishing the fire before it communicated with the other buildings. The structure was a total loss without any insurance.

The Sea Serpent Off the Maine Shore Ready for Business.

The season in Maine may now be considered as formally opened, says the Lewiston Journal. That distinguished visitor, the sea serpent, has arrived. He was seen by Captain Meader of the schooner Cora E. Meader, who promptly announced his appearance to the Boothbay Register. When seen, his ophidian majesty was about five miles southeast of Monhegan and was busily engaged in collecting porpoises for breakfast. It was when jumping after one of these fishes that the serpent was seen. Captain Meader says he had as perfect a head as any fish he ever saw. It was about as large as a water bucket and he stuck his neck out of water about four feet. The wake of his body seemed to be about 40 or 50 feet long. All the crew looked at the body and agreed that he was a wicked long reptile.—Newburyport News

The importance of purifying the blood cannot be overestimated, for without pure blood you cannot enjoy good health. At this season nearly every one needs a good medicine to purify, vitalize, and enrich the blood, and Hood's Sarsaparilla is worthy your confidence. It is peculiar in that it strengthens and builds up the system, creates an appetite, and tones the digestion, while it eradicates disease. Give it a trial. Hood's Sarsaparilla is sold by all druggists. Prepared by C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

LOCAL LINES.

James Crimmins who resided at 4 Grove street Salem, went into Danvers river in rear of the Gardner mansion on Margin street last Sunday afternoon about half past three o'clock with a friend. Quite a number were in the water and about 6 o'clock Crimmins and his friend who were good swimmers undressed and plunged into the river. They had not been in the water long when Crimmins was seized with cramps or some heart trouble, to which he had been subject, and sank. All present hastened to his assistance and three dories filled with men pulled lustily toward the spot where he sank but the body was not recovered until it had been in the water about half an hour, being found in a standing position in about 8 feet of water by Wm. Barrett. Medical examiner Dr. Geo. S. Osborne of this town was sent for but being absent Dr. C. A. Carleton of Salem was called to view the remains. The deceased was about 33 years of age and been employed by A. B. Clerk.

The sewing exhibition of the school children to be held at the town hall on next Monday afternoon promises to be of unusual interest. The sewing classes from the Center, Wallis, Endicott and Bowditch schools will be present and will be busy with their needles for the first hour. The exhibition will begin at 2 o'clock and close about 4. The scholars will come to the hall under charge of their several teachers. The large rooms occupied by the Assessors' will be connected by throwing open the folding doors and the work of the children will be arranged on tables in the best manner for display. A pretty programme which includes singing and character recitations has been arranged which will prove an interesting feature of the entertainment. Several prizes to be given for special excellence in darning, patching, outline and fancy stitching will be awarded. It will be well to bear in mind that this feature of our school work is supported by private contributions, and the ladies whose active generosity and kindly interest have made it a recognized success, cordially invite the parents and the public to be present at the exhibition.

Don't waste your money. Economy and strength are peculiar features of Hood's Sarsaparilla, which is the only medicine of which can truly be said, 100 doses one dollar. Sold by all druggists.

NOTED AND QUOTED.

The Iowa prohibitionists would have the United States recognize the "holy scriptures as the basis of all civil law."

The report that Mrs. Sheridan was about to marry Mr. Lemon of Washington, a wealthy pension agent, is denied. Mrs. Sheridan is not particularly in need of Lemon aid.—Lowell Courier.

The senior class of Wellsley College to the number of 95, dined at Woodland Park, Auburndale, Wednesday evening.

During last month the losses by fire in the United States aggregated $22,085,740, which was more than double the losses of the corresponding month in 1890. This increase was caused largely by forest fires, the losses from this cause amounting to $7,275,000, altogether, in New Jersey, Michigan, Pennsylvania, Wisconsin and Minnesota. It was much dryer than usual during the whole month, which added much to the extent and fury of the flames.

That Mr. Flower will be the democratic nominee for governor of New York seems to be pretty well assured. It is the barrel that wins. It is money that makes the convention go.

The Essex Club again elected Geo. B. Loring of Salem, President. It is no wonder the club has no standing with the other clubs of the state and no influence in its own party. Wonder what the doctor is anxious for now that he will accept the position as a stepping stone.—Beverly Times.

The Boston Herald, in speaking of the leaders of the legislature, says: "Mr. Sohler, of Beverly, for advocating, but unsuccessfully, the constitutional amendments as to division of towns, and for biennial elections. He was one of the republican leaders on the floor, whose words were always closely listened to, and who was more than successful in carrying the measures he supported." It also speaks of Hon. Wm. Stopford, as one who has made a record as an active member in legislative business.

Charlestown celebrated the battle of Bunker Hill right royally on Wednesday. Festivities commenced on midnight on Tuesday and they were kept up till the 17th closed.

SIR JOHN THOMPSON.

Now that Sir John Macdonald has passed away, the question is widely being discussed as to who shall be his successor, and the future of the vast Dominion of Canada is looked upon with great anxiety. It is not the tariff question alone which is causing the eager inquiry for a competent leader. Racial and religious prejudices have to be contended with. The French, whose ambition and wealth are equally strong, are laboring under a restraint, and are concocting schemes for the establishment of another French Republic on this side of the Atlantic, and it was but a year ago that, in the debate concerning the Jesuit Estate bill, the fury of religious passion, which is extant in Canada, blazed forth. The Catholic party are fully aware of their power and demand the rights they believe themselves entitled to. They make their influence particularly felt in the discussion of the succession to Sir John. Their choice is Sir John Thompson, who is at present holding the office of Minister of Justice and who is a Catholic. On the other hand, the Protestants would like to see Sir Chas. Tupper their Premier. Thus at the very outset, a bitter contest is to be expected. The French favor Thompson, while the inhabitants of Ontario are strong in their demands for Tupper. It is doubtful whether Thompson, as Premier, would be able to hold the antagonistic elements in control. His mind is said to find little pleasure in politics. His life's great desire has been to achieve prominence as a lawyer, and he was forced into politics only by his friends. Macdonald, recognizing Thompson's ability, called him to a place in his cabinet. It is believed that he is not even anxious for the Premiership, and would rather resume his law practice. Though fitted in every possible way for statesmanship, there is a straightforwardness about him that would seem to some to render him in some degree unfit as a diplomatist. Thompson is a Nova Scotian by birth and though brought up in the Protestant faith, afterward became a Catholic. The near future will undoubtedly bring about great changes in Canadian affairs, whatever party may gain the ascendancy.

New England's Seashore.

By sending two cents in stamps to the passenger department of the Boston & Maine R. R., anyone may obtain a portfolio of views, called "New England's Seashore," that will, while a source of information, prove also a charming addition to one's table. The Boston & Maine road are this year issuing some very beautifully executed books of travel, and the one in question takes up a region so prolific in interest that some description of it may suggest what is accomplished in the others. The views embraced within the volume show scenery along the New England coast from Boston to Passamaquoddy, which are charmingly done in monotypes of colors chosen with excellent regard to the attractively picturesque. Some of the effects are remarkably fine. The blending of coloring in the views, verses and ornamentation is very effective.

The views are very clearly executed, and the verses from J. G. Whittier, H. W. Longfellow, J. T. Trowbridge, Matthew Arnold, Elizabeth F. Merrill, E. A. Allen, E. C. Steadman and Lucy Larcom which accompany them are most appropriately descriptive, and add an element of poetic thought that but accentuates the manifold beauties of the places themselves. Small scenes suggestive of the recreations peculiar to the various resorts are interwoven in a way that gives zest to the attractiveness of the volume, their quiet realism acting as potent incentive to active desire on the part of any would-be excursionist or traveller who looks upon them. M. F. Sweetser writes an introduction, most happily and comprehensively, though concisely, contributing certain desirable essentials of information regarding all the notable places of attraction along the coast. The cover is a scene by Copeland, beautifully embossed in colors. The size of this volume is 11 1-4 x 9 1-4; and it is exceedingly dainty in its whole conception and accomplishment. It is an edition de luxe worth having.—Boston Sunday Times.

Complete House Furnishing Emporium.

What is an Emporium? What goes into its make up? Why the term? The term at once suggests something large. A business conducted on an extensive scale. A mart of trade where everything of a special branch or several branches of a particular line are gathered together under one head. Such a combination properly managed affords at once immense advantages over single department stores. Advantages in the way of trading with one salesman. Buying your goods at one place. Quicker service. Contracting a single bill in place of three or four. And lower prices ALWAYS from the fact that the items of expense in running such a store are made smaller in a dozen ways. Such is our Emporium, and its popularity is best attested by our constantly increasing trade. Remember that we have four floors fully stocked with GOODS THAT SELL.

We have decided to make for a short time—until further notice—

CABINETS $4.00 PER DOZ.

Our price has always been $5.00 without deviation; and for two years we have done no club work. We shall probably never sell clubs again, their day having gone by, but there are many who do not care during these dull times to pay so much as $5.00 a dozen for pictures, but who still want the best. As we wish to reach this class, but do not believe in charging two prices for the same thing, we have decided to adopt the medium price of $4.00 for a short time. The quality of work will be the same as heretofore.

PARTIAL PARALYSIS AND THE Demon Neuralgia VANQUISHED!

PORTLAND, ME., Nov. 1, 1890.

D. S. Co.:—
Messrs.—For some six years I have been afflicted with spells of numbness, seizing me in my limbs, and at times affecting my power of articulation so I could not speak. This would be followed by hot-flashes, leaving me very weak and nervous. Neuralgia also claimed me for its victim, and beset me for weeks at a time with its maddening pain. I grew very irritable. MY BRAIN FELT TIRED. Spells of despondency became more frequent, and it seemed to me sometimes that REASON WOULD BE DETHRONED. Last March your advertising team passed our house, and as a boy came running up the steps, I met him at the door, and took the paper he handed me. In the quiet of my chamber, I read it through and through. I sent a boy to H. H. Kicker's for a bottle of DANA'S SARSAPARILLA. It helped me from the first. I am now taking my seventh bottle, and have not had a NUMB SPELL FOR OVER THREE MONTHS. MY LAST ATTACK OF NEURALGIA WAS OVER FOUR MONTHS AGO. My nerves feel strong, and I am well, or at least very near it. I have a good appetite, and have gained nineteen and one-half pounds in weight. I never expected to feel as I do now. My gratitude is unbounded. I hope that all afflicted as I was will try the renovating powers of DANA'S SARSAPARILLA.

Sincerely yours,
CLARA E. BLACKBURN.

The High School Graduation.

Town Hall was filled to overflowing, Thursday evening to witness the graduating exercises of the High School class of 1891. The total number of graduates was twenty-five, including six post-graduates. The classical course embraced twelve and the English course seven graduates. The hall was tastily arranged. The front of the stage was fringed with green, while the rear was banked with flowers of many hues arranged in pretty designs. Overhead was suspended a large floral star. The whole effect, as the pupils came one after another upon the stage to participate in the last exercises of school days, was very gratifying. The programme was as follows:

Music	Prayer.	March
Latin Salutatory	Carrie F. Southwick	Piano Duet
Oration, "The Australian system"	Thomas F. Hayes
Music (a) Eventide, (b) Digerie, Digerie, Doge.	Mary Agnes Grosvenor
Essay, "Advertising"	Mary Agnes Grosvenor
Oration, "The Nicaragua Canal"	Michael A. Butler
Music, "In the chimney corner"	Mary F. Ferguson
Essay, "I cannot find it, 'tis not in the bond"	Eliza P. Osborn
Music, "Idylle"	Jennie M. Strout
Essay, "Buried Treasures"	Maybells and flowers
Music, "Apparel oft proclaims the man"	Miss Eliza L. Osgood
Oration, "The spring's free sunshine falleth"	Michael A. Butler
Oration with valedictory, "The recent lynching of Italians at New Orleans"	Daniel Sullivan Awarding of Diplomas.
	Benediction.

The exhibition was exceedingly flattering to scholars and teachers. The essays and other literary compositions displayed signs of originality, and the musical numbers were creditable performances. The latin salutatory by Miss Carrie Southwick, while not appreciated by the larger part of the audience, to whom it was as a sealed book, was well rendered. Thomas F. Hayes' oration upon the Australian ballot was appreciated, and the essay upon advertising by M. Agnes Grosvenor, displayed originality of conception and an ingenious weaving of the various parts and quotations making a harmonious combination, while some of the hits, a few local ones like the allusion to the old barn on Andover street, where the sign of Gilliland's Liniment appears on one side and "Who is Frank Cousins?" on another provoked some merriment among the audience. Tradesmen might learn some valuable lessons from the effusion, which in some parts read like the efforts of a professional advertising agent. Michael A. Butler delivered his oration on the Nicaragua canal with freedom and confidence that gave good effect to the literary composition. Miss Mary W. Ferguson's vocal solo was well received. The essay of Miss Eliza P. Osborn on the Merchant of Venice was a fine exhibition of original composition containing a studious analysis of the subject, and was rendered in a clear, forcible manner that gave eva-sis to the thoughts. Miss Jennie M. Strout read a well written essay upon Buried Treasures in which the labor of Dr. Schlemmer was reviewed and their importance to civilization were ably exemplified. Miss Eliza L. Osgood's essay, "Apparel oft proclaims the man," was an interesting review of the mode of dress of different nations and times, concluding with an able criticism of American fashions, in which the "dude" was given a share of attention, to the amusement of the spectators. The oration with valedictory by Daniel Sullivan was highly appreciated. At the conclusion of the valedictory, a portrait of Geo. Peabody donated by Miss Somes, a former teacher, to the graduating class, was presented to the school, to be hung upon the walls of the new school room. Thomas Carroll made a short address at the close of the exercises and then proceeded to award the diplomas.

The following are the graduates and prizes:

Alice M. Brown, McCauley's Essays and Poems, 3 vols.
Michael A. Butler, Gen. Grant's personal Memoirs, 2 vols.
James L. Eagan, Brice's American Commonwealth, 2 vols.
Mary W. Ferguson, Scott's poems; McKenzie's Century.
Mary A. Grosvenor, Welch's Development of English Literature.
Thomas F. Hayes, Comprehensive Speaker, McCarthy, History of Our Own Times.
Charles H. Kimball, Counting House Bookkeeping; Carlyle's French History.
Lizzie M. Langley, McCauley's history of England, 5 vols.
Francis V. McCarthy, Gen. Sheridan's personal memoirs.
Harry T. McClure, Plutarch's lives of illustrious men.
Sarah S. Moore, Lowell's poems; Critical period of the American history, by Fiske.
Eliza P. Osborn, Welch's Development of English Literature.
Eliza L. Osgood, Tennyson's poems; Words and their uses, by White.
Carrie F. Southwick, Redpath's history of the United States.
Jennie M. Strout, Spiers and Surrenne's French dictionary.
Daniel Sullivan, Longfellow's poems; Taine's English Literature, 2 vols.
Florence A. H. Torr, French and Italian Note Books, by Hawthorne; Whittier's poems.
Harry F. Whidden, The Beginnings of New England, by Fiske; Words and Their Uses, by White.
Carrie M. Wilson, Dickens illustrated.

The six post graduates each received a copy of the American statesmen series.

Our Postal Delivery.

When the free delivery system was introduced into Peabody, last November, considerable indignation was expressed by those living beyond the limits laid out by the inspector because they could not be served, and complaints and petitions were forwarded to Washington asking that an additional carrier might be appointed, but the department could do nothing at that time, as the appropriation was not sufficient to meet the further extension. Postmaster Jackman kept at work upon the matter, however, and aided by Gen. Cogswell, whose efforts in behalf of an improved service in this town have been unremitting, the desired for boon has been at last granted, and on Wednesday next, one of Uncle Sam's liveried servitors will begin his daily rounds through that section of the town.

Flavel H. Goodwin, an old soldier, and a member of Post 50, G. A. R., who was appointed a substitute carrier last December, has been promoted to be a regular carrier and an allowance granted sufficient to enable him to be classed as a mounted carrier. This route will be wholly outside the limits now served, beginning at the Osborn farm on Andover street, serving to the Danvers line, through Prospect street to Proctor's crossing, thence through Summit and Lynnfield streets to a point just beyond Newhall's crossing, through County and Lynn streets to the Lynn line. This route will include about eight or ten miles of streets and will be served twice a day, starting in the morning after the arrival of the 7.07 mail and in the afternoon after the 1 o'clock mail.

Mr. Goodwin has purchased a handsome gig, suited to the requirements of the service, from Charles Rowell & Sons of Amesbury, who make a specialty of this kind of work. The gig is a two wheeler, finished in natural wood, weighing less than 150 pounds, and suitably inscribed "U. S. Mail." The whole turnout will be a credit to the service and one in which the carrier and patrons can take a just pride. The letter box now in position at the corner of Lynn and County streets will be re-located at the pound near the entrance to Bartholomew's pond. The one at the corner of Lynnfield and Summit streets will be moved to Newhall's crossing and the one at the Osborn farm on Andover street will be put in position at a point near the Oak Hill entrance. New boxes will be placed at Proctor's crossing and near the works of Pike & Whipple. These boxes will be collected twice each week day and once on Sunday.

This service as laid out at present will accommodate some 170 families with better mail facilities than they ever possessed before, and of course adds largely to the expense of running the Peabody post office, and as the department never makes an extension of service without some expectation of an increase in the receipts, it is to be hoped that the people to be benefited will see to it that all business in that section is turned into its proper channel, and not diverted into other offices. Many people have the idea that it makes no difference what the receipts are as long as the population is large enough to warrant the free delivery, but in this they make a great mistake. The postal service is run wholly upon business principles and the efficiency of the service is based almost entirely upon the receipts of the office, not upon the amount of mail delivered or collected, for the amount of matter passing through an office is not always a guide upon which to base the money receipts. Let there be a falling off in receipts of an office—there will just as surely be a corresponding cutting down of allowances in all branches, and this means poorer service. While the free delivery would not be abolished, it might be curtailed that the old system would have to be resumed to a great extent.

Postmaster Jackman, by untiring efforts has increased the receipts of the office from $6100 in 1886-7 to $11500. at the close of the last fiscal year, an increase of 87 per cent. but the expenses have kept pace with the receipts, and now, with the new carrier, will far exceed the receipts of the office under the old regime of four years ago. It will require over $600 per month to pay the bills and in order to meet this it is necessary that all business which rightfully belongs to the office should be done there. Considerable business is now done through the Boston office that should be given to Peabody owing to so much of the clerical work of the latter business being done in the offices in the city. Should this business be kept at home the receipts would be fully $12,000 a year. We do not think that the business men of Peabody have full understood this, or they would have endeavored to build up their own office in this matter. Let us hope that the citizens generally will co-operate with Postmaster Jackman in holding on to what we now have and securing as many more advantages as possible. All that is necessary for that end is to keep your trade for the home office.

A New Industry for Peabody.

We are pleased to mention a new and growing industry that is flourishing in Peabody. A few years ago, H. Hudson commenced in a small way with crude apparatus, to manufacture a dry soap, or soap powder, which found ready sale among his neighbors, and being thus encouraged, he increased the production, and in time established a small plant with all the necessary appliances for prosecuting his business, in rear of 26 Mason street. Mr. Hudson has met with great success and his "Dry Soap" is known all over New England. This is a promising industry for Peabody and like the numerous other washing powders now in the market, is likely to require much larger quarters and more capital and will give employment to many hands in manufacturing and packing. Mr. Hudson has been distributing free samples about town recently and we have heard favorable expressions from several who have tried them.

The soap is ground very fine and put up in packages that sell for five cents each. Every package has a blue and red label with the name H. Hudson's Dry Soap. All grocers have it.

Isaac A. Drowne has commenced the remodelling of the High School.

Mr. and Mrs. N. W. Felton celebrated their silver wedding at their home on Prospect street, last Saturday evening. Prof. Barbour, who united the couple 25 years ago, was among the guests of the occasion.

LOCAL LINES.

The school committee has not yet completed the task of electing teachers for next year.

Master Farr's first class, South school, presented him with an engraving entitled "A friendly greeting," with easel. Master Barnes' first class of the Wallis school, gave him a library chair. Many of the other teachers also received presents from their advancing pupils.

The weather being unpropitious, the sewing exhibitions was postponed until Tuesday afternoon, when a large number visited town hall to inspect the work and judge of the progress of the scholars in the art of needlework. The exhibits were from the Wallis, Endicott, Bowditch and Center schools. The instructions in the last two being paid by subscriptions while the former are supported by endowment. The work was of various designs and grades from patching to embroidery. The aggregate of exhibits was over two hundred and reflected much credit on the teacher, Miss Kate Hodgkins and showed an appreciative spirit on the part of the pupils. A very pleasing programme was presented by the children, consisting chiefly of singing and recitations, and at the close the prizes were distributed as follows: Wallis school—For button holes, First prize to Sadie Leonard; second to Mary O'Connor. Given by Mrs. Lucy Upton. Endicott school—For best work in garments, Mrs. Sanborn's class, first prize, from Mrs. Upton, to Margaret O'Connor; second, from Mrs. John Osborn to Annie Dinneen; prize for top sewing, from Mrs. Upton to Katie Barrett. Center school—Best work in darning, Miss Wiley's class, prize to Emilie Maitinago, from Mrs. J. W. Hudson; first prize in garments to Mary F. Jacobs, from Mrs. Osborn; second to Diana Swanton, from same; first prize in plain sewing, Miss Upton's room, to Annie Durgin, from same; second to Rosilla Caden, from Mrs. Hudson. Bowditch school—Prize for the best work on garments, Miss Baker's class, to Alice Langley, from Mrs. C. K. Hutchinson; prize for best over-and-over hemming and stitching, Miss Tuft's class to Bessie Hills, from Mrs. Osborn; prize for plain sewing, Miss Tuft's room, to Jennie Trask from Mrs. Mary A. Fox.

Kindness.

Often times kindness is richer than wealth,
Of doth it heal where riches would fail,
Health the wound in the sad heart deep,
Wraps and enshrouds it with Purity's veil.

The harsh spoken word is a poisonous shaft,
Which buries itself in the depth of the heart,
But words spoken kindly are joys to ones soul,
And create a happiness never to part.

Adversity comes and crushes us down,
'Tis then a kind word the sad heart will cheer,
Comes as the dew to the low drooping flower
Strengthens our hope with memories dear.

Each word kindly spoken must show a good deed,
A deed whose sweet memories rest in our mind,

An example for men to live by in life,
A motto to teach them to ever be kind.
FRED GOLDSMITH WALKER.

THE FARM AND GARDEN.

The farmer must know the cost as well as the selling price of his farm products before he can tell the profit.

Raising a good crop is no sign of a farmer until you have figured out where the cost line is located.

An extremely wet season will have the effect of calling the attention of farmers whose farms are wet to the necessity of draining with tile.

Foot rot in sheep can be partially prevented by keeping the sheep away from wet pastures but the rot also attacks sheep on dry locations.

The aggregate value of eggs shipped from Canada to the United States in 1889 is placed at over $2,000,000.

Phylloxera threatens Champagne, in France, from which vine district comes the champagne wines.

One often sees the hint given that sheep require less care than other stock, and so are more profitable. On the contrary, they should have constant care and good attention.

The editor of the Dairy World says "there is no such thing as over-production in a prime article of butter. Three is simply an over-production in the dairying."

Those who grade and pack their fruit carefully, honestly and tastily have an immense advantage over other competitors, all things being equal, in bad as in good seasons.

Vick says that the white, sweet-scented violets do well for quite a number of years planted where there are apt to bad places in the sod, and will always thrive if the grass does not crowd them too closely.

Do not let the grain get overripe before cutting; much good grain is wasted in this way. Cut just when in the dough stage, and the grain will not shell out, it will be of better quality, and the straw will also be more valuable. Dead ripe straw does not make acceptable food for any sort of stock, but if cut as stated it may be largely used to supplement the hay, especially if plenty of grain is used.

The first appearance of curl in the leaf of a potato is a sign of an unhealthy condition, possibly of rot. Protect against it at once by sprinkling the vines with the following solution: One pound of sulphate of copper and six pounds of lime in a barrel of water. To dispose of the potato beetle at the same time, add a quarter of a pound of Paris green. Keep the mixture well stirred, and apply with a fine spray.

A calf ought never to be reared from a cow of weak constitution, or from one suspected of organic disease. It frequently happens that milking powers of a high order exist in cows from which it would not be wise to breed. Any cow liable to garget, swelling in the throat, or other tuberculous disease, is unfit to propagate her species, and her individual excellences in other respects should be no temptation in that respect.

The breeding and handling of fast horses is a proper branch of the live stock industry, but is one that the average farmer should let severely alone. It is a business that should be engaged in only by men of ample means, who are able to stand large losses; but it has a tempting aspect when we learn that a single horse farm near Lexington, Kentucky, had an income of about $200,000 last year. This amount included the sale of stock and the earnings of five stallions.

Careless packing, shipping and marking is responsible for many of the losses that occur on produce sent to commission dealers. Shippers would do well to observe the following directions: Pack only in clean packages, and put every article up neatly. Goods sold by weight should have the gross and tare marked plainly on each package, and those sold by count should have the number. In shipping dressed poultry and game, mark each package with the various kinds and amounts contained in each, and mark your name so plainly that no one else's produce can be confounded with yours.

One of the best safeguards against a dry season is to use land plaster in the hills of corn. A very small amount of plaster will answer. Put it on the hill after covering the corn. It attracts moisture and is of itself a fertilizer.

The New York State entomologist says the present excessive ravages of insect pests, greatest in this country than anywhere else in the world, and increasing every year, is largely due to the destruction of our native birds. It has become a necessity that every bird which is of benefit to the agriculturist should be given protection. The work of the Department at Washington in ascertaining just which of our birds are valuable as insect destroyers, should have the support of every farmer.

This is the time to consider the advisability of changing from summer to winter dairying. We will not go so far as some of our exchanges do, and say that a pound of butter can be produced for less money in winter than in summer, but we do say that with proper grain rations—sweet clover, hay and bright cornfodder, or, better yet, with good sweet ensilage—there will be more profit in the pound of butter in the winter than in summer. There is less competition at that season, and higher prices always rule.

Do not be afraid to keep the cultivator going in the corn; more crops are ruined by too little cultivation than by too much. Close and deep culture is safe and useful in the early stages of growth; later on the roots near the surface should not be disturbed nor mutilated. The soil and the season have much to do in deciding the question of level or ridge cultivation. On ground that is high and dry, or likely to suffer from drouth, level culture is to be preferred. On low, moist land it is better to ridge the soil.

The value of humus, which is largely, if not wholly, decaying or decayed vegetable matter, consists principally in the fact that it is always decomposing, and, consequently, always throwing off carbonic acid gas. This is the best and universal solvent of minerals that might otherwise remain locked up out of reach of the crops. In your effort to supply your crops with available plant food, no matter what other materials may be used, can make no mistake by turning under the largest possible amount of vegetable matter.

The robins and cat-birds will soon be busy helping to harvest the cherries. They may easily be kept away without using the shot-gun. Make a hole in the sound end of an empty fruit can, take a cord and tie a small stone on one end, tie a knot a few inches above the stone, and draw the cord through from the inside, leaving the stone to act as a clapper to a bell. Suspend several of these in the tree, and the slightest wind will make such a tintinnabulation that the bird will give it a wide berth. Rather than kill these birds, it would be better to let them eat the cherries, for they devour many of our worst insects.

The values of green manuring are so many that some of them must suit any farmer and any soil. It prevents plant food from being carried off bodily from the surface of the ground. It prevents the ground from being washed and gullied by rains. It reduces the leaching of the ground, and especially the loss of nitrates. It prevents the baking of the surface, and the consequent exclusion of air and moisture—two of the most important factors in producing fertility within the soil. The action of the roots when penetrating the soil, and the decay of the green crop when turned under, improves its mechanical condition.

We need fast walking horses, and the colt should be trained to this end; but we are usually in such a hurry that the colt is forced to trot, and soon becoming leg weary, it gets into a way of walking very slow to rest. It is much better to let the colt walk, but to keep it at a steady, vigorous gait. The walking gait will make less balky horses, and fewer unsound ones. Walking horses keep in much better condition on the same feed, and get there almost as soon, if not sooner. The horse that is driven hard walks very slow, and so loses time. A sound fast walker will always sell at a good price.

Two Dainty Summer Desserts.

When the mercury mounts in the thermometer, the demand for cold dishes is on a similarly ascending scale, and really good recipes never fail to find a welcome from appreciative house-keepers.

The Nesselrode pudding, which many people imagine must be purchased from a first-class confectioner, can be made without difficulty by the home cook if the following simple directions are carefully observed.

The Princess Cream, a favorite German dainty, has proved no less popular in the little circle of Americans to whom the recipe was brought as part of the spoils of Continental travel.

Nesselrode Pudding. — Eighteen

French chestnuts, one pint of cream, half-pint of milk, two eggs, half-pint of candied fruits, wineglass of sherry. Remove the dark from the chestnuts. Boil them until they are tender, then throw them into cold water. The white skin will then readily peel off. (If boiled in the shells they would be dark colored and taste of tannin.) Mash them by rubbing through a sieve or a tin strainer. Beat the yolks of the eggs, add the milk and the mashed chestnuts. Sweeten to taste, flavor with vanilla and a little nutmeg, let the whole thicken in a double saucepan like soft custard, and set it away to cool. Prepare a large cupful of assorted fruits, either candied or preserved. Cherries are cut in halves; quinces, apricots, candied plums, etc., are cut in strips. If raisins, citrons, or currants are used, they must be boiled in sugar and water until tender. Fine Wiesbaden strawberries, etc., are not added while freezing, but put in the mould in layers, as they would be broken by the beater. Whip the whites of the egg-stiff, and whip the thick cream. Mix with the cold custard, then add the fruit and the wine. Do not pack down in the freezer or in the mould, but let the pudding be as light as possible. If a sauce is desired, use whipped cream sweetened and flavored.

Princess Cream.—Let six ounces of rice boil up once, wash it with cold water, cook it with six gills of cream, and one vanilla bean to flavor it, over a very slow fire until soft; add eight ounces of sugar, and let it steam fifteen minutes in a hot place. Take the mixture of the fire and stir until nearly cold. Whip one pint of cream until stiff; add a little with one glass of Maraschino and three-quarters of an ounce of isinglass—or one ounce of dissolved lukewarm gelatine—to the rice, and stir carefully until it begins to thicken; add the rest of the whipped cream, and if the mixture should not be sweet enough to please the maker's taste, add more sugar; then pour into a mould and set it on the ice or in a cool place to harden. To turn it out, place the mould in warm water for a few minutes, wipe it dry quickly, turn the rice cream into a dish, garnish with preserved fruits, and serve with a cold fruit sauce prepared in the following way: Rub strawberries or raspberries through a fine sieve, add pulverized sugar and a little white wine. Or if these are out of season, serve with cream and sugar or with whipped cream.—Harper's Bazar.

They Sort the Type.

About twenty-five women, says Mr. Charles J. Dumar in The Ladies' Home Journal, now have pleasant, lucrative employment on daily newspapers in New York, as "distributors"—that is, they are employed during the day, at the same rate paid for night work, to distribute type for compositors who thus prefer to reduce their working hours. The "lady distributor" is comparatively a recent innovation, but at least she is a most agreeable one. Her earnings depend upon the amount of work she receives, but will average about fifty cents for every hour employed. I have known some women to thus earn twenty dollars per week, from about 10 A. M. until 5 P. M. These positions, however, are in the main greatly prized and eagerly sought after by women. While there is no reason why men should not perform this work under the same circumstances it has by tacit consent become the undisputed privilege of women.

Chinese Entertainers.

A young woman in Sedalia, Mo., who desired to do something novel in connection with her reception, invited all the Chinamen in town to help entertain her guests. The almond-eyed gentlemen caught on, and appeared in the most elaborate and beautiful costumes, much to the hostess' surprise. They also carried with them a large assortment of Chinese sweetmeats and fancy articles, which they passed around.

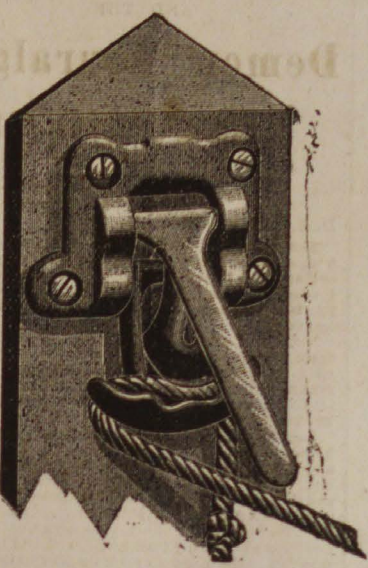

SUDDEN DEATHS.

Heart disease is by far the most frequent cause of sudden death, which in three out of four cases is unsuspected. The symptoms are not generally understood. These are: a habit of lying on the right side, short breath, pain or distress in side, back or shoulder, irregular pulse, asthma, weak and hungry spells, wind in stomach, swelling of ankle or dropsy, oppression, dry cough and smothering. Dr. Miles' illustrated book on Heart Disease, free at William T. Lee's, who sells and guarantees Dr. Miles' unequalled New Heart Cure, and his Restorative Nerve, which cures nervousness, headache, sleeplessness, effects of drinking, etc. It contains no opiate.

The notion that women are fond of dress is a fallacious one. You think so? I do. Whenever I go to the beach and see the women in their bathing suits lying on the sands or gathering in groups at the edge of the water, I am convinced that they have been greatly misrepresented. They don't seem to be a bit fond of dress.

"Get another dozen lamp chimneys."

"What! are they all gone?"

"Yes."

"I'm going to try a sort I've been reading about, if I have to send to Pittsburgh for 'em. Macbeth & Co.'s 'pearl-top.'"

"They say their chimneys don't break."

"Another humbug, probably."

"Don't Muggins keep 'em?"

"I'm going to see. Give me a postal card. I'll have that chimney, anyhow."

Muggins got 'em for him, and did a thriving chimney business for several weeks, till everybody got 'em; and somehow his trade has increased all round ever since.

THE NEW law placing electric railway employees under the direct control of the police is a wise, act, and will tend to reduce the obstructions to travel that have been suffered by the public in the past.

MUCH HAS been said at different times about loss of retail trade to the town as a result of no-license but from quite a number of interviews with local tradesmen we are convinced there is a very limited amount of truth in the claim. One dealer informed us that his spring sales up to date were much larger this season than ever before, not excepting last year when licenses were in force and the liquor traffic flourished as perhaps it never did before. Business generally is dull but retail trade compares favorably with any of the years the town granted licenses, other conditions being taken into consideration.

AT THE meeting of the Law and Order League last Tuesday evening a committee of fifteen was appointed to act as spotters for the detection of violators of the Sunday laws. A great deal of work needs to be done to suppress the sale of liquors in town and the League would do well to have the committee ferret out the guilty by the same kind of tactics.

The police are doing all that can be done to close up the kitchens and other dens where illicit sales are conducted, but the results must necessarily be comparatively meagre. The utmost vigilance is exercised by dealers in the ardent, to elude detection and about the only way to secure evidence against parties suspected of selling is by spotter tactics.

THE FRIENDS of Mr. Crapo announce that he is fairly in the field for the gubernatorial nomination this fall; but it is understood he will in no sense be a candidate if it requires any personal effort on his part. He is averse to buying the nomination at the price it usually costs a candidate who seeks the honor without being called spontaneously by the people.

The name of Hon. John D. Long has been suggested as the strongest candidate the Republican party can put in nomination. The Ex-Governor has always been popular throughout the state and it is no doubt true he is the strongest standard bearer, but there is some doubt whether he will care to have his honors tarnished by the jostling of aspiring hucksters with whom he might have to compete.

Should the nomination be forced upon him by the unanimous voice of his party, the present incumbent would most assuredly join the ranks of the yearling.

A LENGTHY review of the comparative merits of our Concord Reformatory and the New York State Reformatory at Elmira, was given in the Herald of Monday. The representative who investigated the systems in vogue in the two institutions, went into the matter quite thoroughly and systematically, showing up many points of excellence in each of the institutions.

One peculiar feature of the Elmira Reformatory is the universal employment of convicts as officers and assistants, the superintendent preferring that class to men from the usual walks of life. The custom has been in vogue for several years and no instance of treachery or faithlessness has ever been detected. The superintendent at Concord on being interviewed upon this point expressed a distrust for such practice. He considered it a bold step, and one he thought Massachusetts would be slow to follow. There is some merit in the plan, if it can be relied upon, as it furnishes employment to a class of people who might through idleness drift back into wayward paths, and at the same time tends to make the salary lists considerably smaller. The salaries paid by this state for caring for about 670 inmates are several thousand dollars more than New York pays for the care of about 1100.

While the institution at Elmira has been established since 1873 and the Concord reformatory only since 1886 there appears on the whole to be little advantage to the credit of the former over the latter institution. Some features might be materially improved on in both, but the average of excellencies is about balanced.

NOTED AND QUOTED.

The production of electrically welded steel chains will soon become an important industry in this country. The steel chains will be one-third lighter than the present chain, with as great a tensile strength, and can be produced at considerable less cost.

The Fitchburg Gas and Electric Light company has declined the proposition of the city council to furnish 150 lights, burning from half an hour after sunset every night till 1 o'clock, at $75 each per year.—Milford Gazette.

The first colored man ever admitted to practice law in the courts of Savannah, Ga., was sworn in recently. His name is J. H. Kinckle, and he is a native of Virginia, where he practiced law for five years.

Of the 11,000,000 square miles of Africa, only about 4,500,000 remain which have not been claimed by some European power, and more than half of this area lies within the desert of Sahara.

The word muslin comes from Mosul, in Asiatic Turkey, where it was at one time largely manufactured, just as at a later date cambric received its name from Cambray, in France.

The "angry tree," a woody plant, which grows from 10 to 25 feet high, was formerly supposed to exist only in Nevada, has recently been found both in Eastern California and Arizona. If disturbed, this peculiar tree shows every sign of vexation, even to ruffling up its leaves like the hair of an angry cat, and giving forth an unpleasant, sickening odor.

Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe is said to have aged so much in the last few years that she would hardly be recognized by those who knew her a decade since. She was 80 years old on the 14th of June.

The next annual excursion of the Vermont Press association leaves Vermont points Friday, July 10, and the members are to rendezvous at Boston the same day and banquet at the American house in the evening. Saturday is to be passed in Plymouth, Mass., and Sunday at Nantasket Beach.

A Vermont editor announces that the tub of dairy butter which he took from a farmer in payment of a subscription and an advertisement of summer boarders turns out to be oleomargarine. Unless the farmer makes his cheat good the editor threatens to print his name.—Windham County (Vt.) Reformer.

A test of the "writing telegraph" between New York and Chicago was made this week, and, allowing for atmospheric disturbances, was fairly successful. A message of 60 words was transmitted without a break and was recorded automatically by a pen attached to the transmitting instrument.

The incident in reference to the wheelwright's infatuation for Miss Gabrielle Greeley, even after she decided to marry, led to the publication of a similar story in Halifax, N. S. When Professor Schurman was dean of Dalhousie college a Pictou county tanner conceived the idea that Mrs. Schurman was in love with him, and would desert her husband to become his wife. When Dr. Schurman became dean of Cornell university the tanner visited New York state every few months to fondly gaze upon the lady on the street or in her pew. The tanner even went to the father of the lady, George Munro, the New York publisher, and declared his conviction that his passion was reciprocated, and asked him to interfere in his behalf.—Cor. Chicago Tribune.

The committee appointed to investigate the workings of the Standard Oil Company in Germany will report upon the question as to whether the operations of the company are of a legal or illegal nature, and, incidentally, the committee will ask for the abolition of the duty on oil barrels, thus placing the many sailing vessels engaged in the oil trade between the United States and Germany on an equal footing with the tank steamers. The committee will also recommend that an effort be made to obtain sufficient oil for German consumption from the independent wells of the United States.

"Joe" Cannon of Illinois rises to remark that "business is better than ever before, and the tariff did it."

The total number of cotton mills in the south now, according to the secretary of the New Orleans Cotton Exchange, is 336, with 40,819 looms and 1,819,290 spindles.

Sugar bounties will not go begging for takers in Vermont, as seemed at first probable. Applications for licenses to produce maple sugar under the bounty act are now pouring in upon the revenue officers at a lively rate.

ABSOLUTELY PURE

The U. S. Attorney General decides that Vermont shall receive her share of the direct tax that is being paid back to the states, notwithstanding her failure to return the arms furnished by the United States to suppress the St. Albans raids. The state raised troops at her own expense and that is considered an equitable setoff. Her share will be $165,000.

For years it has been stated and re-stated in the columns of presumably well informed newspapers that Sir John Macdonald was the only obstacle to the peaceful annexation of Canada to the United States. Now that Sir John is dead we shall watch with interest the movements of the annexationists both in Canada and the United States in order to ascertain how much truth there was in these oft repeated assertions.—Ipswich Chronicle

The towns and cities of the state can now do their own municipal lighting if they want to. We predict, however, that few will do so, and that those who try the experiment will find it a losing one.—Milford Journal.

The Canton Journal, one of the best local family papers, in all its prosperity appears in 8-page form, with a hand some new dress and heading to match. The Journal under Bro. Thorndyke's management, has opinions of its own, which it is not afraid to express, but always with fairness, and we are glad to note its success as a typical suburban weekly.—Milford Journal.

John Most, who has been happily forgotten for some years, is recalled to mind by the decree of the New York court of appeals that the sentence of the lower court stands, which consigned him nearly four years ago to a year's imprisonment in the penitentiary for his seditious talk at the time of the execution of the Chicago anarchists. It has been a good while coming, but justice has come. The effect of the sentence in itself has been effectual in shutting the man's mouth, but its execution is not deprived of its salutary quality by the delay.—Springfield Republican.

Probate Court.

At a session of the probate court held in Newburyport Monday before Judge Hermon, the following wills were proved: Luther Ladd, Lawrence; Edward McKone, No. Andover; Eliza S. Nichols, Merrimack; Lowell F. Prescott, Haverhill; Samuel Raymond, Andover; Catherine Rourke, Lawrence. Administrations were granted on the estate of James Blaisdell, Jr., Amesbury; Jacob Huntington, Amesbury; Eliza Griffin, Gloucester; Mary G. Leavett, Salem; Helen W. Lemon, Salem; William S. Pycott, Gloucester; Annie Wiggins, Newburyport; George A. Hart, Salem.

Among the inventories filed were the following: William T. Andrews, Virginia City, Nevada, $5000; Martha G. Donnett, Salem, $852.18; Geo. Draper, Nahant, $301.89; all in bonds and stocks; George E. Lane, Gloucester, $11,931.47; Betsey Nichols, Haverhill, $3055.21; Thomas Nichols, Haverhill, $4903.39; Thomas F. Odell, Salem, in trust, $12,806.92; John Pew, Gloucester, in trust, $2500; Enoch Pillsbury, Georgetown, $4899.37; Alfred Trask, Danvers, $84,928.06, of which $45,600 is real and $39,328.06 is personal estate.

Threw His Child into the Sea.

The steamer La Bretagne, which arrived at New York Sunday from Havre, reports that Joseph Feys, aged 46 years, a steerage passenger and native of Switzerland, while conversing with his family, consisting of a wife and five children, suddenly dragged his five-year-old son, Pierre, from his mother's arms and threw him into the sea. The child was lost and the father, who was apparently insane, was seized by the officers of the ship and put in irons. He had threatened to throw all his children overboard.

Stop and Think

How much money you have thrown away buying worthless medicines, prepared by unprincipled parties, who care not what harm they may do to your system. You can depend on every bottle of Sulphur Bitters as being a reliable medicine. It searches out and cleanses from the blood all impure matter and makes you feel like a new person.—Boston Daily Globe.

It is not a good time to read the bible while your wife is out in the rain cutting stove wood.

A Golden Wedding.

A highly enjoyable golden wedding was observed at the Needham home- stead on Lowell street, West Peabody, Wednesday. The clerk of the weather vied with the host, hostess and guests in making everything as pleasant as heart could wish.

About 300 guests paid their respects to the couple who have shared the joys and vicissitudes of life for half a century.

Mrs. Needham's maiden name was Julia A. Van Aresdale, and she was married at her home in New Brunswick, N. J., June 12, 1841, so that the date of celebration was not exactly coincident with the date of the nuptials. Mr. Needham wore the identical suit in which he was married. The coat is the ancient "claw hammer" while the vest and pantaloons are white. The suit fits very well notwithstanding the many years that have elapsed since it was first pressed into service. The union has been blessed by five children, all but one being now alive.

The reception was informal. Quite a number of presents were brought by guests in spite of the injunction in the invitations to the contrary. Strawberries and cream were served among other delicacies; both were of home production and very appropriate to the occasion, Mr. Needham being a Republican and the pioneer of West Peabody in the strawberry culture.

The mansion house is a historic structure, dating back to 1665 or '70, although additions have been made at different times that have entirely disguised its original identity. The manor has always been in the Needham family.

The Peabody Chautauqua Completes Its First Course.

The four years' course of the Peabody Chautauqua Literary and Scientific Circle was completed Wednesday evening, and the final meeting was held at the residence of Miss Marlon Taylor, on Chestnut street. Rev. George A. Phinney of Salem, the first president, and through whose efforts the circle was organized in Peabody, was present. An interesting programme was given by the members, and a light lunch followed. The evening was enjoyed by all, many pleasant recollections of the twenty-six meetings which have been held during the four years were recalled.

There are twelve graduates, some of whom will receive diplomas at the assembly at Framingham next month. Constant additions have been made to the circle, and the work promises to be perpetuated indefinitely. The Chautauqua furnishes a cheap and easy means of polishing off the mental training of those who have been deprived by any cause, of a college or academic course.

A Demonstration in Wash Goods

We're making a "Demonstration" in Cotton Dress Goods. High Art runs riot now among these native born fabrics—perfection of weave and elegance of design. Textures sheer as can be—designs very closely resembling the soft wools, some approaching quite near in likeness and touch to India and China silks—all unmistakably full of covetable midsummer freshness—queens' Cottons—that's the idea in a nutshell.
One lot comprises gingham that have been reduced from 20c. per yard to 1 c. per yard.

These goods were considered exceptionally good value at 20c., but a fortunate purchase enables us to offer them just at the height of the season at the remarkably low price of 17c. per yd.

WHAT IS SAPOLIO?

It is a solid handsome cake of scouring soap which has no equal for all cleaning purposes except in the laundry. To use it is to value it.

What will SAPOLIO do? Why it will clean paint, make oil-cloths bright, and give the floors, tables and shelves a new appearance. It will take the grease off the dishes and off the pots and pans. You can scour the knives and forks with it, and make the tin things shine brightly. The wash-basin, the bath-tub, even the greasy kitchen sink will be as clean as a new pin if you use SAPOLIO. One cake will prove all we say. Be a clever housekeeper and try it.

The mad dog, which was the cause of all the dogs in town being muzzled belonged to a man on Ropes street, Salem, and went away Friday morning, taking a piece out of a lounge before going. He was afflicted with the mange and had been treated to a dose of sulphur and lard, which may account for his strange actions.

Some noticeable improvements in the running of the Essex Electric cars have been made recently. Cars leave the Square and City Hall promptly on schedule time, which is something the management have been endeavoring for a long time to accomplish. A car now starts from the Square at 11.30 a. m., making continuous fifteen minutes time thereafter. The first car for the Willows leaves the Square at 1 o'clock.

The children's concert at the Universalist church, last Sunday evening, was attended by an audience that filled the church to overflowing. The platform was beautifully decorated with flowers, both set pieces and foliage, and presented a handsome appearance as did the front of the singers' gallery which was a bank of variegated colored roses. The exercises by the children were very pleasing to the large audience and were prettily carried out.

Columbus Relics.

The World's Fair Directory is recommended by its foreign affairs committee to appropriate $50,000 for the purpose of building at Jackson Park a fac simile of the ancient convent of La Rabida, of Palos, Spain. It is believed that this is the most appropriate structure possible in which to exhibit the large number of relics of Columbus which is being collected. If the project is carried out, as it seems probable it will be, this building and its contents will doubtless be one of the Exhibition attractions which no visitor will be content to leave without seeing.

It was at the door of the convent of La Rabida that Columbus, disappointed and down-hearted, asked for food and shelter for himself and his child. It was here that he found an asylum for a few years while he developed his plans and prepared the arguments which he submitted to the council at Salamanca. It was in one of the rooms of this convent that he met the Dominican monks in debate, and it was here also that he conferred with Alonso Pinzo, who afterwards commanded one of the vessels of his fleet. In this convent Columbus lived while he was making preparations for his voyage, and on the morning that he sailed from Palos he attended himself the little chapel. There is no building in the world so closely identified with his discovery as this, and fortunately its architecture is of such a character as to permit of a reproduction at a comparatively small cost, and at the same time furnish a picturesque view and appropriate group among the splendid buildings that will be erected at Jackson Park. It will not only be of itself a monument to Columbus; but it will furnish commodious and convenient show rooms for the collections and relics of Columbus that are to be exhibited. Besides a large collection of maps, manuscripts, books and pictures that are being secured there will be among them public and private collections both from Europe and the United States. Many of the articles being of great value, it is proposed to bring them all together in this building, where they will be secure from fire and all other dangers.

THE MELVILLE MURDER

COPYRIGHT BY AMERICAN PRESS ASSOCIATION, 1891.

"How the police officer would have stared if I had whispered those words in his ear and told him from whose lips I heard them! I wonder if I did wrong in keeping what I heard to myself! Perhaps I did, but the words have a new meaning now that I have put them on paper. They never seemed important before. Besides, the cook and the chore boy heard as much of their privacy as I did. Why didn't they tell? Why did the cook, when questioned by the officers, stop with the bare assertion that the housekeeper had been heard to threaten the coachman?"

"Is it possible that the housekeeper— 'Pshaw! People who kill never voluntarily go back to look at their work! At least I have heard people say so. But then all people are not alike.

"Where was the housekeeper between seven and eight o'clock last Friday night? I know. She was in the carriage house. I saw her leave the carriage house door. I was looking from my window. She passed up the side street wringing her hands, and came in at the front of the house! I did not see her again until the cry of murder had been raised in the kitchen. I stood by the door of the carriage loft when she came up the passage over the laundry. She looked pale and sick. She was wringing her hands just as I had seen her wring them on her way to the front door! Her first words were addressed to me. I remember what they were:

"He can't be dead! He can't be dead! Oh, my God! Look, some one, and see! Will no one go for a surgeon?"

"At that time no one had put into words the horrible deed that had been done. There had only been a general cry of murder and an excited movement toward the carriage loft when the chore boy had raised the cry. No one but the housekeeper knew what had taken place until they stood over the dead body in the room! How did she know?

"I never thought of all this until I began to write. Now that I have come to my senses what ought I to do? I know Nothing. Mrs. Clark Melville is strong in her defense of the housekeeper. The police officers have located her in the house between those fatal hours. I will speak only when some person whom I believe to be innocent has the hangman's noose about his neck. I will leave this house tomorrow. I can't restrain myself if that woman speaks to me again!"

I have copied, word for word, what I wrote in my diary on the Sunday night following the murder. How I kept it all to myself when the whole city was ringing with the crime is more than I can tell. Still, I must have dropped a hint of it somewhere. Otherwise the detective would never have sought me out. I am sorry he found me. I hate him for having offered me money. I hate myself for having listened to him. My only excuse is that I did not realize the terrible importance of the work I promised to perform.

If what I give the detective when he comes here tomorrow puts a noose about the housekeeper's neck I shall never forgive myself. If she goes to her death through me I can never close my eyes tight enough to shut out her stony face—never look from my window without seeing a still figure with a robe about its neck swaying to and fro between me and the pleasant street.

If I had only closed my lips when he offered me money I might burn what I have written. I can't do that now. He knew too well before he left the house what the manuscript he bribed me to supply would contain. After all, what I saw and what I heard may amount to nothing. Let the law decide. I have gone too far to draw back.

CHAPTER V.
CONTRIBUTED BY MISS CLARA ROBERTS.

Only this morning she loitered about my door.

To begin with, I know nothing whatever of the details of the murder of Mrs. Clark Melville's coachman. I didn't even go to the room where the body lay. I never bothered myself about the man living. Why should I bother myself about the man dead?

Mrs. Melville saw fit to make a great stir over the murder. I have been told that she even went so far as to have the public police brought into the house. Once in the house they made the most of their brief authority. They were not satisfied with asking questions about the servants. They actually asked questions about me. The public police ought to be taught their place.

I believe the housekeeper knows more about the murder than any one else. I believe she struck the blow with her own hand! I mean just what I have written. I will repeat it in any court of law.

The murder was the act of an insane person. The housekeeper is insane. I have known it for a long time. She believes herself to have claims on Richard Melville! I heard her say once that he was keeping her out of a fortune and out of a position in society. She said it to Richard himself. I can't understand why he didn't turn her out of the house. No one knows that I overheard the conversation they had in the parlor that morning. The impudent jade! She went there to do a servant's task, but neglected her work to insult the master of the house.

Richard's conduct was all that a gentleman should have been under the circumstances. He even refrained from disputing with the woman. He said that time would show what a wrong she was doing him, and went to his room. I thought when he passed the alcove where I sat concealed behind the curtains that he looked paler than usual, but it must have been the light that made him look so.

I am told by the servants that the housekeeper threw herself in Richard's way a great deal before his engagement to me was known in the house. Perhaps the foolish creature had hopes that he would make her his wife! I never realized before how presumptuous the lower classes can become under favorable circumstances.

Of one thing I am quite certain. Richard never encouraged her unwomanly advances. If their relations toward each other were ever other than those of master and servant, the fault was not Richard's.

The only wonder is that Mrs. Melville did not notice what was going on. It was the talk of the kitchen and the stable. The dead coachman remonstrated with the housekeeper time and time again. The cook heard him. The chambermaid heard him. Every person in the house except Mrs. Melville knew that the coachman and the housekeeper quarreled. Everybody except Mrs. Melville knew what they quarreled about. It was because the coachman objected to being put aside for Mr. Richard Melville.

I am told that the coachman followed the housekeeper into the family. Mrs. Melville told me with her own lips that they came into her employ within a week of each other, and that the housekeeper came first. The cook knows how they behaved toward each other when they met in the kitchen for the first time. They blundered over each other's names after being presented, and made hard work of becoming acquainted. In two days' time the cook found the coachman standing sullenly against the wall in the passage over the laundry and the housekeeper crying and wringing her hands before him!

I don't believe the housekeeper's name is Winters. I don't believe the coachman's name was Moore. I don't believe they met for the first time in Mrs. Clark Melville's kitchen. I don't believe the housekeeper ever lived in a lady's house before. I believe Mrs. Melville's coach to be the first one the coachman ever drove.

Mrs. Melville told me herself that the housekeeper came to her without references. I can't understand how, under such circumstances, Mrs. Melville came to give her employment. Whatever her motive was, she laid the foundation for a pretty mess when she did it. The papers are full of the affairs of the family. It would scarcely surprise me now to see my own portrait displayed in a morning paper side by side with that of the housekeeper or the murdered man. The audacity of the press ought to be restrained by law.

I wonder if Mrs. Melville knows what sort of a place her housekeeper left to enter her employ. She may have escaped from a prison. She may have abandoned surroundings which no virtuous woman would even attempt to describe. I know where she ought to go when she leaves this house. I understand there is an institution where insane criminals are restrained from further mischief. She ought to go there. She ought to go at once. I don't feel safe with her in the house.

She may murder me next. The only wonder is that she did not take it into her crazed brain to walk into Mr. Richard Melville's arms over my dead body. Now that the thought that my life is in danger so long as she remains in the house has suggested itself, many small circumstances of the past few days connect themselves together.

Only this morning she loitered about my door when I was dressing for breakfast. I knew she was there. I heard her footsteps in the hall. I know she paused at my door more than once, for when the footsteps ceased I heard her dress rustling against the casings of the door. I thought then that she was waiting to tidy the room during my absence. I know now that she never lingered there to gain an opportunity to do the chambermaid's work.

When I stepped into the hall she advanced to meet me. The next instant she hesitated. Before I reached the place where she stood she turned away and walked to the further end of the hall. As I passed down the stairway I saw her looking at me in the strangest manner. Her eyes betrayed a desire to address me. Her body shrank farther into the corner where she stood when my own eyes commanded her to speak. Her mind was urging her into an interview for which she was physically too weak.

I now recall many similar occurrences. Once she asked me for a moment of my time in a matter of the highest importance. Before she could come to the subject in hand we were interrupted by Mrs. Melville in person, who sent her away on some trifling errand. I was sorry for the interruption. The housekeeper seemed relieved.

I can't make out what she wanted to tell me. I can't understand why she don't speak if she has anything on her poor crazed mind that she imagines concerns me. She has aged terribly during the past month. I am told that diseases of the brain are quite likely to produce the physical changes I notice in her.

I shall make Mrs. Melville acquainted with the contents of this manuscript in the morning, and ask that the housekeeper be sent away to an asylum. No, I couldn't make the additional explanations Mrs. Melville would demand. I understand the person for whom this is written to be a private detective. I should have written it for no other person. I will leave the whole matter in his hands.

Are You Married?

A Husband should make it his business to see that his home is comfortably furnished. His wife will think more of him for it, knowing that he has her welfare at heart while he is away. Perhaps even now, the house needs another chair or two, or a new lounge, or a carpet, or maybe a few pictures to brighten it up and make it more cheerful. Look around and see, and remember that we are the people to furnish them to you at LOWEST LIVING PRICES, and on Easy Terms of Payment, if you wish it that way.

A Wife need never be without that little piece of furniture which she wants, if she would call her husband's attention to the fact, and get him to learn OUR price for it; and if money is a little tight with him, why, remind him of our easy payment plan by which he can enjoy the benefits of its use while paying for it. Look through the house, and send us a list of what you would like to have. We'll quote you prices that will surprise you.

N.B.—The fact that we are the largest house-furnishing establishment in the world is a pretty good recommendation.

WIT AND HUMOR.

What are you doing for a living these days, Goslin? asked Dolley. I breathe, replied Goslin with a weary sigh.

You are as full of airs as a music box, is what a young man said to a girl who refused to let him see her home. That may be, was the reply, but I don't go with a crank.

That comp's a humorist, quietly remarked the proof reader as he corrected the proof from English syndicate to English syndicate.

At Queretaro, Mexico, cakes of soap are used for currency, and are a legal tender for the payment of debts. That is about the only use soap is put to in that country.

The punch bowl stood on a stand in the hall, deserted and scorned by one and all. Young men passed by with unflinching tread. The old men looked on it—and shook their head.

Yet they lingered not—and all passed it by—For the punch bowl was empty—that is why.

No trouble about the menu.—A couple from the humbler walks of life came before the Justice of Peace to be married, when the ceremony being over the bride began to weep copiously. What's the matter? asked the new husband. I never told you that I don't know how to cook, sobbed the bride. Don't fret I'll not have anything to cook. I'm a poet.

Mr. Frills—Oh, John! I want you to let me have twenty dollars this morning. Tape & Threads are offering extraordinary inducements in their lace department. Mr. Frills—Twenty dollars! Lace department be blowed! Why, I can get a good pair of shoes—laces anywhere for five cents!

Minnie—Papa, what is your Velapuk? Papa—Why its the universal language. But who speaks it? Papa—Nobody.

Lady of the house—No; you don't answer the requirements of my advertisement. Aren't you a tramp? Tramp—No'm. Lady of the house—Not a tramp, eh? No'm. On the contrary, I lead a very sedentary life in the park.

Did you see the notice I gave you? said the editor to the grocer. Yes; and I don't want another. LITERARY NOTES.

There are two full pages and a graphic illustration of the bridge covering the era between Adam and Christ in Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper this week. Professor Totten, of Yale University, thereby demonstrates that the Millennium will come in 1899. The Alaska explorers continue their narrative with superb illustrations. The Confederate monument at Jackson; the marriage of Miss Elaine Goodale to an Indian; the Chicago Fair; New York street scenes; Apache prisoners in Alabama, and the National Chautauqua at Washington, are superbly illustrated. Price, ten cents. Printed in both German and English.

Emily S. Bouton, in the Toledo Blade, publishes the following entertaining facts about the brave, bold little woman who in her recent novel "Is This Your Son, My Lord?" has created such a genuine sensation by her fearless unmaking of conventional immorality and hypocrisy. The personality of an author who has won a wide reputation by long-continued and excellent work, or by some sudden and brilliant stroke of genius, always becomes of interest to the great world of readers. They want to know just how this wonderful woman—if it be a woman—carries herself; what is the color of her hair, her eyes; who were her father and mother, her grand-parents, and where is her home—in short, every minutest bit of information is greedily gathered in order to bring up a complete picture before her readers of the person who has so won their admiration. This is true of the writer, Helen H. Gardner, of that much-talked-of book, "Is This Your Son, My Lord?" and all sorts of paragraphs are going the rounds of the papers regarding her, of which the following is a specimen:

"Mrs. Helen Gardner, author of the novel, 'Is This Your Son, My Lord?' is about thirty years old, and is described as a really beautiful woman, a little above medium height, of well-rounded proportions, with an intellectual face, deep brown eyes, full red lips and high, broad forehead. She is a daughter of Julia Ward Howe, and possesses radical views."

This appeared in Current Literature, and it being naturally supposed that that excellent magazine must be correct, it has been widely copied. Helen H. Gardner is not, however, a daughter of Julia Ward Howe, nor is she even of New England origin. Her ancestors have always lived in Maryland or Virginia, and she, herself, first saw light in the latter State, near Winchester. She traces her family directly from the daughter of Lord Baltimore, Miss Calvert, who married a Mr. Chenoweth, he being the first sheriff of Baltimore County, Maryland. Her own father was Rev. A. G. Chenoweth; her mother a grandniece of Sir Robert Peel, so that it is evident that she has back of her the culture of generations. The personal description given in the paragraph quoted, is, I think, very nearly correct. Her face is full of intelligence, and the earnestness that is visible in all that she writes, looks forth from her dark eyes. It is easy to see that intense inward conviction points her pen, and it is this quality that makes her novel, with its background of realism, so vitally pregnant with meaning. This book has taken an almost unprecedented hold upon the thinking public, and I learn, has sold to the extent of 25,000 copies in five months. A knowledge of this fact will explain the raison d'être of the following communication from the author, who I can well believe, is almost submerged by the tide of communications setting towards her:

I have been asked a great many times to write things about myself for the papers. I have always declined. In the first place I dislike the look of anything like personal advertising, and in the second place I did not feel that my personality was of great interest to the public; but I do wish I could—without seeming to advertise myself, my personality—say one or two things.

A great many people write to me or send me little tokens that touch me deeply, and yet I cannot reply to half of them. Each one, doubtless, expects a full reply and feels hurt that none comes. It is not want of appreciation, but want of time and strength that prevents me from sending a kindly recognition and sincere thanks for the attention.

To-day brought me a large mail. It contained strange, beautiful and pathetic things. I appreciate them all, but I cannot reply to all. Let me explain and let me beg my unknown friends to accept my earnest thanks for their interest and warm expressions, whether these expressions take a written or objective form.

A sample of my mail is the one received today. It was composed of innumerable advertisements, of course, a number of letters from friends, a number from literary and scientific men and women who are known to me by name only: two sermons recently preached on my last book, with the "compliments" of their authors; several books with a request to "read and give your opinion;" two MSS. of aspiring authors with the same request—one a novel, the other a "new system of geometry;" the latter MSS. to be read with sufficient care to enable me to recommend it to a publisher! A pile of newspapers, with notices more or less personal and interesting, marked for me to read; a box of gold ore from a miner in New Mexico; a fine horned toad from a miner in old Mexico, with a letter saying it was his desire to send me something that no one else in this climate would own, and a very queer and amusing little fellow Bildad (that is the toad's name) is, too; a silver dagger bracelet, a most beautiful thing, of Spanish workmanship, from Central America; another box of ore and lava from Oregon, and last, most pathetic and touching, an intensely religious "Easter card" of the usual sort, with this written message on the outside of the envelope:—"God will bless your footsteps, wherever you go, my light-footed angel."

Yours truly,
MARY MAGDALENE."

This came from Cleveland, O., and if I knew how to reach the woman who sent it, I should certainly send her some personal message, but since I do not, I hope I may reach her this way and make her understand how deeply that little message of hers and her signature touched me. The letters I get from women are worth working hard for. They repay me for all I may do, for they are chiefly from those who need help, and who who feel that I have given it to them. The letters I get from men are chiefly from scientific, thoughtful men; men who are engaged upon the problems of life in one field or another. They are, as a rule, from calm, earnest, studious men, many of them well known in their fields of thought. But the women who write are chiefly mothers who cry out with wild, passionate protest, or with tearful inquiry. I wish that I might reply to all, but if I did so, I should do nothing else—my time and strength would all be consumed. It is for this reason that I should like to say through the press that each and all of these letters and evidences of interest and confidence are not only appreciated by me, but they are helpful and stimulating as well, and I hope my seeming neglect will pain no one, and will be understood, not as an unkindness, but simply as what it is—necessity.

Helen Gardner has a future before her, we devoutly hope and believe, in which she may, by strong, fearless grasp, handle the evils that eat into the heart of a people and bring, unless checked, their glory low in the dust. Everything that she has written shows the keen perceptions of a pure woman who has the courage to do battle for what she believes to be right. She has the literary gift of so choosing her words that they strike home, and hence cannot fail of their ultimate purpose.

EMILY S. BOUTON.

Hamlin Garland's new volume of short stories entitled "Main-Traveled Roads," just issued by the Arena Publishing Co., is creating a genuine sensation in Boston. Mrs. Louise Chandler Moulton's criticism of over two columns in the Sunday Herald awakened general interest, which has been greatly increased since the appearance of the work. In the course of her criticism, Mrs. Moulton says:—"Hamlin Garland's splendid qualities—his sympathy with humanity, his perception of the subtlest meaning of nature, his power to bring his people before you as if you had grown up in their door-yards,—these are his own."

JOSEPHINE DIEBITSCH-PEARRY.

We to-day bring the portrait of Josephine Diebitsch-Pearry, wife of Civil-Engineer R. E. Peary of the U. S. Navy, who will command the North Greenland expedition which is to go out under the auspices of the Philadelphia Academy of Science. Mr. Peary intends reaching the northern terminus of Greenland by way of the inland ice, instead of sailing along the coast, as was done by all other explorers, thus far. Mrs. Peary, brave woman that she is, will bear her husband company on his long journey. Her costume as shown by the cut, well becomes her, rendering her appearance exceedingly juvenile. Mrs. Peary intends creating more excitement with it, among the ladies of Whale Sound, than the handsome Parisian costume ever did among our ladies. Whale Sound, the centre of an Arctic region noted for its abundance of animal life and on account of its accessibility and the facility it offers for an exploring party to be self-supporting. Mrs. Peary is the only woman in the party.

STARTLING FACTS.

The American people are rapidly becoming a race of nervous wrecks, and the following suggests the best remedy: Alphonso Hempling, of Butler, Pa., swears that when his son was speechless from St. Vitus dance Dr. Miles' great Restorative Nerve cure him. Mrs. J. R. Miller, of Valparaiso, and J. D. Taylor, of Logansport, Ind., each gained 20 pounds from taking it. Mrs. H. A. Gardner, of Vista, Ind., was cured of 40 to 50 convulsions a day, and much headache, dizziness, backache and nervous prostration by one bottle. Trial bottles and fine book of marvelous cures, free at Wm. T. Lee's who recommends and guarantees this unequalled remedy.

The Miner's Life.

"Look here," said a man whose faith I sought to test; "if I did not feel dead open-and-shut sure of making my fortune here, all in good time, do you suppose I would stay? My mine is worth a good million just as it stands."

"Why don't you sell, and so put an end to this pork-and-beans and hot-biscuit existence of yours," I suggested. "Because no one would pay that price, in the first place, and because, in the second place, I shall take more than a million out of it when I get it properly developed. This developing is what costs. A friend of mine has paid forty thousand dollars for development work, and he hasn't reached the mineral yet. He wouldn't sell for any money. He would be a fool if he did, for he is right on top of the stuff. Now here is where Eastern people get fooled. They suppose, when they buy stock in a mine, that they are going to get their money back in dividends without delay. They don't understand this unproductive work, and so when the stock is used up they call the whole thing a swindle, and give it up. All mining operations are not swindles, by a long way, although they do not turn out well. There are swindles in every sort of business, and perhaps mining has had its full share. My idea about investing in mines is this: Don't invest in anything, not even real estate unless you can keep an eye on it to see that you get honest treatment."

The mining regions of Colorado are populous with such men as this. The pluck and patient endurance which these men show are almost beyond belief. Many of them make colossal fortunes eventually, and many, many do not. Ah, those many, many who do not! What broken hearts and wrecked and ruined lives lie hidden there! Surely that is a strange and grim fatality which takes the morning and mid-day of a man's life, and in the afternoon leaves only the ashes of unattained ambition. The rude cabins among the inhospitable mountain-peaks have their woful stories of disappointment and despair to those who can read their mute language. In them the hard-worked miner has had his dream of wealth and power and reunited love, while in his Eastern home his mother and friends wondered year by year why he did not send the money to pay off the mortgage on the farm, and why a coolness seemed to come between him and that neighbor's daughter whom he had hoped to deck with the gold of the Western mines. His Eastern friends cannot understand the hardships and chances of a miner's life, and too often they forget him as one who somewhat lacks the ability to make his way in the world. Thus, unnoticed by fortune and neglected by those friends who should cherish him most, he wears out his life in a mere hole in the ground; yet through it all, and even unto bitter old age, he has his dream of friends and home and love.—Harper's Bazar.

That tired feeling, so subtle and yet so overpowering, is entirely overcome by Hood's Sarsaparilla, which tones and strengthens the system and gives a good appetite. Try it this season.

The heathen are doubtless watching the present struggle between Orthodoxy and Heterodoxy with great interest. Why so? So they may know what kind of a gospel to believe when it is preached to them.

CHAPTER VI. CONTRIBUTED BY JOSEPH U. SMITH, DETECTIVE.

The first man I spoke with at Clifton looked me in the eye for an instant.

In the month of April, eighteen hundred and seventy, I was employed on the New York city detective force. Early one morning not far from the middle of the month I received orders to turn the case upon which I was then employed over to an associate and report at headquarters. In the inspector's private office I met Mr. Charles Gates. "The inspector has been kind enough to place one of his men at my disposal," he said, "and I see that he is resolved to place me under double the obligation of giving me the best man on his whole force."

I put down his exact words. Understand, if you please, that I am not responsible for Detective Gates' opinion of me. I made my report at the office, received my formal instructions and went away with Mr. Gates. At his office door he asked me an abrupt question:

"Can you prepare for a long journey and a month's absence from the city in two hours?"

I could prepare myself for both in less time than that, and I told him so.

"Then make your arrangements at once," he said, "and come here in two hours' time for your instructions."

I had served on the city force with Mr. Gates, and I knew his ways. I wasted no time in asking questions. In one hour and forty minutes I was back in his office prepared for a year's absence or a journey to the end of the earth. "You are to leave the city in half an hour," he said when we were alone, "and proceed to the state of Maine on a difficult and delicate mission. A Mrs. Maggie Winters, at present a resident of New York city, acknowledges the state of Maine as her birthplace. She receives letters bearing the Clifton postmark. I want you to go there. I expect you to return with a complete history of the life of Mrs. Maggie Winters from the time she cut her first tooth until the moment of her arrival in New York."

"Mrs. Maggie Winters in New York may be Mrs. Maggie Jones or Miss Anastasia Smith at Clifton. Go at the matter in your own way. Clifton is a small place. It won't take you long to ascertain the whereabouts of every person who has left there during the past ten years, so the name doesn't matter. If you get in a pinch go to some out-of-the-way telegraph station and ask for instructions."

He concluded by handing me a roll of money and a photograph of Mrs. Maggie Winters.

Now you know how I came to take a hand in the celebrated Melville murder case. At that time I was entirely ignorant of the importance of my mission. The man under whose orders I was acting desired accurate information regarding the previous life of one of the inmates of Mrs. Clark Melville's house. That was sufficient. My place was to do my work and ask no questions, and that is exactly what I tried to do.

The first man I spoke with at Clifton looked me in the eye for an instant and reached for my hand. No wonder. We had slept together many a night in the Army of the Cumberland, with only a ragged blanket between us and the sky. I found him with a pension, a postoffice and a pair of crutches. The brave fellow had deposited one of his legs as a guarantee of his devotion to his country at Lookout Mountain.

As a soldier my friend was a man to be trusted. As a postmaster he was a man to be studied. I spent three days in his company and found him true as steel. When I told him what I wanted he laughed at me for not telling him before.

"Well, I know how it is with you New York detectives," he said; "you all have a cipher trademark. Study it out and you discover these words, 'Never trust any one!'"

He said it in a laughing, offhand way, but he hit the nail square on the head.

That night he put me in possession of important information. Only two persons in the village knew Mrs. Maggie Winters. Every man, woman and child in the place knew Mrs. Caroline Green. They not only knew her, they pitied her. The persons who knew Mrs. Maggie Winters were Mrs. Caroline Green's sister and my friend, the postmaster. Mrs. Caroline Green had not been absent from her native place six weeks when her sister opened a correspondence with Mrs. Maggie Winters in New York. The letters were addressed to the street and number where Mrs. Clark Melville lived. Mr. Gates was right when he said that the name did not matter in a place the size of Clifton. He did not reckon, however, on my finding an old comrade in the Clifton postmaster—the only person in the village of whom the desired information could have been procured without great trouble and delay.

When I had located Mrs. Maggie Winters in Mrs. Caroline Green I went to the postmaster's wife for advice. I found her to be an intelligent woman, in every way worthy of the noble man who had done her the honor to make her his wife. She readily promised me all the assistance in her power, and asked me to tell her where and how to begin.

Teacher—Freddie, how is the earth divided. Freddy—Between them that's got it, and them that wants it.

SALEM, June 27, 1891

The silk trade is here, and the reasons for it are apparent everywhere—at our counter, in our windows, in our advertisements, at other counters.

The absorbing topic these days is the way we prune the prices of summer silks, those you are wanting now for shirt waists, whole dresses, etc.

The best of China and Japan (Japanese and American) wash silks and surahs, 62 1-2 and 75 cents—dollar qualities.

White Habutai, 85 cents. Japanese-Crepe de Chine, 75 cents. (These last two were especially bought for us in Japan by Mr. Matsuki; 15 to 20 per cent under customary prices).

Fifteen patterns yet left of the pure silk warp summer printed Bengalines, gray, buff and white grounds, at 39 cents—75 cent quality.

All of our plain 75 cent China silks, 50 shades, go down to 62 1-2 cents.

Black surahs, China and Japan silk, full assortments of them all, from 50 cents to $1.25 a yard.

[See window index of the stock.]

Rear counter, down middle aisle.

A phenomenal season this for printed cotton fabrics. There are no collections to compare with ours of India pongee, Shantongs and Tussah cloths, 12 1-2 cents a yard.

The largest items of assets are: Real estate, $50,506.00, stocks and bonds, $72,352.92. It was voted to refer to the same committee, together with the assignees, the consideration of action to be taken on the part of the creditors.

GENERAL NEWS.

An attempt was made last Sunday morning, by a burglar, to garrote Mrs. Kelly, wife of Rev. Claude Kelly, pastor of the Baptist Church, Leavenworth, Kansas. She arose and seeing a stranger in the room, turned as if she had not noticed him, when he felled her to the floor with a blow that rendered her unconscious. When her husband awoke, a noose was found around her neck. The burglar fled without booty.

The firm of Whitcomb & Paine, shoe manufacturers, of Holbrook, closed their factory this week for an indefinite period. They have run ahead of orders.

Albert Hamm, the well-known sculler, died at his home at Sombre, N. S., Monday morning, of hemorrhage of the lungs, after a prolonged illness.

The Iowa law, passed by the alliance legislature, declaring all grain elevators in the state, public warehouses, went into effect this week. Crops will be stored for an advance in price.

Border City mills of Fall River, were the scene of a $100,000 fire Monday morning.

L. G. Clark, of Woodstock, Vt., charged with murder of his mother-in-law, has been acquitted.

LOCAL LINES.

The School Board completed the work of examining the tests for admission to the high school, Monday evening. 50 applicants were admitted, including 1 from West Peabody, 10 from the Bowditch school, 18 from the Center school, 13 from the Wallis and 8 from the South Peabody schools. The standard for the classical course was 65 per cent, and 33 scholars were admitted to that division and 16 to the English division. Eddie Humphrey and Nellie Sullivan, of the Wallis, were admitted number one and two, and Harry Wiley and Nellie Daley of the Center, came next in order. The highest average was $9.1 and eleven obtained over 80 per cent.

The first anniversary and pay off of Peabody lodge No. 9, Progressive Benefit Order, which pay $100 to members in one year, was held in the Institute on Wednesday evening the Damon Family, advertised to appear, were not on hand and Miss Mamie Trask, elocutionist and Fred Blake baritone, assisted by Miss Katie F. Llanehan pianist, were obliged to sustain the burden of entertainment. They did it acceptably too. The Grand Officers were present and explained the working of the institution. The treasurer distributed the money to the ten fortunate policy holders, $100 each. The entire cost to members was $39. Quite a number rejoined for another year. The officers for the coming year are N. C. Dodge, President, W. C. Smith, Secretary, and Harry G. Robbins, Treasurer.

Clarence W. Moore has applied for a patent on an improved seal or closer for barrels. The cover of the barrel is made of wood and fits the top closely, the flange having a rubber cushion, which makes the barrel perfectly airtight when the cover is secured. This is done by means of two wrought iron ears affixed to the ends of the wooden bar which is attached to the cover, crossing it in the centre. The two ears fit under two iron cleats bolted to the sides of the barrel. By means of a small lever the cover can be still more firmly secured, and then by a little screw attachment in the centre of the cover, the bar and cover can be locked so that it is impossible to move them until the nut is turned. Several experiments have demonstrated the practicability of the invention, and the tests that it has been put to proves its success. Mr. Moore makes large claims for his invention, and the uses to which it can be adapted cover several pages of his patent papers. The barrel is now at Flannigan Enos' machine shop.

The Truant School at last to be Established at Lawrence.

The three Commissioners appointed to determine the value of the Lawrence Industrial School, reported the result of their inquiries last Saturday and fixed the sum to be paid by the county to the city of Lawrence, at $15,490.84. The finding is satisfactory to the city and to the County Commissioners. July first, the Superior Court will be asked to pass an order turning over to the charge of the County Commissioners the twenty-seven boys now confined in the institution, after which time the County Truant School which has been so long asked for and so persistently denied by former boards will become an established institution. The Commissioners to make the appraisal were Mr. Dow of Exeter, N. H., Daniel G. Walton of Wakefield and William H. Wiggin of Lowell.

Unveiling of the Beechers Statue.

The statue of Henry Ward Beecher, erected in Brooklyn, N. Y., by popular subscription, was unveiled this week with impressive ceremonies. The figure is of large size, and Beecher is represented standing erect, with a cloak thrown over his shoulders, and a soft hat in his left hand, a costume in which he was frequently seen. The statue was unveiled by a granddaughter of Mr. Beecher, a daughter of Wm. Beecher. The cost of the statue was $35,000.

Place to Buy Goods?

What is an Emporium? What goes into its make up? Why the term? The term at once suggests something large. A business conducted on an extensive scale. A mart of trade where everything of a special branch or several branches of a particular line are gathered together under one head. Such a combination properly managed affords at once immense advantages over single department stores. Advantages in the way of trading with one salesman. Buying your goods at one place. Quicker service. Contracting a single bill in place of three or four. And lower prices ALWAYS from the fact that the items of expense in running such a store are made smaller in a dozen ways. Such is our Emporium, and its popularity is best attested by our constantly increasing trade. Remember that we have four floors fully stocked with GOODS THAT SELL.

Wedding Bells.

A brilliant wedding took place at St. John's Church, Tuesday morning, the contracting parties being Miss Catherine M. Houghton and Dr. John B. Mahoney, formerly of this town, now located in Medford. Long before the eventful hour, a large crowd of friends had gathered at the church to witness the ceremony. At the appointed time the bridal party arrived and were ushered down the aisle while the organist rendered Mendelssohn's Lohengrin most delightfully. Miss Nellie Lane, of Boston, acted as bridesmaid and Eugene T. McCarthy as best man. The ushers were Charles J. Houghton, Patrick H. Mahoney, Frank Campbell of Boston and Dr. D. F. Murphy of Woburn. The bride was charmingly attired in white silk draped with Chiffon lace. The bridal veil was fastened with a cluster of lilies of the valley. The bridesmaid was dressed in pale blue silk trimmed with pearls, and bore in her hand a bunch of bride roses. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Philip J. O'Donnell, of East Cambridge, a cousin of the bride, assisted by Rev. M. J. Masterson. The nuptial mass was celebrated, and at the offertory Mrs. Frank Tighe rendered the Ave Maria with fine expression, giving exquisite effect to the ceremonies. At the conclusion of the services at the church, a reception was given at the residence of the bride, on Dustin street, to the near relatives and very intimate friends. The bridal party will spend the honeymoon at the mountains. They will reside in Medford. A great many presents were received by the happy couple, among them was an elegant French clock from the Library and Lyceum Society of St. John's Church, a magnificent silver ice pitcher and salver, from the employees of Geo. W. Pepper, two silver services, a large assortment of cut glass articles, several lamps and pictures and a great quantity of bric-a-brac.

Rev. Arthur W. Littlefield was installed pastor of the Unitarian church at Wayland, Mass., on Wednesday. Members of the Unitarian church in this town were present. The church is one of the oldest in the state. The parish dates back to 1643. The present edifice was erected in 1815. Mr. Littlefield was born in Peabody and for several years was engaged as clerk in the South Danvers National Bank and feeling an inclination to enter the ministry he attended the Unitarian Theological School at Meadville, Pa., where he was graduated in the class of 1890. He supplied a number of pulpits during his college term and always gave excellent satisfaction.

The Peabody High school base ball nine met the Beverly High school nine on Wednesday and victory crowned their efforts. The score was 21 to 13. They play the Gloucester High school team next week.

Lawrence Skidd was arrested in a drunken condition near the Ruggles estate on Tremont street, Sunday evening, for making a disturbance. He was fined $5.00. Several others were with him but they escaped.

Jerry Hannon had some words with Nathan Bushby over some grass last Sunday and during the debate, Mr. Bushby claimed he was assaulted by Hannon. The case will be ventilated in the police court.

Holten Lodge, I. O. O. F., have elected the following officers for the ensuing term: W. Fred Munroe, N. G.; George S. Smith, V. G.; Henry Baetje, secretary; George F. Sanger, treasurer.

Two alarms were rung in from box 18 at the corner of Walnut and Upton streets, on Tuesday afternoon. Both were promptly responded to by Hose 1, but there was little to be done when the scene of the conflagration was reached.

At midnight on Monday, two men who gave the names of Frank McCarthy and John Murphy of Peabody, Mass., were arrested in Montreal on suspicion of robbery. McCarthy confessed that he had stolen some money and two watches from his father-in-law, James Ganley, of Peabody. Chief Feasley was notified.

The P. H. S. base ball club donned their new uniforms Saturday and defeated the Salem Athletics on Square field by the score 28 to 2. The high school nine played a good game and did some hard hitting. They played the Beverly high school nine on Beverly common Wednesday afternoon. Any club desiring to arrange a game with the P. H. S. ball club should address F. V. McCarthy, captain and manager.

Quite a mishap occurred at the power station on Derby Wharf, belonging to the Essex Road this week. Every thing was about ready to start up and a trial of the boilers and engines was being made, when a cast iron pipe was burst, shattering the side of the building. It is thought there was a flaw in the casting. The accident will delay running the power plant perhaps a fortnight. The damage will be made good by Walworth Co., contractors.

Mr. B. N. Moore who has been associated with J. Alba Davis & Co., of Boston, for about ten years has severed his connection with that house and is engaged in business on his own account. He will manufacture India Goat and sheep skins. His store is located at 89 High street, Boston. We wish him success.

Bert Phillips of Salem, who has been employed at the Press Office for about three months feeding presses, met with a painful accident Monday afternoon. He inadvertently put the fingers of his left hand on the edge of the platen of a Golding job press, and not removing his hand quick enough, when the press closed to make an impression, the ends of his fingers were badly jammed. Dr. Bean dressed the wounded members.

Three of the State Inspectors of buildings visited Peabody on Wednesday and examined the Center and Wallis school buildings. They pronounced the Center school all right in every part. The Wallis school was also found to be in good condition although one truss in the attic had settled slightly, but perhaps not for several years. In the judgment of the State Board both buildings are perfectly safe. An official report will be made by them more in detail.

The school committee held a meeting on Tuesday evening and re-elected all of the teachers. The janitors of last year were also re-elected. Mr. James Rodie was elected janitor of the High School, he being a practical machinist, it was thought that he would be better fitted to take charge of the steam heating apparatus. Mr. Alfred Mackenzie was re-elected a janitor and assigned to the Warren school. The next regular meeting of the Board will be held on Monday evening.

We were shown some fruit boxes and baskets by George Stevens, one day this week, that were purchased by him to demonstrate the folly of buying of irresponsible parties. Some of the boxes that showed up fairly well with the cover properly adjusted upon the bottom, proved to hold but just a pint, while a basket that was an excellent imitation of a full quart basket, held very little over a pint. Mr. Stevens sells his small fruits by measure if desired, but the standard baskets and boxes put out by him hold full measure.

Boston's greatest amusement this summer and in fact the most extensive out door entertainment provided in New England will be Pain's new spectacular production "The Last Days of Pompeii" to be given on the Pompeian Grounds Saturday evening July 4th and continuing nightly for two months, Sunday excepted. The spectacle will be given on a stage in the area of a city block. It will require 10,000 yards of scenery, 500 performers male and female, 600 thorough-bred horses will be seen in the most exciting of contests on a 1-4 mile track. Among the racing features will be grand Roman hippodrome chariot races, with daring lady racers. Athletes and acrobats such as the Livingstone Bros. Wm. Davis, Barton and others will give exhibitions of the Roman sports and games of eighteen centuries ago. Over $25,000 has been expended in preparing the grounds; the largest grand stand in world comfortably seating 12,000 is provided. Low round trip and excursion rates are being arranged on all roads running into Boston, and the grounds are remarkably easy of access. Succeeding each performance will be given the finest display of fireworks ever seen in Boston, or in fact in this country; and a myriad of pyrotechnic effects have been prepared for the opening evening with especial reference to patriotic character of the day. Admission with comfortable chair has been placed at 50 cents. Children under 10 years half price.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that contain Mercury, as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. To those unacquainted with the law relating to inspection of public buildings it may seem strange that the request to the State Inspectors to examine the school buildings was sent by the Selectmen instead of the School Board. But the statute of 1888 provides that the Inspectors shall only make inspection of such buildings at the request of the mayor and aldermen of cities or the selectmen of towns. The school committee were thus obliged to send the request through the selectmen.

A few evenings ago, some of the regular crowd of loafers that make life miserable in front of the Post Office evenings, accosted a small newsboy about nine and bought a paper. The urchin not suspecting the cowardly intent of the loafers delivered the paper into the hand of one of the party who then refused to pay for it, and proceeded to tantalize the little fellow by offering to return it and then snatching it away again. The boy finally began to cry which attracted the attention of a kind hearted store-keeper near by, who came out and enquiring the cause of the boy's sobbing, gave him the price of his paper and sent him home happy. For this act of kindness the hoodlums reviled the kind tradesman with all manner of vituperation until an officer chanced to pass that way when they decamped. The names of the parties are not known and it is fortunate for them that they are not.

THE NEWVILLE MURDER

EDITED BY ALFRED B. TOZER
COPYRIGHT BY AMERICAN PRESS ASSOCIATION, INC.

"First," I explained, "go among the gossips and turn their tongues in the direction of Mrs. Caroline Green. It will not be long before you will be in possession of all the important circumstances in Mrs. Caroline Green's life, from the time she cut her first tooth until she bought her ticket for New York. Second, cultivate Mrs. Caroline Green's sister. I want to know why Mrs. Caroline Green became Mrs. Maggie Winters in New York, and why she went to New York. If she is obstinate, tell her that concealment will only serve to strengthen the theory which has already placed her sister under the ban of suspicion. Then put your discoveries in narrative form and bring it to me."

CHAPTER VII.
CONTRIBUTED BY THE POSTMASTER'S WIFE.

She gave me the letter to read.

I first remember Mrs. Caroline Green as little Carrie Gould. We played in the same games in the village school ground and stood side by side—usually very near the foot—in the juvenile spelling class. Her school life closed before mine, and my next distinct recollection of her begins at the time she became the wife of Maurice Green.

Like many another New England girl in those days, Carrie Gould wedded the man of her choice one day only to lose him the next. Maurice Green married her in Federal blue and marched away next morning, to the front, leaving his wife of a day to mourn herself into a fit of sickness over the separation. At that time I secretly thought she made too great a display of her grief. In a year I was heartily ashamed of myself for having been so uncharitable. The following autumn my own husband, to whom I had been married but a few weeks, enlisted and went away.

In the desolate days that followed I became the almost constant companion of Mrs. Green. Together we traced on a map the movements of the army divisions, of which our respective husbands were, to us, by far the most important part, and together we waited, hand in hand and with hushed breath, for the gossiping postmaster to distribute the daily mail.

From the very first Mrs. Green seemed to abandon all hope of her husband ever returning to her alive. Time and again I tried to reason her out of what I believed to be a morbid idea born of feeble health, but all I could say had no effect upon her. She shuddered over the letters that came to her from the south, and often hid them under her shawl without daring to look at the handwriting of the address. I knew too well what she feared. She feared a message from some kind comrade that her husband had fallen in action, or had died unattended and uncared for in some great army hospital.

"I know how it will all end," she said to me one day, with tears in her eyes; "some day the message I have dreaded so long will come, and then they will find me lying dead just where I received it, with the fatal thing in my hand."

Now and then a soldier from the company in which her husband had enlisted came home on a furlough to recover from a severe illness or a wound. Every one of them brought favorable reports of Maurice Green. He was in excellent health; he was winning an honorable name as a brave and loyal man; his conversations with his comrades convinced all who cared to listen that he was true as steel to his girl wife in far off Maine, and that he looked forward hopefully and proudly to the life they would live together when the war was over or when his term of enlistment had expired.

"True to the flag and true to his wife!" she would say on such occasions in a way that wasn't at all like her everyday talk. "You needn't enlarge on that. I knew that when he went away. If he deserted, I should never look in his face again; if he forgot the solemn vows he made the day he left me, I know I should follow him to the end of the earth, if it was necessary, to take his life! But he will do neither," she would add, "I know he will do neither! They will kill him in some of their wretched battles and I shall never see him again!"

Perhaps the person for whom this manuscript is being prepared will object to my loss of time in reading what I have written regarding Mrs. Caroline Green's moods and fears. I can't help it. I was asked to be minute. How can I better obey orders than by describing exactly the kind of a woman she was in those days? If you want to know whether Mrs. Caroline Green would be apt to do a certain thing or not, just figure out in your own mind whether a morbid mind, and a jealous mind, and a revengefully jealous mind, like the one I have attempted to describe, would be likely to lead a person on to do the deed that has been done. There you have it, Mr. Joseph U. Smith, and I hope and pray from the very bottom of my heart that you will figure it out wrong if any harm is to come to Caroline Green by reason of your figuring it out right!

Have I mentioned the fact that Mrs. Green at that time had a brother living in New York? Well, she had a great, stalwart, kindhearted brother there, and he was so wrapped up in his sister and she in him that they spent a small fortune every year in postage stamps. I can best describe this brother by saying that in disposition and bent of mind he was the exact counterpart of his sister. There! I have described two persons in the clumsy paragraphs you are likely to object to!

One day Carrie came to me with a letter from this brother in her hand and the brightest look on her face I had ever seen there.

"See," she said, holding out the missive, "Maurice is coming home!"

She gave me the letter to read, and I will write down what it said about Maurice Green as near as I can remember it.

"I shall soon be robbed of my long, cheering letters from Clifton," the writer began, "for somebody you are very much interested in is coming home, and I shall be forgotten. Can you guess who it is? Well, I will not keep you in suspense. I saw Maurice Green on Third avenue yesterday, and the day before yesterday too, for that matter! I tried my best to get near enough to him to take him by the hand and send my regards to the desolate little girl who writes me such lonesomely loving letters from Maine, but the crowd was so great that I couldn't even get near enough to attract his attention. Never mind. You can give him my address and he will be sure to call when he comes back. He may be looking over your shoulder as you read this, and I beg of you to stop reading long enough to impress upon his mind the reasonableness of my request."

After that we watched every train from the south, but Maurice never came. It nearly killed Carrie. And no letters of a later date than the one from New York came from the army.

"It was not Maurice my brother saw in New York," Carrie would say, wringing her hands; "he is lying dead somewhere in the south!"

In a few weeks—how well I remember the snow on the ground and the keen winter air that day!—we found two letters in Carrie's little box at the postoffice. One was from New York, in her brother's handwriting. One was from a Federal hospital camp in Virginia, and the writing was not that of her husband. The first letter reported Maurice's presence in New York. The second recorded his accidental death in Virginia. The New York letter bore the latest date.

That night—without a word or a hint even to me—Mrs. Caroline Green left for New York. I have never seen her since.

CHAPTER VIII.
CONTRIBUTED BY THE CORONER'S CLERK.

"I can't go on with the farce."

I remember the official inquiry in the matter of the death of Mrs. Clark Melville's coachman. I think I have good reason to remember it. I wrote testimony enough in the case to bring a dead man back to life, if such a thing were possible. I hate writing testimony. If the coroner isn't allowed a stenographer by the state before long I shall resign. It isn't fair to expect so much writing of a poor girl who has only her head and her two hands to rely on for support.

Now, you needn't attempt to hurry me. It will do you no good, Mr. Charles Gates, to keep saying "Cut it short." If you will take yourself and your cigar out of the office I will make a synopsis of the testimony taken in this case in my own way.

To begin with, I didn't see the body. I never do. The testimony is always taken here in this carpeted room. The witnesses stay out there in the public room until they are wanted. When I reached the office that morning—it was in April, I remember, and some one had given me a spray of wildwood flowers on my way down town—I found a woman walking up and down the public office crying and wringing her hands. There was an air of youth about her, yet her eyes were faded and her hair was gray. Perhaps you have seen old young women yourself. If you have you know how this woman looked.

She had my sympathy the moment I saw her. I never saw such misery reflected on any other human face as I saw on hers that morning.

"I am Mrs. Mary Winters," she said as I stepped into the room. "I am here as a witness in the case to come before the coroner this morning."

I gave her a seat in the private office, and she just sat there and cried until the coroner came in. I remember that I laid my spray of flowers down only for a moment, and she took it in her arms, as she might have taken a baby, and cried over that. I knew from that—

"Oh, you want her testimony, do you? Well, there wasn't much of it. She cried a great deal, wrung her hands a great deal, and got all tangled up in her answers. She acted to me like a woman who was trying to talk about something of which she knew nothing. At last she broke down entirely."

"I can't go on with the farce," she cried. "You can take me away to prison if you like. I have testified falsely about the coachman's name. He was my own brother! His name was Emmett Gould. I am to blame for his awful death. Stop your inquiry and take me to prison!"

And from that time to the time she left the stand nothing more could be got out of her. Only for the presence of the officer who had made the original inquiry at the Melville house she would doubtless have been detained by the coroner as a suspicious person. This officer explained how impossible it was that she could have had anything to do with the murder, and the coroner believed him. It seems that the officer had located her in another part of the house at the time the murder was committed, and couldn't abandon his theory. He knew a great deal about who didn't commit the murder, but when it came to finding out who did he very promptly gave it up. Somehow these police officers have an irresponsible way of giving everything up—except their places and their salaries!

You needn't object to that last sentence, Mr. Charles Gates. You are too sharp a man not to know it to be true.

Mrs. Clark Melville's testimony is the next on my record. You want that, I suppose, in order to keep the connection. A very dignified witness was Mrs. Clark Melville. It disgusted me to see how they all cringed before her. Her testimony amounted to nothing so far as the real point of the inquiry was concerned. I can't see what the coroner wanted her for, unless he was interested with her in clearing Mrs. Mary Winters of the suspicion which had somehow become attached to her since the night of the murder.

You would thank me to write down what she said, eh, and have less to say regarding my own impressions? I tell you she didn't say much of anything! I'll supply you with an exact copy of it, combining the questions and the answers so as to make it intelligible. Make what you can of it:

"I was subpoenaed at my own request. I can tell you nothing about the unfortunate affair which, for the time being, has brought my family and myself into public notice. I am informed, however, that anything relating to any of the persons now under suspicion will be accepted by the coroner. If I am to rely upon the public prints and the hints of the public officials, a member of my household is one of the suspected parties. I refer to my housekeeper, Mrs. Maggie Winters, and I am here in her interest."

"Don't think by that that I intend to argue for her. It is my purpose only to repeat a strange story she told me a few days after the murder. She told it in confidence, and I only repeat it now with her consent."

"She came from a New England village at the request of her brother—the murdered man—in search of her husband. Perhaps the word husband expresses too much in this case. I should have said in search of a man who wedded her one day, and the next became lost in the great mass of Federal troops marching south. Three days after her arrival in New York the brother and sister entered my employ."

"The records of that portion of the Federal army to which my housekeeper's husband belonged show him to have been accidentally killed in a hospital camp in Virginia in the winter of 1863. The letters my housekeeper received from this city, both before and after the date of her husband's death, according to the army records, show her husband to have been alive and well here. These letters, of course, were written by her brother, and it was her brother's hand and brains that urged and guided her on in the hopeless search."

"All the years she lived in my house the search went on. She came to me a young and pretty country girl. I passed her in the outer room a moment ago a worn and faded woman."

"Until this suspicion came upon her—until she was accused of murdering in cold blood the only person she had left to lean upon—she never confided her secret trouble to me. Until he lay dead in my house I never knew that my coachman was my housekeeper's brother."

"Even now Mrs. Winters will confide to no one—not even to me—the result or progress of her search. The most she will say is that she located her husband a long time ago. She refuses to tell me whether she has met and accused him to his face of his perjury. She refuses to tell me why he deserted her. She only tells me enough to drive from my mind any suspicions I might have had regarding her complicity in the coachman's death. When I, in the kindest manner, press her to confide further in me she only cries and wrings her hands just as you all saw her do here a few moments ago."

"Up to this time I have been able to arrive at no definite conclusion regarding the matter. I am not even certain that the housekeeper is not insane on the subject of her husband. I have known people to become so affected by trouble of less importance than hers."

"I have now taken steps to place the question of the death of her husband beyond a doubt. Trusty men are now, at my expense, tracing the regiment to which he belonged from the day of his enlistment until the time it was mustered out of the service. After that all New York shall be searched. If her husband lives she shall look upon his face again. If he be dead she shall at least find rest by the narrow grave where he sleeps."

There, Mr. Charles Gates, you have the testimony of Mrs. Clark Melville. Now you can pay me for my work and go away. I don't like the atmosphere which seems to cling about this mystery. Why couldn't Mrs. Melville have attended to her own affairs? Then the public officers would have taken hold of the matter, and long before now the whole affair would have been sound asleep in some dusty old pigeonhole!

CHAPTER IX.
CONTRIBUTED BY AN EX-HOSPITAL ATTENDANT.

My name is Edward L. Pelton. I am in the employ of a Beekman street firm as bookkeeper. A week ago Mr. Charles Gates came to my place of employment and asked me to put into writing whatever I could remember of certain events which took place in a Virginian hospital in the winter of 1863.

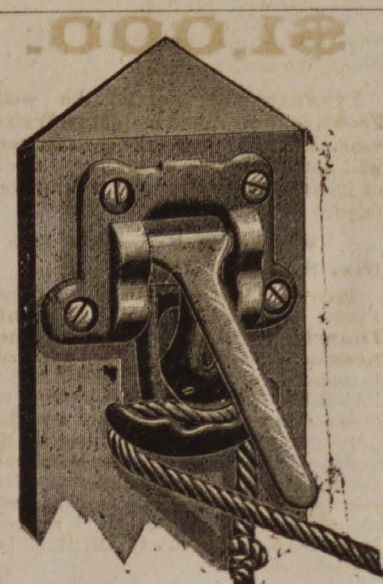

"What I want," he explained, "is your best recollection of a private named Maurice Green. The hospital records show that he was for some weeks in a

Men Who Hurt a Town.

An enterprising and shrewd paper prints this list of men who hurt a town: All who oppose improvements; men who never push their business; those who distrust public-spirited men; those who run down the town to strangers; those who show no hospitality to its visitors; men who envy their neighbors prosperity; men who oppose everything that does not originate with them; men who wear long faces when strangers speak of locating in town; those who find fault with all enterprises with which they are connected; men who oppose every public enterprise that is of no pecuniary benefit to themselves; men who never subscribe for, advertise in, or in any patronize their local papers, and are always ready to find fault with everything they contain.

HOW TO SUCCEED.

This is the great problem of life which few satisfactorily solve. Some fail because of poor health, others want of luck but the majority from deficient grit—want of nerve. They are nervous, irresolute, changeable, easily get the blues and "take the spirits down to keep the spirits up," thus wasting money, time, opportunity and nerve force. There is nothing like the Restorative Nerve discovered by the specialist, Dr. Miles, to cure all nervous diseases, as headache, the blues, nervous prostration, sleeplessness, neuralgia, St. Vitus dance, fits and hysteria. Trial bottles and fine book of testimonials free at Wm. T. Lee's.

Five prisoners escaped from Charlestown prison on Monday. Four have been recaptured.

The entire town of Harlan, Missouri, has been submerged by floods this week.

Her majesty's ship Nymph left Esquimaux last Sunday to cruise in Behring Sea in company with the United States steamer Mohican. The Pheasant will also cruise in company with an American—the steamship Alert.

ward of which you had charge. When you have located the man, put whatever you can recollect of his life there down in black and white and you shall be well paid for your trouble.

At the first interview I frankly explained to Mr. Gates that it would be impossible for me to furnish him the desired information. At that time I had not the slightest recollection of ever having seen or heard of a private named Maurice Green. He refused to take no for an answer.

"I will give you a week's time to think it over," he said, "before I apply to others who shared your life in the hospital. I am told that Maurice Green was connected with a very important event at the hospital that winter. Recall, if you can, all the people connected with every one of that winter's important events, and you will come to what I want."

For a week I had no peace of mind night or day. I was anxious to aid Mr. Gates, who seemed a very pleasant gentleman, and I was anxious to earn the money he was ready to pay for the work he had asked me to do. A dozen times I abandoned the task in despair. My treacherous memory brought to me no hint of an important event in which Private Maurice Green was a central figure. At last a newspaper clipping found among my army papers put me on the right track. When Mr. Charles Gates came to me at the end of the allotted time I was ready for him.

"I have found your important event," I said as he came to my desk, "and I have connected Private Maurice Green with it. He was killed by an accidental explosion in the night time of one of the coldest days I ever saw in Virginia."

"You have made a good beginning," he said, "and the rest ought to be easy. Write down everything you can remember of the man from the time he entered the hospital up to the time of his death, and I will call in three days for the manuscript. And," he added, turning back after he was well on his way out of the office, "you may as well begin your narrative by stating, in unmistakable terms, all your reasons for believing that it was Private Maurice Green who was accidentally killed that night in Virginia."

How do I know it was Maurice Green who was killed that night? I am positive of it. But that is a woman's reason. Let me set down here, in detail, all I can now remember of the man.

He was placed in my ward early in the winter. At the time he was suffering from a species of brain fever, but he recovered quite rapidly. A New York officer similarly affected came in at the same time, and I remember now that both gained rapidly, and that they became quite intimate as soon as they were able to sit up in their cots and talk. It is my impression that at the time I had some particular reason for keeping the two men together in my mind, but I cannot now recall what it was. It is quite probable, however, that I thought of each in connection with the other because their treatment was about the same, and because one occupied cot number ninety-eight and the other cot number ninety-nine. I cannot now recall which number was Green's.

Both men were very weak when they arrived at the hospital, and both were unconscious. No wonder. The poor fellow had traveled a long distance, lying in the open air because uncovered wagons were the best the department could then supply. Their clothing was not sufficient to protect them from the cold, and every particle of it had to be destroyed on account of the vermin which the blankets used to cover them during their journey had communicated to it. When they were able to leave their cots each was supplied with a private's uniform.

Every incident of the night of Green's death comes vividly to my mind as I write. For the first time in many years in that part of Virginia a heavy fall of snow had rendered the roads impassable. Our supplies had given out, and all efforts to secure communications with the outside world had proved unavailing. Starvation stared us in the face. Even now I find it impossible to control my temper when I think of the needless misery our patients suffered. Some one blundered in locating and victualing the camp. Let it go down in history that way.

Late in the evening a number of convalescents were grouped about the stove at one end of the room. Fuel was scarce, and the poor fellows had covered themselves with the blankets from their beds in order to aid a miserable fire in supplying enough warmth to sustain life.

Green was in one of his bad moods. I remember, and, as usual, had the best place at the fire. My present impression of Green is that he was a very selfish man. I will go one step farther. He was a jealous minded man and a willful man. His instincts were brutal. I used to think that his monstrous bump of self esteem was all that kept him from overriding all the rights of others in order to gratify his own desires—in fact, from becoming an outlaw. His companions tolerated him, but I don't think he had the honest friendship of a man in the hospital.

Don't blame me if I say hard things of the dead, Mr. Charles Gates. My instructions are to give, in the interest of an inquiry now being made, a description of the man's temper and bent of mind as I understood them. You have my personal ideas of the man. Take

I said just now that Green was in one of his bad moods. I should have said jealous moods. One member of the group about the stove had been explaining to his companions the life he had abandoned when he entered the army. The life that he told was a life that any one might envy. I think—yes, I am positive—that the talker was the officer from New York, for he told of a luxurious home and an indulgent mother in that city. He seemed to begin at the time he bestrode his first hobby horse in the bay window of a sunny nursery and continue through every detail of his school and club life. The man had just passed through a long siege of brain fever. He was weak in body. Pardon me if I say also that he was weak in mind. We all know how the body affects the mind. He was lonely and homesick. He had eyes and thoughts only for the happy scenes of home. His word pictures affected me strangely. I pitied him. Private Green listened to every word with an eagerness that all noticed. Then he settled back in a sudden silence which I believed to be a jealous silence. They were the last words he ever heard.

At that moment a soldier who had been foraging in the nearly empty storehouse made his appearance. He carried in his hand a small package. As he advanced toward the hungry group at the stove he busied himself in unavailing efforts to remove the frozen paper which concealed the true character of his discovery. The icy surface of the package resisted all his efforts, and he, too impatient to await the slow process of thawing by the fire, seized a blazing brand from the stove and applied it to the package. The frozen paper thawed slowly and then melted away, revealing a second wrapping of cloth.

An instant later we were thrown from our feet. The rows of cots became mingled in awful disorder. The stove gave up its blazing brands and fell apart like walls of wax. A sulphurous smoke filled the room, and a second later I saw the cold blue sky looking in through our shattered roof. The soldier had applied a blazing brand to a package of gunpowder.

Four persons were wounded by the explosion and two were instantly killed. When I recovered sufficiently to realize what had taken place, the officer from New York lay on his bed moaning with a horrible wound in his head. He recovered after weeks of illness. The wound and excitement threw him back into brain fever. One of the dead was the foraging soldier. The other was Maurice Green.

JUST A LITTLE KNOWLEDGE.

The Possession of It Does Not Pay Very Well in the Long Run.

"It doesn't pay to know just a little about things," said one of those men who are always after "general information." "Judging from experience I thoroughly agree with the gentleman who said, 'A little knowledge is a dangerous thing.' For example, I have never been able to eat an egg with thorough relish—though exceedingly fond of them for their flavor—since I learned that the little spot on one side of the yolk, toward the butt end, is the germ of the chicken. You may cook an egg in what fashion you please, but whether it is boiled, poached or fried, you will find that germ always conspicuous, when once you know it is there, and you cannot eat the egg until you have carefully removed it. It would add considerably to my happiness if I could believe today what I was taught in the nursery, that the white of an egg makes the bones of the subsequent fowl and the yolk the flesh, instead of knowing, as I do, that both are merely the food by the consumption of which the germ is developed.

"But that is only a very minor instance. My slight knowledge of pathological anatomy, amounting to the merest smattering, is a source of continual distress to me. Though an abstemious man, on the whole, I cannot indulge in a glass of any alcoholic beverage without realizing that I am subjecting my system to the action of a 'heart stimulant' which accelerates the pulsations of that organ injuriously. The slightest sensation of any sort about my chest causes me to imagine, despite myself, that the tubercular bacilli are beginning to get in their deadly work upon my pulmonary system.

SATURDAY, JULY 4, 1891.

IN ORDER that the office may be closed upon the Fourth, we issue the PRESS this week one day earlier than usual.

THE WEATHER is unusually cool for this season of the year but a large majority enjoy the relaxation from the customary sultry atmosphere that characterizes the Fourth of July.

THERE WILL be no unusual observance of Independence Day in Peabody this year. A few private displays of fire fireworks will be in order in the evening but most of the celebrating will be done in a quiet way or out of town.

WE PRESUME it will be necessary to devote the usual column next Saturday to accidents from toy pistols. As long as the boys are permitted to indulge in such dangerous sport, accidents which make the summer vacation a burden and perhaps disfigure the victims for life, will continue.

GENERAL MANAGER and Editor Clapp, in retiring from the Boston Journal, makes the announcement in a characteristically modest manner. Mr. Clapp's health is very seriously impaired and we hope the retirement which has thus been rendered imperative will enable him to regain his former vigor.

THE TRIAL Justice Courts are not affected by the new inebriate law. Those who are wont to appear before our local magistrate will thus find no change in the existing charges.

Evidently the legislature had more respect for the judgment of rural magistrates than for those who preside over city tribunals.

IN SPITE of the cold weather, gubernatorial candidates seem to be sprouting freely. The name of William E. Barrett, ex-speaker of the House of Representatives, has been put forward by the Beacon. The Worcester Spy also nominates Mr. Allen of Lowell. Anybody has a right to be nominated.

A DESPERATE attempt is being made by the city of Salem, to have the new road over Harmony Grove flats macadamized. This means practically that Peabody is to pay a portion of the expense of maintenance; a burden the town never agreed to assume and one that she is not authorized by the recent act of the legislature to assume.

The provision made for payment of construction was, that Peabody should pay one third and Salem and the County of Essex each one third. It was understood when that agreement was entered into, that the road should be of ordinary gravel composition, but when the hearing was given by the County Commissioners in the early part of June, for the purpose mainly of fixing the location and grade, the city of Salem was represented by Forest L. Evans Esq., who urged vigorously that the road should be macadamized. Charles A. Putnam, the civil engineer who prepared the plans, was interrogated at the hearing and it was learned that the difference in expense would amount to several thousand dollars.

Not content with able efforts of counsel, and probably thinking that the Commissioners were unlikely to impose such unnecessary burdens upon both Peabody and the County, the City Council adopted resolutions memorializing the commissioners to order the road macadamized when laid out. This proceeding, taken after the hearing had been closed, seems entirely out of order, and unwarranted. The commissioners have always maintained that they are a court, and to expect a court to reopen a case for the purpose of allowing one of the parties in interest to put in additional evidence or do anything else without the knowledge and consent of the other parties would be height of presumption.

The communication of the city council was received and placed on file with the other documents in the case, but we have no idea the commissioners will take any notice of the contents or allow their judgment to be influenced by it.

Chairman Goulding of the Selectmen appeared before the Commissioners on Monday to enter a protest against the proceedings of the Salem

Council, and as it is learned that their communication is on file it is not improbable a formal remonstrance may be filed by authority of the Selectmen after their next session.

ESSEX COUNTY.

The balloon ascension picnic came off last Thursday at Lakefield Park, Lynnfield, which looked charming, and it was one of the largest if not the largest ever held in town. It seemed as if most "everybody and his son were there." The balloon went up twice in the afternoon, but tenantless, and came down near the depot once, and at another time near the common. There were, it is said, a dozen households sold, and all seemed to enjoy the entertainment which was promised and well carried out by the Barnjum Brothers and Ellison. No accident (except to the ropes of the balloon) occurred to mar the pleasure of the day. The band was grand. Among the attractions at the picnic was the exhibition of a snake with two heads. The oldest couple in town enjoyed the picnic, as well as a small legion of babies.—Salem Gazette.

The graduates of the Beverly High School held a reception at Briscoe Hall Monday evening, with a concert, readings by Miss May Hussey of Salem, and dancing.

The Father Mathew Total Abstinence Society of Beverly has engaged the Pavilion, at the Willows, for parties on July 16, Aug. 4 and Sept. 1.

A carryall belonging to Mr. Dane of Hamilton, and containing six men, was wrecked on Sunday at the corner of Poplar and Conant streets, Beverly. The men belonged in Hamilton and escaped serious injury.

James Caskin died suddenly at his home in Tapleville on Monday morning from heart disease.

A strawberry Festival with a lawn tennis drill was held by the ladies of the First Church Danvers, Tuesday evening.

The new shoe factory at Danvers Centre will be 45 and 100 feet, two stories and a basement, and similar to the one erected in Middleton. It will be located on the southerly side of Centre street, near the First Church and will cost about $5000. The citizens will build it to induce E. & A. Mudge Shoe Co., to give up their idea of removing from town.

Tuesday afternoon an entertainment was given at the Willard Home School of Danvers, in aid of the summer Kindergarten. Some of the work of pupils of the Kindergarten at North End, Boston was exhibited.

Harpers circus while at Ipswich last Saturday night was a scene of confusion for a few minutes, when the seats collapsed. The rich, poor, high and low were "in one red burial blent," so to speak. But one person was seriously injured.

A movement is on foot to establish a large creamery in the White shoe factory in Putnamville, and it is stated that the scheme is backed by men of push and money who are favorably inclined toward the plan.

A valuable horse belonging to Frank B. Trask of Danvers dropped dead from heart disease, and expired without a struggle or moan.

Mr. and Mrs. David O. Nelson of Rowley have enjoyed their golden wedding. Mr. Nelson is a '49er and a war veteran.

While the circus procession was passing through Munroe street, Lynn, on Saturday, Mrs. Lucy E. Porter fell dead. She was in her 50th year.

The stable and car house of the Newburyport and Amesbury Street Railway at Newburyport, were burned on Saturday night. Loss $50,000; insured. The horses were saved; but 5 electric, 4 open and 5 box cars were destroyed. The fire is supposed to have been set by an electric wire.

The following Essex County postmasters of the third class are affected by the readjustment of salaries: Bradford changes from $1100 to $1200; Danvers, 1800 to 1800; Marblehead, 1700 to 1900; Methuen, 1300 to 1400; Rockport, 1000 to 1300, and Swampscott from $1100 to $1200.

The County Commissioners gave a hearing at the Beverly Town Hall last week on the petition of the selectmen of that town for the widening and straightening of Cabot street. A small number being present, it was adjourned one week.

The meeting called to arrange for a Fourth of July celebration did not come off as the patriotic citizens of Beverly failed to materialize.

The schooners Mary Elizabeth and Clare D. Sweet brought into Marblehead 25,000 mackerel each Monday morning. The Clare went to Gloucester while the Mary Elizabeth sold hers in Marblehead at a low figure.

Suicide and Murder in Lawrence.

On Tuesday morning a murder and suicide occurred at Lawrence, prompted by jealousy of the bitterest type.

For about two years John Rausch, a sober and industrious mill hand employed at the Brown & Ackroyd mills has kept company with Miss Maria B. Burckels, the 18 year old daughter of Ex-Councilman Burckels. On Monday evening he called at her home where some unpleasant words passed and he left her in a rage. The next morning he accosted the young lady in front of the Everett corporation boarding house, and after the exchange of very few words, drew a revolver and shot her through the heart. The victim of his mad jealousy fell lifeless without a murmur. Proceeding a short distance he raised the weapon and fired again piercing his own heart, and thus two young lives were brought to an untimely close. The remains were taken to an engine house near by and viewed by the medical examiner.

No cause is assigned for the cruel deed except jealousy. The young lady bore an exemplary character. The grief of the parents and brother at learning of the tragedy knew no bounds.

The murderer leaves a father, mother and sisters who are nearly heartbroken by the calamity.

The newspaper associates throughout New England, of Col. W. W. Clapp, for a quarter of a century connected with the Boston Journal, will learn with much regret that he is to retire from the control of that paper. He leaves behind a record of courtesy and faithful work performed that any man might envy. His successor, Stephen O'Meara, is entirely competent to keep the Journal on the successful lines along which Col. Clapp has developed it. The new editor of the Journal has long been known as one of the strong men of the new generation of Boston journalists, and his promotion has been honestly earned.—Exchange

Dyspepsia

Makes the lives of many people miserable, causing distress after eating, sour stomach, sick headache, heartburn, loss of appetite, a faint, "all gone" feeling, bad taste, coated tongue, and irregularity of the bowels. Dyspepsia does not get well of itself. It requires careful attention, and a remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which acts gently, yet efficiently. It tones the stomach, regulates the digestion, creates a good appetite, banishes headache, and refreshes the mind.

Headache

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. After eating I would have a faint or tired, all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. My trouble was aggravated by my business, painting. Last spring I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, which did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced."

GEORGE A. PAGE, Watertown, Mass.

Heart-burn

Miss Lucy E. Swett of Peabody gave the Salutatory and the following essays were read: Pictures by Miss Annie L. Prince of Wenham, Cheerfulness, by Miss Lois M. Burley of Everett; The Poets of Nature, by Miss Carrie L. Goodale of Tunbridge, Vt.; Requisites of a Teacher, by Miss Eva C. Jenkins of Lynn; Progress, by Miss Alice M. Winslow of Malden, and Cape Breton, by Miss Emma T. Laurence of Port Hastings C. B. Interspersed with the readings were the anthems, Mighty Jehovah, we praise thy name, Hear our Prayer and Praise to the Lord on high. Miss Mary Newman of Newbury wrote the class poem, "Mystery" and Miss Jennie L. Upham of Lynn was the valedictorian. The valedictory was prefaced by an essay "What the Normal School does for the prospective teacher." Diplomas were awarded by Prof. Aldrich, chairman Capen being unable to attend. The following graduates received diplomas.

Frances E. Bard, Salem; Rose S. Bent, North Reading; Sallie A. Bowen, Salem; Mabel C. Bryant, Gloucester; Lois M. Burley, Everett; Elizabeth M. Dodge, Newburyport; Carrie I. Normal School Graduation.

The State Normal School graduation at Salem on Tuesday closed the 74th semi-annual term. The exercises were held in Normal Hall in the afternoon, which was packed with spectators. The following opening hymn by Miss Lizzie Webber of Bedford was sung:

Heavenly Father, hear our pleading,
As before Thy throne we bow:
Thankful, trustful, we, Thy children,
Humbly ask thy blessing now.

Through our school life, Thou hast led us,
Day by day with loving care;
Grant thy blessing with our parting;
Answer thou our fervent prayer.

Shield us when our steps may wander,
By Thine all-protecting arm,
And when duty calls or danger,
Keep thou us from every harm.

Let us never fail in duty;
Guide us with a Father's love;
And, at last, in Thine own image
May we dwell in Heaven above.

Miss Lucy E. Swett of Peabody gave the Salutatory and the following essays were read: Pictures by Miss Annie L. Prince of Wenham, Cheerfulness, by Miss Lois M. Life's Mistake.

Somebody has condensed the mistakes of life, and arrived at the conclusion that there are fourteen of them. Most people would say, if they told the truth, that there was no limit to the mistakes of life; that they were like the drops in the ocean or the sands on the shore in number; but it is well to be accurate. Here, then, are fourteen great mistakes:—

It is a great mistake to set up your own standard of right and wrong, and judge people accordingly.

To measure the enjoyment of others by our own.

To expect uniformity of opinion in this world.

To look for judgment and experience in youth.

To endeavor to mould all dispositions alike.

Not to yield to immaterial trifles.

To look for perfection in our own actions.

To worry ourselves and others with what cannot be remedied.

Not to alleviate all that needs alleviation as far as lies in our power.

Not to make allowances for the infirmities of others.

To consider everything impossible that we cannot perform.

To believe only what our finite minds can grasp.

To expect to be able to understand everything.

The greatest of mistakes is to live for time alone, when any moment may launch us into eternity.—Boston Home Journal.

Chapter 1: Weak, tired, no appetite.

Chapter 2: Take Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Chapter 3: Strong, cheerful hungry

First Fly—Hi there, Bluebottle! Come over here. There's a keg of molasses here. Second Fly—Molasses be hanged! I know where there's a white and gold parlor that's never been touched.

A pair of boots Daniel Webster used to wear on his farm in Franklin, N. H., are preserved by the State Historical Society. They are a number eight, pegged. It is not a large size, but it would take a good deal of a man to fill Daniel Webster's boots, observes the Shoe and Leather Record.

Barnum's "Brick Bat."

As an illustration of one of Barnum's ingenious methods of attracting attention to his museum may be mentioned the incident of the "brick man." One day a man applied for admission to the museum, who was sitting in the ticket office. To the inquiry as to why he did not go to work, the mendicant replied that he would gladly do so at a dollar a day if he could find employment. Barnum gave him twenty-five cents to get his breakfast, and told him to return, and he would give him a dollar and a half a day and easy work. When the man returned, Barnum gave him five bricks, and told him to place one in front of the museum, another on the corner of Vesey street, a third at the corner of Fulton—on the St. Paul's church side—and the fourth on the east corner of Fulton. Returning then to the museum, he was to take up the first brick and replace it with the fifth, and then continue his rounds, putting down one brick and taking up the other each time.

He was enjoined to answer no questions and to seem not to hear, and that at the end of each three-quarters of an hour he was to pass into the museum, look around at the curiosities for fifteen minutes and then resume his rounds with the bricks. Barnum says that the man played his part to perfection, and his eccentric conduct caused a great crowd to gather about the museum.

Many of these, of course, went into the museum to seek some explanation as to the purpose of the "brick man." This was kept up for several days, until the police requested his withdrawal, because such crowds lingered about the museum that traffic was interrupted.—J. G. Speed in Harper's Weekly.

Importance of Breathing Properly.

In all the various systems of physical culture now in vogue the greatest importance is attached to taking the breath properly. The breathing should be slow and deep, six breaths a minute being a safe average. There is still a difference of opinion in regard to the relative value of abdominal and chest breathing, and each system has its advantages. One of the best exercises for increasing the capacity of the lungs is to draw a full breath very slowly and through the nose. Keep the lungs inflated as long as possible, and then expel the air suddenly through the mouth, and repeat the process.

Care should be taken not to try to make the period of holding the breath too long at the start; the more gradually the power of doing this is attained the better will be the permanent results. There are many breathing exercises, and one of the best is the taking of a deep breath and swinging the arms, first one, then the other, and finally both, while the breath is inhaled. Excessive practice of any system should be avoided, and the golden rule of taking moderate and judicious exercise should be observed.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

An Outfit for Traveling.

A woman who has traveled a great deal abroad says: "A steamer trunk ought to hold all of one's baggage for a summer trip to Europe. In addition to a warm, loose flannel wrapper for cabin use and half a dozen changes of linen, all that is really required is a close fitting traveling suit of dark cloth or serge with toque to match sitting firmly on the head in case of a stiff breeze while upon the deck, while some prefer the less dressy worsted or velvet hood to protect the ears and throat; a short wrap of warm material, a long mackintosh to envelop the form during stormy weather, stout shoes and a light plaid to throw over the knees, either when seated upon the deck of a steamer or traveling around in an open carriage upon land."

"With this necessary outfit and a light summer silk for the warmer days of sight seeing, one is well equipped for the longest journey, and may travel at ease free from the anxiety attendant upon the possession of the usual list of trunks carried by most novices while upon a journey."—Boston Transcript.

The Vanderbilt System and Its Managers.

More than 7,000 miles of railroad are absolutely controlled and operated by the Vanderbilt family. The roads which are advertised as the "Vanderbilt system" are the New York Central and Hudson River, the Michigan Central, the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern, the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis, the West Shore, and the New York, Chicago and St. Louis. These six roads with their leased lines and the Rome, Watertown and Ogdensburg, which has been purchased by the Vanderbilts, have 7,300 miles of line and represent a capital stock of more than $150,000,000. Their bonded indebtedness will aggregate nearly $300,000,000. These roads are under the absolute control and personal direction of Cornelius Vanderbilt. As his principal aids in managing this property Cornelius Vanderbilt has surrounded himself with four brainy men. They are Chauncey M. Depew, John Newell, Henry B. Ledyard and Melville E. Ingalls.—Chicago Herald.

A Daughter of a Duchess.

The young daughter of the Duke and Duchess of Connaught was born on St. Patrick's Day, and rejoices in the name of Victoria Patricia, so called in honor of her grandma and that Irish saint. An American lady living in London, and who seems to know a good deal about English royalty, says the little girl is a real beauty, and that her cousins, of whom there is a troop, call her "Patsy!" Whether this will render the name popular in aristocratic circles remains to be seen, but Patricia in itself is a lovely mouthful and a decided improvement on Gladys and Gwendoline, which are as common as Edith and Mabel were ten years ago.—London Letter.

Ten Times Better.

FASHION NOTES.

Portfolios of dark green morocco are overlaid with a covering of pierced silver.

Corselets of serpentine stripes of black velvet are pretty on white and pale gray gowns.

Sleeves are drooping now at the shoulders, and have a band of ribbon the entire length of the seam.

The "swallow's tail" is the new shape in trains, cut on the bias and forming a point in the middle of the back.

Three to five rows of large jet beads or of flat nail heads are draped across the waist line on the vests of soft silk or of crepe de Chine.

A brooch was in imitation of grapes, the stem and tendrils of gold, set with diamonds, and the fruit made of chalcidony.

The reign of the open jackets has popularized all manner of lace collar-ettes and fichus, made of lace, silk, muslin and crepe de Chine.

By way of variety, horseshoe pins are now made of four or five smaller ones set together and ornamented with either turquois or pearls.

Boxes of sandalwood, mounted in silver and furnished with trays, afford suitable cases in which to keep a collection of souvenir spoons.

White dotted lawns have designs of fruits and leaves, one especially gay having clusters of red cherries with their dark green leaves.

Aluminum rings are now finding their way into the best jewelry shops. One seen was chased and held a topaz set between two garnets.

Cleopatra's handkerchief is another innovation by Sara Bernhardt, made of ten inches of fine batiste hemstitched and wet with lily of the Nile.

Cream white guipure studded with jet is the artistic lace trimming for summer dresses of crepon, crepe de Chine, shot taffetas and India silks.

Large wafers, pastilles, or great disks of dark velvet form other borders of skirts and the trimming of the sleeves and bodices of very light gowns.

New card-cases out for summer use are in white kid, with open work silver and gold corners and a medallion in the centre, containing an enamelled picture.

A bracelet of East India make, in yellow gold, is formed of a number of fine chains, the clasp being elaborately chased and ornamented with costly jewels.

The Cleopatra blouse, loose fronted, slightly draped across with high flaring collar, lined with plaited frills, is most becoming to thin middle-aged women.

The newest black lace gowns are of dotted net of light quality, like that used for veils, made over rich, royal ribbed silk, pearl colored, pale gray, or stem green.

Gowns of black grenadine rival those of lace so long in favor. The square meshed plain grenadine is most used. Then dotted serpentine striped or plaided are all fashionable.

One of the novelties in fancy goods is a small bell, mounted on an earthenware pedestal designed for the purpose. The use of earthenware instead of wood gives a much louder and clearer metallic tone.

Silk gloves matching gowns, hose and shoes in color are the latest caprice for evening as well as day wear, and are imported to all the delicate tints. Black silk gloves are stitched with a color for day wear.

Wide jacket fronts of lace—either white guipure or the black, corded lace dotted with jet—fall straight from the collar below the pointed belt. These are pretty for any of the summer silks, crepes, or crepons.

Glove-buttoners continue to be made of gold sterling or plate, but shoe-hooks are preferred in hard wood, handsomely carved. Hooks of Japanese bronze as long as your arm are admired for their barbaric beauty.

The newest foulards have serpentine stripes, geometrical designs, dots forming chevrons, large spots, and oval rings, through the large flower patterns and the modest small figures, spots and rings are still chosen by many.

REV. FRANCIS E. CLARK, D. D.

The founder of the Christian Endeavor movement, Rev. F. E. Clark, was born at Almyer, Quebec, September 12, 1851. His parents, who were New England people, were of purely Yankee stock. After his preliminary education was finished he entered Dartmouth College, from which he graduated with high honors in 1873. Thereupon he took the regular theological course at Andover. He first entered upon his duties as pastor of the Williston Church at Portland, Me. It was here that the foundation of the greatest movement of modern times for the training of young people for active Christian work was laid. The society of which Rev. Clark is founder is called "Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor." It embraces one-sixtieth of the population of the United States, comprising in all 155,000 societies. Confession of Christ and service for His Kingdom is what every member is required to look forward to, when he or she signs the pledge. The first society was formed Feb. 2, '81, at Portland, Me. This proving a complete success, others soon followed.

A FATAL MISTAKE.

Physicians make no more fatal mistake than when they inform patients that nervous heart troubles come from the stomach and are of little consequence. Dr. Franklin Miles, the noted Indiana specialist, has proven the contrary in his new book on "Heart Disease" which may be had free at Wm. T. Lee's who guarantees and recommends Dr. Miles' unequalled New Heart Cure, which has the largest sale of any heart remedy in the world. It cures nervous and organic heart disease, short breath, fluttering, pain or tenderness in the side, arm or shoulder, irregular pulse, fainting, smothering, dropsy, etc. His Restorative Nervine cures headache, fits, etc.

LITERARY NOTES.

There is a magnificent picture in Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper this week of the proposed Casino at the World's Columbian Exposition in Chicago. This bit of Venice, reproduced on the shore of Lake Michigan, is to be a unique and beautiful feature of the great fair. The front page vividly portrays the scene of a Europe-bound steamer at the moment of departure. "The Alaska Expedition," "Lassoing a Calf for Branding," and amateur photographs offer subjects for other illustrations. The last of Professor Totten's articles on "The Millennium—What It Will Be Like When It Comes," is contained in this number. Printed in both German and English. Price ten cents.

In the current number of the North American Review, "Mary E. Wilkins has given us the pathos of humblest New England; Charles Egbert Craddock has made known to us the secrets of the Tennessee mountains; Rudyard Kipling has carried us to India; and now, at last, here is the story-teller of farm life in those western prairies, among which Hamlin Garland grew up, to which he goes back, now and again, with the child's heart, the man's insight. "Main-Travelled Roads" is a bold departure from the highway of ordinary fiction. Like Henrik Ibsen, Hamlin Garland tells his story as he sees it, and impartial as fate offers no hint as to the puzzle thus presented. He has the supreme art not to pronounce sentence on the men and women he has created. "Main-Travelled Roads" is a book you cannot afford to pass by."

The New England Magazine for July contains the following: The State of Maine, Hon Nelson Dingley, Jr.; The Municipal Threat in National Politics, John Coleman Adams; Her in All Things, Phillip Bourke Marston; Master Shakespeare's Star, Elizabeth B. Walling; Small and Great, P. H. Savage; The Natural Bridge of Virginia, Katherine Loomis Parsons; The Daisies, C. Gordon Rogers; The City of the Dead, Laurens Maynard; The Armistice Anniversaries, Charles Washington Coleman; A Brief for Continental Unity, Walter Blackburn Hart; Phoenixville's Poet, Edward W. Bryant; The Battle at High Bridge, Edward T. Bouve; Schlemann's Discoveries in Hellas, J. L. Ewell; On Framing and Hanging Pictures, Samuel L. Gerry; The Top Drawer in The High Chest, Alice Morse Earle; Emerson's Views on Reform, Wm. M. Salter; Old Lun The Major, M. V. Moore; Village Farms in The Western Reserve, Hosea Paul; June and July Sketches, Catherine Thayer; Editor's Table; Omnibus.

The twenty-sixth volume of the Magazine of American History opens with an exceedingly bright and beautiful July number. The frontispiece of the current issue is an admirable portrait of Sir William Dawson, the Canadian geologist and educator of world-wide fame. The editor contributes the leading article giving a graphic account of the history and work of "The Royal Society of Canada," of which Sir William was the first president, with portraits, among its pertinent illustrations, of the Marquis of Lorne who founded it and of Lord Stanley, its present honorary president and patron. "The Fairy Isle of Mackinac," Professor William C. Richards. "The Past and the Future of Mexico" follows, by Chas. Howard Shinn; and an able and scholarly study by the Hon. William L. Scruggs, our minister to Venezuela, of "The Monroe Doctrine." Then an informing sketch of "The State of Franklin," by Lawrence F. Bower; "The Necessity of Recurring to Fundamental Principles," by Franklin A. Becher; "Evolution of Names," by Thomas Meredith Maxwell; "Governor Blacksnake," by Hon. Charles Aldrich; the "Genesis of the United States," by Alexander Brown; "John Adams as a Schoolmaster," by Elizabeth Porter Gould; "Henry Ward Beecher's District School."

A Safe with 160,000 Combinations.

A safe has been devised which is said to be proof against any unauthorized opener, even if he be provided with the proper key. The keyhole cover is made with a catch inside which engages with mechanism within the door and is held fast. This mechanism connects with the pointers of four dials, and the cover cannot be removed to allow the door to be opened until the pointers have been set at the figures of a predetermined cipher. When the cipher is indicated the handle on the right is turned and the keyhole thus uncovered. Should the cipher be forgotten the cover can be cut open, and a duplicate, supplied with the safe, substituted. The safe is fire-proof, and admits of 160,000 cipher combinations.—New York Journal.

Sugar Season in Cuba.

The sugar grinding season is now nearing its end over the whole island. The yield this year is generally regarded as satisfactory, especially at Cienfuegos, where the crop is said to be the largest ever taken off in that district.

The Havana Report on an article on tobacco trade says:—"Intelligence has been received all the Vuelta Abajo and Partido districts have been visited by the long desired rains. Consequently heavier supplies of really suitable tobacco may soon be expected in the Havana market."

The Governor General has requested that the operations of the new tariff, recently adopted by the Spanish government to be enforced on the island of Cuba be postponed for three months.

Cause of Summer Complaints.

The direct cause of pain and looseness of the bowels, is an irritation of the mucous membrane of the same, sufficient to produce excessive peristaltic or worm-like motion in the interior of the bowels, by which means the matter in the bowels is naturally carried through them. This excessive irritation causes more than a natural peristaltic action, and the partially digested food matter is kept constantly passing along and evacuated freely. This is called a diarrhea; where the irritation is enough to cause bleeding, we have dysentery. Indirect causes of diarrhea, by which an irritation is started are intestinal dyspepsia, overeating, unripe or overripe fruit, tainted meats, or oysters, etc.; torpor of liver, by which not enough bile is secreted; excessive flow of bile, etc. TREATMENT. Thoroughly evacuate the bowels with say, Parson's Pills, they are among the best to get rid of all irritating matter. Then take Johnson's Anodyne Liniment in teaspoonful doses diluted with water every four hours, and often if the case is severe. In cases of Asiatic cholera, one teaspoonful should be given every half-hour. Thousands of people remember the year 1849, when that worst known epidemic disease spread over this country. Johnson's Anodyne Liniment at that time was but little known outside of the state of Maine. In Bangor, Maine, the home of old Dr. Johnson, the Cholera got a firm hold—people dying in that small town at the rate of "thirty-six in one day. Many old citizens of that place look back upon that wholesale death scene even at this late day, and shudder at the pangs it cost. Johnson's Anodyne Liniment is now in its full vigor, and they feel that with it at hand cholera cannot again devastate their fair city as in 1849. But for its use at that time by its friends, many would not now live to spread the joyful news that any case of diarrhea, dysentery, cholera morbus, cholera, or kindred diseases, if taken in season, can be cured by Johnson's Anodyne Liniment. It never yet failed. No matter how well you know this medicine it will pay you to send to I. S. Johnson & Co., Boston, Mass., for a pamphlet, free, just to learn how to use the liniment economically. A teaspoonful properly used will often do more good than a half-bottle as some people use it.

Have You a Family?

A Father

of a family is inclined to think the wear and tear on furniture and carpets is enormous. The children don't mind it, because they don't appreciate the expense. But you do, and every dollar you pay over and above OUR PRICES is a loss.

We are in the market to supply the best goods at the lowest prices, and it only costs you the price of a postal card or a stamp to get our prices. Investing a cent to save a dollar.

Do It To-day.

A Mother

should take into account the wear and tear of the children. In buying a Lounge, or a Bedstead, or a Carpet, why not buy one that will stand the racket? "It Is Always So."

Across the meadow with clover sweet, I wandered one evening with weary feet, For my heart was heavy with untold woe, For everything seemed to go wrong, you know. 'Twas one of those days, whose cares and strife, Quite overshadow the good in life.

So, lone and sad, 'neath the twilight stars, I wandered down to the pasture bars. To the pasture bars 'neath the hillside steep, Where patiently waited a flock of sheep. For the happy boy with whistle and shout, Who was even now coming to turn them out.

"Good evening!" said he with boyish grace, And a smile lit up his handsome face. He let down the bars; we both stepped back, And I said, "You have more white sheep than black."

"Why, yes," he replied, "and didn't you know?"

More white than black: why, 'tis always so."

He soon passed on with his flock round the hill,

But down on the pasture I lingered still, Pondering well on the words of the lad,

"More white than black," more good than bad,

More joy than sorrow, more bliss than woe; "More white than black," and "tis always so."

And since that hour, when troubles rife, Gather, and threaten to shroud my life—

Or I see some soul on the downward track—I cry, there are more white sheep than black.

And I thank my God, that I learned to know The blessed fact, it is always so.

—Good Housekeeping.

THE FARM AND GARDEN.

The most profitable dairy cow is the one that helps you to make the most butter in the winter. Butter sells quicker then, brings more, and leaves a better margin of profit.

In dipping sheep to get rid of the ticks, choose a mild time and keep the sheep close sheltered until thoroughly dried. Exposure to cold winds while wet may be quite as disastrous as to leave them to the mercy of the ticks.

While the United States continues to import, as it has done during the past 10 years, an annual average of nearly 90,000,000 pounds of wool, there is yet ample room for the sheep grower; and with the increasing demand for mutton for food, a great flock should be on every farm.

In setting plants, such as cabbage, tomato and tobacco plants, it will be found of advantage to trim away the larger lower leaves. If these are left on they will almost always die back. It is better to trim them off, leaving only the centre. The plant will be more apt to live, and will make a more vigorous growth.

Our forests should be preserved, or we will eventually be confronted with a timber famine. We must have forest laws to effect this, and these laws must be enforced. The basis of the laws should be that for every mature tree cut another growing tree must be provided to take its place. This would be practical forestry.

Many experienced and successful sheep owners declare that the wool alone will pay for the keep of the sheep, and that the money derived from the sales of lambs and mutton should be clear gain. Upon such a basis there would seem to be little doubt that the profit from them must be greater than from any other class of stock.

Farmers should encourage the establishment of canning factories near at hand, even if they have to invest somewhat in the stock in order to get them started. There is profit in growing fruit and vegetables when there is a market close at hand. Co-operative establishments, owned by the men who are to grow the products, should pay well if properly managed.

Continued cropping of the same land with tobacco can only be made profitable by using every effort to maintain a high condition of fertility in the soil. The crop is a gross feeder, and will quickly exhaust good land. While it yields a high value per acre upon good land, being an expensive crop to cultivate—it will not repay the labor that must be expended upon it.

If you are in doubt as to the expediency of flat or level cultivation for potatoes, as against the old system of hilling up, try three or four rows under each method in adjacent plots, and watch the result carefully. If soil and other conditions are the same, there is little doubt that the level rows will give the largest yield. If the season should be dry the effect of such system of cultivation will be much more apparent, however, than it would be in a wet year.

No man can have a thrifty herd of cattle, of his own raising, unless he begins at the beginning and treats his calves well. Too often they are turned out at an early age to shift for themselves. Instead of this they should have as good quarters, as good feed and as good care as any stock upon the farm. A good herd which has been bred and grown upon the farm is the most satisfactory of any, and a farmer who intends to make stock a permanent branch of his business should look out well for the calves.

It would be a good thing for the livestock interests of the country if all our breeders would follow the example set by Senator Palmer. He has instructed the manager of his extensive breeding farm to castrate all inferior colts, and to sell all fillies below the standard of work horse prices, without certificate of registration or means of identification.

There are four ways of treating perennial weeds with the plow, writes a correspondent in the Country Gentleman, who says: One is to throw them up with the plow within good reach of the surface, thus giving them a bed of fresh mellow earth to grow in. This method is very commonly adopted by farmers, and of course always fails of the intended purpose. Many persons who have been told that plowing is a good way to kill Canada thistles have tried it on them and extended their growth. Some try to plow them entirely under, and actually bury nearly all, but leave enough above ground to continue their full possession of the land. This is the second method I refer to. A third method is to plow just enough to break the roots into a hundred pieces, and to give them all a good start. I have seen it tried on quack and other weeds. The process is improved, but rendered very laborious and long continued by raking and carting off all these pieces, and if continued long enough and sufficiently thorough sometimes succeeds. The fourth and effectual method is to smother the weeds to death by plowing under deep enough to place every plant beyond the reach of air and light. They will not live many months if no single plant is allowed in all this time to breathe. I have found no difficulty in killing Canada thistles, milkweeds and quack in a single season—say in four or five months in this way. How long it may be necessary with wild onions I have not tried. A dense growth of clover and grass helps to smother weeds, and greatly checks without actually killing the patch.

REQUIREMENTS OF THE CELERY PLANT.

For growing celery, the New York World says the main requisite is a good soil—one deep and mellow enough to produce a fair crop of corn. Gardeners often select the land cleared from an earlier crop that has been well fed with fertilizers. Celery may be planted on level ground if the soil is rich and mellow. When the soil needs some fertilizer a good plan is to open furrows with a plow about four feet apart, and fill in with fine, well rooted yard manure or compost.

In the northern states gardeners begin setting out celery plants in July, and for winter use in August. The plants set in July will be ready to be earthed up in September. Numbered with good varieties are the White Plume, Golden Self Blanching, Giant Pascal, Kalamazoo, Boston market, etc.

FRAMING AND TRIMMING TOMATOES.

At the Kentucky station a trial was made with a dozen plants, each of a few well known varieties of tomatoes, to test the effect of different modes of trimming and framing. The trimming consisted simply in cutting off five or six of the lower branches at blooming time. It was found that the vines that were trimmed and framed produced the largest and soundest fruit. Vines that were trimmed and left lying on the ground produced fine fruit in size, but unsound. Vines that were not trimmed and left lying on the ground produced an abundance of fruit of small size and unsound vines. Vines that were framed and not trimmed produced an abundance of sound fruit, but small.

BIRDS AS INSECT DESTROYERS.

At a recent meeting of the Massachusetts Horticultural society the production of our native birds was the subject of an essay, followed by a general discussion. It was said that no intelligent observer can deny the usefulness of our native birds in destroying insects. Unmolested by the birds these would rapidly multiply, and their depredations would increase in proportion.

During the springtime many of the birds live wholly on insects, some taking them on the wing, others in the larvae or chrysalis state and many more as they appear in the morning as worms, grubs, borers, etc.

The mistaken idea prevails with many that some of our familiar birds do more harm by eating small fruits than they do good by destroying insects. This prejudice exists against the robin and many other insect eating birds. And yet these birds are obliged to subsist principally upon canker worms, some kinds of caterpillars and bugs. Among the enemies of the small insect eating birds the common crow was mentioned as doing more damage by destroying the eggs and young of these useful species than he did good by destroying the insects he devours. Something should be speedily done to prevent the wholesale destruction of our useful species of birds before they become extinct.

LASTING GATE POSTS.

"Some years ago," writes a Virginia farmer to Southern Planter, "a man took up some gate posts which had been in the ground seventy years, and he said they were perfectly sound. They were common pine posts, and were skinned in the spring while standing, and left so until the turpentine had come out and formed a complete cement, and were then cut and fixed. The tops of such posts will have to be covered to protect them from the action of the weather."

DANA'S IS GUARANTEED TO CURE.

Marvels of Brussels.

The finest of all lace is Brussels. Belgium is the lacemakers' chosen home. One-fortieth of the whole population is engaged in it. The government supports 900 lace schools, to which children are sent as young as five years. By the time they are ten they are self supporting. Brussels is a pillow lace. Indeed, Barbara Littman, the inventor of pillow lace, lived and died there.

The pattern, drawn upon parchment, is fixed firmly to the pillow, pins are stuck along the outlines, and to them the lace is woven by crossing and twisting the threads, each of which ends in a bobbin. Lace two inches wide requires 200 or 300 bobbins. A piece six inches has sometimes as many as a thousand. The thread is hand spun from the best Brabant flax, in damp, dark cellars, whose one ray of light falls on the spinner's hand.

Naturally spinning is very unhealthy, and experts get high wages. The best yarn from a single pound of flax fetches over $3,000. For filling flowers and leaves fine soft cotton is used. Grounds, too, are often made of it. Elaborate patterns are made in sections, and joined together by the most skillful workers of all. As the lace is never washed before it is sold, the most exquisite neatness is requisite in everything connected with it.

Still, as months are consumed in making very handsome pieces, the work turns dingy in spite of the lace worker's best efforts. To remedy that it is sometimes dusted with white lead in powder, and turns dark at contact with gas or sulphur in a way to exasperate the wearer.—New York Herald.

Why the Mafia Exists in Italy.

The origin of the Camorra and Mafia murder leagues ceases to puzzle travelers who have visited the rural districts of southern Sicily. Nearly all the real estate of the coast plain from Syracuse to Cape Bianco is in the hands of a few aristocrats, who have deprived their tenants of their panes as well as of their circenses, of the right to hunt, to fish, to train fighting cocks, without a special license, as well as of the more urgent necessities of life. The streets of the inland villages generally resemble the gullies of a parched out mountain river, and the houses are mere mud piles, roofed with flat stones and wattles of broom-corn, and surrounded by rubbish heaps, where many curs and sore eyed children compete for scraps of animal refuse.

Laborers, returning from a day's hard work, sit down to a meal of maize paste and salad, washed down with the water of the slimy village cistern. The profits of little truck farms barely satisfy the demands of the tithe collector, and indignation meetings are promptly suppressed, but midnight conventicles are less easy to prevent, and the starving villager would as soon defile the statue of Garibaldi as to betray a Capo Mafia who has befriended him at the expense of an oppressive landlord.—Felix L. Oswald in Philadelphia Times.

A New Use for Matches.

I watched a train hand stagger through the coach with eyes closed and a tearful face—a case of cinder. He met a companion, who instantly felt in his vest pocket, poised himself, made one motion, and the suffering brakeman at once went back to his post relieved. "How did you remove that cinder?" I asked. "With a match," he replied. Producing one, he split it to a point with his thumb nail. "This looks like a harsh way to treat so tender an organ," said he, "but it is entirely safe. Turning back the eyelid, the speck only needs to be touched by some dry substance—in this case the match—to adhere to it. We have to help one another so a dozen times a day." "But why not wait until stopping?" I inquired. "Too busy then. Besides, there is no need. It is as easy on a train in motion as on the ground when one is accustomed to it. After raising the arm for the operation, one needs to get the swing of the train. This car runs smoothly, so I did quick work."—Springfield Homestead.
